Among the unseparated members of a joint Hindu family, possessed of ancestral property by means of which the science, whose gains are in question might itself have been acquired [Bai Manchha v. Nirodamdas Kashidas (4)], the presumption, even in the case of such special gains, is that the acquisitions of all members are partible, until the contrary is proved. This was first decided in Luximon Row Nadasew v. Mullar Row Bajee (11). Observations have since been made on the slender evidence which connected Luximon's position as Prime Minister to the Peishwa with the joint family property, either through his education or otherwise, but the rule there laid down as to the presumption, though for a time not always acquiesced in, is now unquestionable and binds their Lordships. It is true that a distinction may be drawn between a presumption in favour of partibility, which is a legal attribute of the gains in question, and a presumption in favour of detriment to the patrimony involved in acquiring the specialised learning, the use of which has produced the gain, which is a question of fact; but, in their Lordships' opinion, if it is in general incumbent upon the joint family member to prove that his case is an exception to the prevailing rule of partibility, it is also incumbent upon him to prove the particular facts which are needed to establish the exception. For this there is the authority of the decision in Durvasula Gangadharulu v. Durvasula Narasimmaiah (12) and in Dhunookdharee Lall v. Gunput Lall (3). It must accordingly be taken that the whole burden of proof was on Mr. Gokal Chand. If he desired to give evidence to show that his specialised education in England was obtained by the "presents of a friend," the charitable benefactions or the educational foundations of strangers, or by his own self-taught efforts, this should have been done by him at the trial. If, as their Lordships hold, his official position cannot be taken out of the area of partibility, it must now be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that his gains, not being in their nature incapable of being family acquisitions, are partible.

Then, can it be said that the gains, which are partible, are such as result only directly from the use of joint family funds, and that emoluments, which are the consideration for the personal services of an official selected for his special personal qualifications, result remotely only and too remotely from any family outlay? Not only is no authority forthcoming for the first part of this contention, but the contrary has been continuously assumed in all the cases which turn on "gains of science." The point of all of them is, that persons qualified for earning money by specialised education, - enjoyed to the detriment of family funds, become, as it were, a continuing investment for the family benefit. No decision attempts to distinguish between the personal and the family elements in the ultimate gains; it would probably be impracticable to do so. There is equally little ground for contending that partibility depends on causa proxima, or is negatived by the intervention of the personal element of the individual co-parcener's character. It is true that in the very learned judgment of Mr. Collett in Ohalakonda's case (2) he expresses the view, that logically the rule should have regard to the use of family property in acquiring the partible gains themselves "during and for the purposes of the acquisition," and not to its use in acquiring the science by means of which they are gained, and he cites Sir T. Strange's opinion that, in order to make the gains in question partible, the common fund must have been directly instrumental in procuring them. There is also an allusion in Lakshman Mayaram v. Jamnabai (7) to "the branch of science 'which is the immediate source of the gain,'" a passage, however, intended to distinguish between elementary and specialised education, and not between the direct and indirect fruits of the latter. This view was, however, overruled on appeal in Ohalakonda's case (2) and has never been re-established. For fifty years and more, the current of authority has run the other way, and, in any case, in their Lordships' opinion, it is now too late to change it.

It is true that, partly in the hands of the commentators and partly under the decision of the Courts, changes may be traced in the rules laid down with regard to gains of science, and these changes have been in the direction of narrowing the category of partible gains. From maintenance out of family funds during the period of education, the basis of partibility changed to the receipt of the education itself at the family expense, and then education generally was narrowed to specialised education, which is now the basis. No corresponding change, however, is to be traced upon the question, what is science? in the sense in which the text of the Mitakshara uses the term. On the contrary, while the principle has remained the same, the application of it has tended to widen, as changing times have brought up fresh instances of callings, to which special science and not the native wit of man is the means of entrance. It may be difficult to see now why the anomaly should have arisen, by which the gains of a man's own labour or of his own bargains are impartible, because they are the fruits of his own effort, while the gains of his science are partible, though they are the fruits of his effort too. In each case the member of the joint family is indebted to the family funds for something; in the former for the nurture, which has made him strong to labour, in the latter for the professional education in addition, which has made him also skilled in art. Conversely, the dail co-parcener, who learns but turns his learning to poor account, must share his gains such as they are, while his brother, who learns without teaching and acquires professional skill by intuition only, keeps his greater gains for himself. All that can be said is that the rule, if really anomalous, is too old and well-settled to be altered now.

Their Lordships are also fully alive to the incongruity, more striking perhaps to Western than to Indian minds, of applying to such an occupation as Mr. Gokal Chand's an ancient rule, which had its origin in a state of society possibly simpler than and certainly different from the state of society existing in the present day, but this anomaly proceeds largely from the accidental habit of relying on mere analogy in the application of legal rules instead of deducing the application from a logical apprehension of the principle as the best Eastern thinkers do. Be this as it may, they conceive it to be of the highest importance that no variations or uncertainties should be introduced into the established and widely recognised laws, which govern an ancient Eastern civilisation, and least of all in matters affecting family rights and duties connected with ancestral customs and religious convictions.

The appellant's liability is, of course, a liability in respect of his share in the family property, including therein such of his own earnings as are partible under the rules above explained. Questions that may arise in regard to property, not the gains of science or partible on any ground, and also in regard to the statutory rules, which restrict the alienability of an official's emoluments, may properly be the subject of decision in execution proceedings if they arise. Their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal fails and should be dismissed, and they will humbly tender this advice to His Majesty.

JUDGMENT.

ROSS, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They brought a suit against the defendant for money said to have been borrowed by the defendant's father under sarkhats. Subsequently, in 1971 Sambat, a hundi for Rs. 4,400 was executed by the defendant's father but was not paid after the due date of payment had expired. They, therefore, sued claiming Rs. 5,016-11-6 and the defence was that the hundi was not genuine and that no money was borrowed.

The learned Subordinate Judge, although holding on the merits of the case that the debt had been incurred, dismissed the suit because of the defects in the hundi itself. One of the plaintiffs supported the claim by his own evidence saying that the debt originally incurred was, sums of Rs. 1,550 and Rs. 1,500, which were borrowed under two sarkhats, Exhibits 1 and 2. These were renewed by Exhibits 3 and 4 and finally the hundi in suit acknowledged the total liability which had then amounted to Rs. 4,400.

On behalf of the respondent the evidence of witnesses Nos. 3 and 4 was attacked on the ground that these witnesses were dependant upon the plaintiffs and were chance witnesses and gave no reasonable explanation of their presence at the transaction to which they deposed. The evidence of these two witnesses does not appear to be of any particular value; but, on the other hand, nothing has been said against witness No. 5 who deposed that he saw the defendant's father write the hundi with his own hand. The plaintiffs' account-books referred to this hundi transaction and the defendant has given no real rebutting evidence. His own account-books have not been produced, nor has any writing of the defendant's father been shown to throw any doubt upon the genuineness of the hundi. It must, therefore, be held on the evidence, in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge, that the debt was incurred and that the money claimed in suit is due.

The question then is, whether there is any good reason why the plaintiffs should not get a decree. The reason which has been given by the Subordinate Judge is that the hundi has not been stamped according to law. It is written on two stamp-papers each bearing a stamp of Rs. 2-4-0 instead of on a single stamp paper of Rs. 4-8-0 and the defect is that the document is embodied on one of these papers only while the other, which is pasted on it, has no writing on its face but only an acceptance on the back. I am not prepared to differ from the view of the Subordinate Judge that an instrument executed in this way does not comply with the provisions of section 13 of the Stamp Act. The document may, therefore, not be available as a hundi, but I see no reason why it should not be used as an acknowledgment of the existing debt.

It is objected that the suit is not framed in this way but is framed as a suit on the hundi, and if the hundi itself is defective the claim must fail. But the plaint does refer to the monetary transactions under the sar-khats and, fairly construed, it seems to me to be a claim for money evidenced by the hundi; whether the hundi can be referred to by the Court as a negotiable instrument or merely as an acknowledgment of an existing debt does not appear to be a matter of much material importance.

The principle of the case of Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (1) is clearly applicable to the facts of the present case. Garth, C. J., there said: "When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold, or for money lent, or for any other claim, and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he has not endorsed or lost or parted with the bill or note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person." There is nothing in the present case to bring the facts within the exception here laid down and, in my opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed on the original consideration. The liability for which was acknowledged in the document described as a hundi. The result is that the appeal must be decreed with costs and the suit decreed with costs.

Adverse possession—Waste land—Deposit of earth followed by other acts, whether amounts to dispossession—Suit for possession—Limitation.

In excavating a tank A. deposited the earth on a strip of waste land belonging to B., he also removed some trees standing thereon and planted others of more value. In a suit by B. brought more than 12 years afterwards to recover possession it was found that the earth was deposited by A. with the intention of taking possession of the strip of waste land:

Held, that A's acts amounted to a dispossession of B., and B's suit, having been brought more than 12 years afterwards, was barred by limitation. [p. 387, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 20th April 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, first Court, at Jangipur, dated the 19th of March 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Urukram Das Chackerbutty), for the Appellant:—The disputed land admittedly belonged to the appellant. It abutted on a tank belonging to the respondent. The finding is that, more than twelve years before suit, earth was deposited on the land of the appellant during the re-excavation of the defendant's tank. The land in suit is a piece of waste land. My submission is that mere deposit of earth by the defendant upon the waste land of my client does not necessarily amount to dispossession. Such a deposit of earth is only an act of trespass but cannot amount to dispossession. This finding of dispossession is, therefore, wholly insufficient and cannot justify the conclusion that my client's suit was barred by limitation.

Babu Brojolah Chakravarty (with him Babu Bodhisatya Sen), was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought for recovery of possession on establishment of title to a piece of land measuring 1 bigha in area. It appears that

RAM CHOWDHRY v. TILAK CHOWDHRY.

This 1 bigha was formerly a strip of land abutting on a tank belonging to the defendant on its north and east banks. It has been found by the Court of first appeal that this strip of land is within the plaintiff's Mauza, but it has next come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation, and has, therefore, dismissed the suit. In this appeal it is contended before us by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the finding arrived at by the learned District Judge is insufficient and he bases his contention on the fact that, when in possession of the plaintiff, this land was lying waste. In the plaint the allegation of the plaintiff was in substance that the defendant by re excavating the tank and by depositing upon the land in suit the earth removed from the tank had dispossessed him. The question then, in substance, was when did this re excavation and this deposit take place. Plaintiff's witnesses tried to prove that the re excavation and deposit had occurred nine or ten years before suit, but, some of the plaintiff's own witnesses contradicted this allegation, and both the Courts below have found that the re excavation and deposit of earth upon the plaintiff's land occurred some fifteen years before suit. It is suggested before us that mere deposit of earth upon a person's land does not necessarily amount to dispossession, it may be a mere act of trespass, but the finding is that the earth was deposited with the intention of taking possession of this strip of land, and the throwing of earth upon the land was followed by the removal of tal trees and the planting of valuable trees on the same. We think, having regard to the case on which the parties went to trial, the finding arrived at is sufficient. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

In a suit on a mortgage it was proved that the mortgage had been executed by the ancestors of the defendants to pay off a previous bond and that the mortgagee had been in possession of the mortgaged land for twenty-five years without objection by the defendants:

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

Mr. Mohomed Hassan Jan, for the Appellant.
Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ADAMI, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage executed by the ancestors of the defendants in favour of the ancestor of the plaintiffs. The bond was executed in the year 1858 and its object was to enable the defendants-mortgagors, to pay off a debt under a previous bond and an amount due by them under a decree. The bond was a usufructuary bond and the predecessors of the plaintiffs were in possession as usufructuary mortgagees for 25 years. At the end of that time there was a Collectorate partition of the Mauza and it happened that the lands covered by the plaintiffs' mortgage-bond fell within the patti of co-sharers who were not members of the mortgagors' family. These co-sharers dispossessed the plaintiffs in 1913 of the greater portion of the land. The plaintiffs then sued the defendants to enforce their mortgage.

The Trial Court found that the assertion by the defendants that the mortgage transaction was not a genuine transaction was false, and the lower Appellate Court has come to the same conclusion. But while the Munsif held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove binding necessity for the loan, the learned District Judge has differed from him and has found that owing to lapse of time and the present plaintiffs not being the original mortgagees and also by reason of the acquiescence of the defendants in their possession, the plaintiffs had, so far as was possible, satisfied the Court that a family necessity did exist and that it was not necessary for them to prove it further. He decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

Before us a preliminary objection has been taken by Mr. Hasan Jan that, during the pendency of the appeal before the District Judge and before the judgment was written, one of the appellants and one of the respondents died, and that no steps were taken by the present appellants for the substitution of parties. He argues that the decree of the District Judge on appeal is, therefore, a nullity. It appears, however, that both the plaintiff who has died and the defendant who has died were minors and their fathers were on the record as their guardians. There is nothing to show us that the deceased minors had any legal representatives other than their fathers who are already on the record. All that was necessary in this suit was that all the members of the plaintiff's family and all the members of the defendant's family should be on the record as parties, this being a mortgage-suit. The appellant has failed to show in his affidavit that there are any members of the families living who are not now on the record. I do not think that this preliminary objection can be sustained.

Coming to the case, Mr. Hasan Jan points out that the District Judge has mainly, if not altogether, relied on a quotation he has made from the case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammatt Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1). He contends that that quotation is not applicable in this case in that this is a suit to enforce a mortgage, whereas in Hunoomanpersaud's case (1) the passage which is cited dealt with the question whether a third party was bound to prove the legal necessity of the loan made by a Hindu father; and he argues that the learned District Judge has placed the onus as to necessity wrongly in this case. He has cited many cases before us to show that in this case the onus is heavily upon the person alleging that the debt is owing. This case, however, in my opinion, differs in many respects from the cases in which the decisions cited by Mr. Hasan Jan were given. Here the mortgagees came in possession and were left in possession not only by the original mortgagors but also by the mortgagors' heirs for a period of 25 years and were only dispossessed after the Collectorate partition by persons other than the mortgagors' family. By their conduct it appears to me that the mortgagors' heirs acquiesced in the possession of the plaintiffs and also tacitly agreed that there had been necessity for the mortgage loan. It is argued that the mortgagees were bound in this case to produce all evidence which was available to prove necessity and that it was possible for them to have produced the previous mortgage-bond and also the decrees to meet which a part of the money was taken. There is nothing, however, to show us that this evidence was available to the plaintiffs and, in fact, it is quite probable that when the bond was satisfied the document was returned to the mortgagors' family.

In all the circumstances of the case, it seems to me to have been an almost impossible task for the present plaintiffs to have proved that legal necessity actually existed 39 years before their evidence was given. In my opinion, the appeal was rightly decided by the District Judge and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where a previous decision operates as res judicata the subsequent publication of a Record of Rights cannot nullify the effect of that decision, nor has such publication the effect of sweeping aside all previous decisions between the parties. [p. 389, col. 2; p. 390, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Pabna and Bogra, dated the 9th of December 1911, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif, First Court, at Pabna, dated the 5th of April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Dwijendra Nath Mookerjee), for the Appellants:—The defendants deny that the plaintiffs have an eight-annas share in the superior interest and admit that their interest is to the extent of seven-annas and odd. The rent payable by the defendants is thus less than that claimed by the plaintiffs. The Courts below are wrong in holding that these questions are res judicata by reason of the fact that they were decided in favour of the plaintiffs in a previous suit for rent between the parties. The decision in the rent-suit can have no such effect as in that suit the Court was dealing only with the liability of the defendants to pay rent to the plaintiffs for the period in suit. Moreover, before judgment was finally pronounced by the High Court on appeal in that suit for rent, there was a final publication of the Record of Rights containing entries which support our case. Under such circumstances, the decision of the High Court cannot operate as res judicata.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for arrears of rent. The plaintiffs are putnidars, and allege that they hold an 8-annas odd share in the putni. On this basis, they claim from the defendants Rs. 22-10-5 gandas as rent annually payable for the holding in their possession. The defendants contend that the share of the plaintiffs in the putni is not 8-annas odd, as alleged by them, but only 7-annas odd and that the rent payable by them to the plaintiffs in respect of this 7-annas odd share is Rs. 13-2-6 gandas. Two questions are thus in controversy between the parties, namely, first, the extent of the share in the superior interest held by the plaintiffs, and, secondly, the amount of rent annually payable by the defendants to the plaintiffs. The Courts below have held that these questions are res judicata by reason of the decision in a previous litigation between the parties.

It appears that in the previous suit for rent these very questions were raised, not in a limited form as touching the rights and liabilities of the parties during the particular years for which rent was then claimed, but in a general form as affecting the relationship between the parties as landlords and tenants. On the 25th February 1911, the Court of first instance gave a decision thereon in favour of the defendants. On appeal, that decision was reversed by the District Judge on the 13th September 1911 and a decree was made in favour of the plaintiffs. A second appeal was preferred to this Court with the result that the decision of the District Judge was confirmed on the 22nd July 1915. Prima facie, the previous decision operates as res judicata, in the present suit which was instituted on the 20th April 1917.

The defendants contend, however, that as, on the 29th May 1914, that is, during the pendency of the second appeal in the previous litigation, a Record of Rights was finally published containing entries which support their allegations, the decree of this Court is of no effect. The Courts below have overruled this contention and have held that the Record of Rights cannot nullify the effect of the previous decision as res judicata. We are of opinion that the contention of the defendants is untenable. Our attention has not been drawn to any authority, nor has reference been made to any principle which lends support to the view that the effect of the publication of the Record of Rights is to sweep away all previous decisions between the parties. Such a consequence would not have followed, even if the entry in the Record of Rights had the effect of a decision in a suit between the parties [Balkishan v. Kishan Lal (1)]. We hold accordingly that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is correct, that the decree must consequently be confirmed and this appeal dismissed.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern the other appeals which are accordingly dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This was a suit by the appellant for thika rent for the years 1322 to 1324. The facts are all stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and need not be recapitulated here. The learned Judge in the Court below came to the conclusion that section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was a bar to the suit. In my judgment, the view expressed by the learned Judge in the Court below is erroneous.

Section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act runs as follows: "Where rent is due to the proprietor, manager or mortgagee of an estate, the receipt of the person registered under the Land Registration Act, 1876, as proprietor, manager or mortgagee of that estate, or of his agent authorized in that behalf, shall be sufficient discharge for the rent; and the person liable for the rent shall not be entitled to plead in defence to a claim by the person so registered that the rent is due to any third person. But nothing in this section shall affect any remedy which any such third person may have against the registered proprietor, manager or mortgagee." In this case the defendants do not plead a receipt of the person registered under the Land Registration Act of 1876 or of his agent authorised in that behalf as a discharge for the rent. In my view, therefore, section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application.

The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondents has relied on section 78 of the Land Registration Act. His argument is that he is not bound to pay rent to the plaintiff who is not registered under the Land Registration Act. Section 78 of the Land Registration Act provides as follows: "No person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming such rent as proprietor or manager of an estate or revenue free property in respect of which he is required by this Act to cause his name to be registered or as mortgagee unless the name of such claimant shall have been registered under this Act." The short answer to the argument is, that the plaintiff does not claim the rent either as proprietor or as manager or as mortgagee. He is claiming the rent as an assignee from the registered proprietor. I quite agree that if the plaintiff had claimed the rent as proprietor, then the defendants would have been entitled to withhold rent from him on the ground that, not being a registered proprietor, he is not entitled to sue them for rent, but that is not the position here. The plaintiff is suing for rent, not as proprietor, but as assignee of the rent from the proprietor. If the argument of the learned Vakil be sound then there cannot be a valid assignment of rent. In my view, the judgment of the learned Judge in the Court below cannot be supported and must be set aside.

The next point is, is there a finding of fact by the learned Judge in the Court below on the question whether the defendant No. 1 has paid Rs. 180 to the plaintiff? The learned Judge says that the plaintiff clearly states that 'defendant No. 1 paid me Rs. 180'. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant states that that Rs. 180 was paid towards the arrears of rent and not towards the rent for the year 1322.

In my view, it is impossible on the judgment of the lower Appellate Court to come to any satisfactory conclusion on this matter. I would set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court for decision according to law. The appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal. The costs incurred in the Courts below will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1895), ss. 104 to 104J, 192—Land formed by accretion—New estate constituted and rent fixed by Revenue Authorities—Tenant, whether bound to pay rate of rent so fixed.

Where a new estate is constituted by the Revenue Authorities of lands formed by accretion, and a new tenure rent is recorded in the Record of Rights as actually fixed and settled under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and no proceedings are taken to obtain a reversal or modification of the decision of the Revenue Authorities, the tenants are bound, under section 92, read with sections 104 to 104J of that Act, to pay the rent so fixed. [p. 392, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Faridpur, dated the 11th of August 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Court of that District, dated the 31st January 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Gira Prosanna Roy Chowdhury), for the Appellant—The plaintiff is entitled to the rent fixed by the Revenue Authorities as they had full jurisdiction to fix a fair and equitable rent under section 192 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. See Khirona Kanta Roy v. Akhoy Kumar (1). The case in Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2) relied on by both the Courts below is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In that case there is nothing to show that proceedings were taken and rent fixed or settled by the Revenue Authorities under the Bengal Tenancy Act. With regard to the Dears lands, the Record of Rights as finally published shows that, as a matter of fact, rent was actually fixed or settled under the provisions of section 192, read with sections 104 to 104J, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. No steps have been taken by the defendants to have the decision of the Revenue Authorities modified or set aside. The defendants are, therefore, bound to pay the rent fixed by the Revenue Authorities at least in respect of the Deara lands.

Babu Bansori Lal Sarkar, for the Respondent.—The Record of Rights was not prepared under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Revenue Authorities proceeded under the provisions of Act IX of 1847 and the Bengal Alluvial Land Settlement Act (XXXI of 1858). There is nothing to show that the proceedings were taken under section 192 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under the circumstances, the Courts below were perfectly justified in applying the decision in Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2) to the present case.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. It appears that under the original Zemindari of the plaintiff the defendants or their predecessor-in-interest held a tenure of which the jama was originally 1,002 rupees, and at the time of the recent Cadastral Survey and Record of Rights in respect of the District of Faridpur it was found that accretion had taken place to the Zemindari which bore No. 3756. The newly accreted lands were separated from the parent estate and formed into what is spoken of as the Deara Mahal bearing Tonzi Mahal No. 6633. Proceeding under the provisions of Act IX of 1847 and Act XXXI of 1858 and the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Settlement Authorities similarly split up the defendant's tenure into two. In so far as it was comprised within the Deara Mahal No. 6633, the Settlement Authorities assessed upon it as payable by the tenure-holders a rent of Rs. 287.6.3 pies while for the remaining portion comprised within the original estate a rental of Rs. 130 8 annas was fixed or recorded by the Settlement Authorities.

It has been found by the Commissioner for local investigation, whose report has been accepted by the Courts below, that in the defendant's tenure 459 bighas 11 cottas 13 chhattaks were in existence at the time when the suit was brought, and it was further found that out of this 459 bighas odd, 405 bighas 5 cottas and 11 chhattaks appertained to the Deara estate No. 6633 and the remaining 54 bighas 6 cottas 2 chhattaks appertained to the original tenure and to the original estate. In a suit brought in the year 1897 it was arranged on compromise between the parties that the tenure-holders should pay rent to the Zemindar both on the original land and also on additional lands formed of accretion at the rate of 9 annas 7 pies per bigha. It was held by the Courts below, on the principle laid down in the case of Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2), that notwithstanding what had been done by the Settlement Authorities the plaintiff landlord was not entitled to claim from the tenure-holders anything more than this rate of rent, namely, 9 annas 7 pies per bigha on the land found to be in existence on the date of suit.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and his contention before us is that, in so far as the accreted lands are concerned, the parties are bound by what has been done by the Settlement Authorities. It is conceded that, in so far as the land included within the original estate is concerned, the plaintiff-appellant is bound by the compromise and arrangement with the defendant, and in so far as that portion of the tenure is concerned, all that the plaintiff can claim is rent for the existing land at that rate. To his contention with regard to the Deara land we are of opinion that there is no answer. It is quite true that, at first sight, the case of Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2) might appear to be an authority for the decision arrived at by the lower Courts. But between that case and the present case there is an important distinction which appears to have been overlooked by both the Courts below. In the case of Muktakeshi Dasi v. Srinath Das (2) there is nothing to show that proceedings were taken and rent fixed or settled by the Revenue Authorities acting under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Here the Record of Rights as finally published shows that, as a matter of fact, on the accreted land which was constituted into a new estate and a new tenure rent was not recorded as merely existing but as actually fixed or settled under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that is to say, under section 192 of that Act read with sections 104 to 104 J. No proceedings have been taken by the defendants under any of those sections to have the decision of the Revenue Authorities modified or set aside. By those proceedings under the provisions of those sections the tenants are bound.

It follows that we must modify the decrees of the Courts below in the manner following, that up to the year 1318 the plaintiff is entitled to recover rent at the old rate and for the years 1319-1320 he is entitled to recover at the rate fixed by the Settlement Authorities, namely, Rs. 287-5 annas 3 pies in respect of the accreted land and rent in respect of the original land measuring 54 bighas 6 cottas 12 chhataks at the rate of 9 annas 7 pies per bigha with cess at 9 pies in the rupee as shown in the Record of Rights and damages as awarded by the Courts below 3 annas in the rupee and costs on the amount decreed with interest on the total amount adjusted and costs at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

This decree will be only against the defendant-respondent Jogendra Lal Roy.

The defendant respondent Troilakhya Nath Munshi appears to have been unnecessarily made a party. He will have half his costs throughout from the plaintiff-appellant.

Decree modified.

Before any argument can be advanced on the language employed in Explanation (IV) of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, it must be established to the satisfaction of the Court that the matter which is sought to be concluded on the principle of res judicata not only might have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit, but further that it ought to have been so made. [p. 394, col. 1.]

Where the evidence in support of one ground is such as might be destructive of the other ground, the two grounds need not be set up in the same suit. [p. 394, col. 1.]

As a matter of law, a defendant can put forward inconsistent pleas, and it is for the Court to take this fact into consideration in coming to the conclusion whether the pleas are well-founded. [p. 394, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal has been argued with great persistence and ability by Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal on behalf of the appellants, but I am unable to say that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is wrong on any point of law.

The plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 5 are the admitted proprietors of the land in dispute. Plaintiffs Nos. 6 to 10 are the mortgagees and their suit is to recover possession of the disputed land from the defendants who have been recorded in the Record of Rights as mortgagees under an unregistered mortgage of the 13th December 1906.

In order to appreciate the arguments which have been advanced before us, it is necessary to deal with certain antecedent events.

The plaintiffs Nos. 6 to 10 claim that on the 11th July 1911 the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 5 mortgaged the disputed land and executed a registered mortgage document in their favour. In 1911 there was a suit by the defendants against the plaintiffs for a declaration that the lands of which they were admittedly in possession were their gurashita lands. That suit failed. Meanwhile, the Record of Rights was published which recorded the defendants as being in possession of the disputed land under an unregistered mortgage. Although the plaintiffs succeeded in the previous litigation against the defendants, it appears that they failed to get possession inasmuch as the Criminal Court, on the basis of the entry in the Record of Rights, held that the defendants were in possession. The present suit was thereupon instituted in order to eject the defendants.

The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the defendants have a valid title to the land in dispute as mortgagees, the mortgage having been executed in their favour at some time before 1889.

It was urged, in the first place, by Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal on behalf of the appellants that the Court was precluded from trying the issue raised by the defendants by virtue of Explanation IV of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal's argument is, that it was open to the defendants in the previous litigation to put forward their title as mortgagees. They did not put forward their title as mortgagees and, therefore, the issue, whether the defendants are mortgagees in respect of the disputed land, must be held to have been constructively in issue in the former litigation.

Now Explanation IV runs as follows:—

"Any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit." It will be noticed that the Legislature has deliberately used two expressions "might and ought", and, in my view, before any argument can be advanced on the language employed in Explanation IV of section 11, it must be established to the satisfaction of the Court that the matter not only might have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit but further that it ought to have been so made.

The question which we have to determine, therefore, is this. Could the defendants have put forward their claim as mortgagees in the previous litigation? They, of course, might have done so, but ought they to have done so? It seems to me that the evidence in support of one claim, namely, the claim of kashthars would have been destructive of the other claim, namely, the claim as mortgagees. I am unable to say that, in such circumstances, the defendants ought to have put forward their claim as mortgagees in the previous litigation.

I fully concur in the view expressed by Mr. Mulla in his well known book on Civil Procedure Code, namely, "where the evidence in support of one ground is such as might be destructive of the other ground, the two grounds need not be set up in the same suit". And it appears to me that this is supported by a decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Mahomed Ibrahim v. Hamja Mahomed Ally (1). That decision was based upon an earlier decision of the same High Court where the following passage occurred:

"Relative rights and duties of owner and trespasser on the one hand and of mortgagor and mortgagee on the other are wholly different and failure in a suit of simple ejectment does not, in our opinion, in any way bar the plaintiff in a subsequent suit to enforce his right to redeem as mortgagor."

The first contention advanced on behalf of the appellant must accordingly fail.

It was next argued by Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal that the defendants should not have been allowed to take up an inconsistent attitude. The basis of the argument is that one of the original defendants, Ramdhan, in this suit claimed the land as his guzarhta land notwithstanding the decision in the previous litigation. Ramdhan died and Bacha was substituted in his place. Bacha put in a written statement in which, for the first time, he claimed the land in dispute as mortgagee.

Now I quite agree that this is a matter which the Courts below could properly have taken into consideration in determining the question whether the claim put forward on behalf of the defendants was well-founded. But I am unable to say that there was no right at all in Bacha to put forward an inconsistent defence in his written statement. So far as I know, inconsistent pleas are allowed, and it was open to Bacha's father Ramdhan to amend the written statement and introduce an inconsistent plea. Ramdhan died and Bacha was substituted in his place and I can see no ground whatever for holding that the Court of first instance was wrong in point of law in allowing Bacha to put forward an inconsistent plea. As I have said before, this is a matter which the Courts below might properly have taken into consideration in determining the question whether the claim put forward was well-founded. But that was a matter entirely for the Courts which have to deal with facts; we are not concerned with that point. I hold that, as a point of law, it was open to Basba to take up an inconsistent position.

The last ground urged by Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal is that, in any event, he has got a registered mortgage document in his favour and is entitled to priority over the defendants who admittedly had an unregistered document in their favour. The action, it must be remembered, is not an action to enforce the mortgage; it is an action in ejectment. Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal has taken us through the relevant sections in the Transfer of Property Act and Registration Act for the purposes of satisfying us that a mortgage above Rs. 100 is compulsorily registrable and is not admissible in evidence unless it is so registered. The point, however, is whether the mortgage upon which the defendant relies was executed since the two Acts upon which Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal relies came into operation. The defendants in their written statement say that the mortgage was executed in their favour more than sixty years ago. If that is right, then the document was executed before either the Transfer of Property Act or the Registration Act was passed. The lower Appellate Court has recorded a finding that it was executed 'sometime before 1889. Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal complains that there is no precise finding on this point. The answer to that argument is that the point has been argued for the first time in this Court. If the point had been taken in the Courts below or in the plaint no doubt it would have been necessary for the learned District Judge to record a precise finding on this point. Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal argued before us that it was open to him to argue a point of law although it was not taken in the pleadings. I quite agree that it is open to him to argue on any points of law before us, but I am of opinion that he can only argue such points of law on the facts found by the lower Appellate Court. His complaint that there is no precise finding on the question when the mortgage bond was executed in favour of the defendants has no substance whatever, in view of the fact that he never took this point in the plaint, nor did he argue this point in any of the Courts below. But assuming that we indulge the appellants to this extent, that we assume in their favour that the document was executed since the Transfer of Property Act and the Registration Act came into operation, I am of opinion that they are in no better position. It is found by the Courts below that the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 5 put the defendants in possession of the property after executing the unregistered document in their favour. The position of the defendants, therefore, is this. There is an unregistered document in their favour and they are in possession of the property. The law is quite clear and has been settled by the class of cases of which Walsh v. Lonsdale (2) is an example. If authority be needed for the proposition, it will be found in the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Sir Asutosh Mookerjee in the case of Puchha Lal v. Kuni Behary Lal (3). In my opinion, the judgment of the learned District Judge is right and must be upheld.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI of 1825), s. 4 (3)—Chur thrown up in large navigable river—Parties, rights of, how to be determined.

The question of title to a chur thrown up in a large navigable river must be determined with reference to the condition of things prevailing at the time when the chur was first formed, and with reference to the terms of section 4 (3) of Regulation XI of 1825: but before applying this provision the Court must determine whether the bed of the river in which the chur is formed is the property of an individual, or is public domain. [p. 896, col. 2; p. 907, col. 1.]

SURENDRA NATH MITRA V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Bakargange, dated the 2nd of September 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of that District, dated the 30th of April 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarty (with him Babu Nando Gopal Banerjee), for the Appellant.—We are entitled to the entire chur. Reads section 4 clause (3) of Regulation XI of 1825. If the bed of the river whereon the chur has been thrown is the property of the plaintiffs, it is clear that the Government can have no claim to it. It has been found that the channel which now separates the chur in dispute from the main land runs over land which was originally included in the plaintiff's taluk. It is thus clear that a part of the bed of the river is the property of the plaintiffs. Refers to Ahmadi Begum v. Mahasy Taraknath Ghosh (1). The question to be gone into in a case like this has not been properly investigated by the Courts below. Refers to Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2), Hursahai Singh v. Syud Lutf Ali Khan (3) and Anand Hari Basak v. Secretary of State for India (4).

Babu Ram Charan Mitter (with him Babu Surendranath Guha), for the Respondent.—The plaintiffs cannot claim the entire chur. I do not dispute the title of the plaintiffs to the portion of the chur which has been awarded to them on the principle of re-formation in situ. Unless the whole of the bed of the river is proved to belong to the plaintiffs, they cannot defeat the title of Government under Regulation XI of 1825.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarty replied.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. O. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The plaintiffs are the owners of two taluks Nos. 1730 and 1745, called Mauzas Guli and Pakhia, and they claim the disputed chur by virtue of their title to these two taluks. The Secretary of State for India in Council, who is in possession of the island, claims it as a chur thrown up in the midst of a public navigable river Agarmukha. The thak boundaries of the taluks owned by the plaintiffs have been re-laid and there is no doubt that a part of the chur in dispute has re-formed on the site of what was originally included in the taluks held by the plaintiffs. The chur, at the time of the institution of this suit, was separated from the main land of the taluks by a narrow channel. The Courts below have given the plaintiffs a decree for such portion of the land of the chur as has been proved to lie within the thak boundaries. The plaintiffs contend, however, that they are entitled to the entire chur, and that is the point for determination in the present appeal.

The respective rights of the parties must be determined with reference to the terms of clause (3) of section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 which is in these terms:—"When a chur or island may be thrown up in a large navigable river (the bed of which is not the property of an individual), or in the sea, and the channel of the river or sea, between such island and the shore may not be fordable, it shall, according to the established usage, be at the disposal of Government." It is plain that, before this provision is applied, the Court must determine whether the chur or island has been thrown up in a large navigable river the bed whereof is not the property of an individual. Unless it is established that the bed of the river is not the property of an individual, title cannot vest in Government; in other words, title vests in Government if the bed of the large navigable river is public domain.

Now, in the case before us, it has been proved that what is now apparently a part of the bed of the river, was not public domain, because it is included within the thak boundaries of the taluks held by the plaintiffs, that is precisely the portion in respect whereof a decree has been made in favour of the plaintiffs. In the next place, it is clear that the channel of the river which is mentioned in clause (3) of section 4 is a channel the bed of which is not the property of an individual. The Courts below have overlooked this crucial point in the determination of the rights of the parties. In the present case, it has been found that the channel which now separates the chur from the main land runs over land which was originally included in the taluk held by the plaintiffs. The chur has thus formed in a large navigable river, but contrary to what usually happens [Ahmadi Begum v. Mahasy Taraknath Ghosh (1)], a part of the bed of that navigable river is the property of an individual, namely, the plaintiffs. From this the plaintiffs contend that the entire chur belongs to them. This, however, does not follow. No doubt, the portion of the chur formed on that part of the chur of the river-bed which is included within the thak boundaries of the taluks owned by the plaintiffs has been rightly decreed to them, on the principle of re-formation in situ enunciated in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) and extended in Hursahai Singh v. Syud Lootf Ali Khan (3), Anand Hari Basak v. Secretary of State for India (4), but unless the remainder of the chur is proved to have subsequently accreted to the re-formation, there could not be even a plausible foundation for the claim of the plaintiffs thereto. For it is conceivable that the portion of the chur which lies outside the boundaries of the taluks held by the plaintiffs was formed first and extended westwards on the part of the bed included within those boundaries. In such circumstances, title to the portion which could be rightly regarded and has been properly treated by the Court below as re-formation on the site of the taluks held by the plaintiffs would not support a claim to the remainder of the chur which had formed first.

A further question, however, will require consideration, namely, does that portion of the bed of the large navigable river in which the chur has been formed and which lies outside the limits of the taluks held by the plaintiffs, form part of the public domain, or is it also the property of a private individual. This question has not been investigated by the Courts below where the assumption was apparently made that such portion of the river-bed was public domain. It is necessary to investigate this matter before the respective rights of the parties can be determined. We may further point out that, as was laid down by the Full Bench in Budroonissa Chowthrain v. Prosunno Oommar Bose (5), the rights of the parties must be determined with reference to the conditions of things at the time when the chur first formed. These are points which have been overlooked, certainly by the District Judge, if not also by the Subordinate Judge. There is thus no escape from the conclusion that the case has not been properly tried.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside in so far as he has dismissed part of the claim and the case remanded to the Court of first instance to be re tried with reference to the observations we have made. The parties will be at liberty to adduce such evidence as they may consider necessary to support their respective allegations. Costs in all the Courts up to the present stage will abide the result. The decree of the District Judge, in so far as it confirms the decree of the Subordinate Judge decreeing part of the claim, will stand unaffected.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

In order that a finding on a particular issue in a previous suit may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit, it is not necessary that that finding should form the basis of the decree in that suit, but the insertion of the finding in the decree or its omission therefrom as also its bearing on the general result of the suit, naturally form elements in considering whether the matter has been directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit. that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessors-in-title were owners of the property and that the defendants were usufructuary mortgagees from some third persons who were the real owners. Both the Trial and Appellate Courts found against the defendants' plea but dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the finding that the mortgage to defendants was by the plaintiff's predecessors and an action in ejectment was not maintainable. In the present suit for redemption of the mortgage the defendants controverted the plaintiff's title, pleading that the finding in the prior suit that they were mortgagees from the plaintiff's predecessor was not res judicata:

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad, at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 121 of 1917, (Appeal Suit No. 3 of 1917, on the file of the District Court, Ramnad) preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Srivilliputhur, in Original Suit No. 17 of 1916, (Original Suit No. 655 of 1913, on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Srivilliputhur).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs S. Somasundaram Pillai and N. Vedachalam Pilli, for the Appellants.—The decree in the prior suit by plaintiff, Original Suit No. 211 of 1908, does not operate as res judicata against the first defendant. The finding that defendants were usufructuary mortgagees under plaintiff's predecessor-in-title was not the basis of the decree in that suit. Unless the finding was incorporated in the decree and the decree was based on the finding the finding will not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit. It is open to the defendants to plead, as in the prior suit, that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessor-in-title was the owner of the property. See Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1), Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (2), Kelu Nambiar v. Chathu Nambiar (3). Though the defendants appealed against that finding it was not necessary for them to have done so as the decree was in their favour. The matter has not been finally decided. There was also no second appeal to the High Court so that there could be no finality.

Mr. O. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Respondents:—The finding, though not the basis of the decree in the prior suit, was a finding on a matter directly and substantially in issue between the parties. To allow a matter that has been contested and finally set at rest to be re opened would be in opposition to the principle governing the doctrine of res judicata. Two competent Courts have given a decision on the nature of the defendants' possession in a prior suit between the same parties. When the defendants file an appeal against a finding even though the suit was dismissed, that finding on appeal is res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties. See Socrjomoness Dayes v. Suddanand Mohapatter (4). The matter was fully considered by Sadasiva Aiyar, J. in Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnasami Naidu (5), where the conclusion is reached that a finding on a matter substantially in issue is res judicata though the party against whom it was recorded eventually succeeded in the case. See Achanta Venkatasuryanarayana v. Shiva Sankara Narayana (6), and Anusuyabai v. Sakharan Pandurang (7). This case falls under the fourth class enumerated by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (8), where the decision on an issue is necessary for the decision of the suit but the party against whom it is given cannot appeal.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are the appellants. The suit was brought for the redemption of plaint lands alleged to have been mortgaged with possession by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title in March 1875 for Rs. 20. The suit was brought on the 14th December 1913.

In a previous suit, Original Suit No. 211 of 1908, the present plaintiff sued the same defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in ejectment on the allegation that the defendants trespassed upon the land sometime in 1900. The defendants contended that the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title and the plaintiff were never owners and they set up title in themselves as usufructuary mortgagees from a third person whom they set up as owner. The District Munsif found in that suit that the mortgagor of the defendants had othi right in the property under the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title and though the defendants' case that their mortgagor was the owner was false, they could resist the plaintiff's claim to eject them as trespassers as they were entitled to be paid what was due to their mortgagor (as mortgagee) before possession could be given to the plaintiff in redemption. (The plaintiffs' case in that suit was that, though there was a mortgage for Rs. 20 in favour of the defendants' mortgagor, that mortgage had been redeemed long ago by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title). That alleged redemption was found against in that suit. Against the decree of the District Munsif dismissing that suit on those two findings, namely (1) that the plaintiff was the owner of the land but he was not entitled to possession, as the lands were outstanding on mortgage and the suit was not brought for redemption of mortgage, and (2) that the defendants were not the mortgagees from an owner but could only claim to be paid the original mortgage-amount due to their mortgagor before parting with possession, there were two Appeals, Nos. 898 and 923 of 1911, filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Ramnad by the plaintiff and the defendants respectively, the plaintiff contending in his appeal that the first conclusion of the Munsif that the plaintiff was bound to bring a suit for redemption, because the original mortgage had not yet been redeemed was erroneous, and the defendants contending in their cross-appeal that the finding that their mortgagor was not the owner but only was himself a mortgagee under the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title and that, therefore, the defendants were liable to be redeemed was erroneous. The Subordinate Judge by his judgment, Exhibit G., paragraphs 7 and 9, upheld both the findings of the District Munsif and dismissed both the appeals.

It was under these circumstances that the present suit was brought to redeem the original othi made by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title to the defendants' mortgagor, the defendants' mortgagor having mortgaged to the defendants for more than the original mortgage amount of Rs. 20 and hence, having practically assigned his original mortgage-right to the defendants for far more than its value.

The lower Appellate Court considered that the defendants having appealed in the former suit to establish that they were not liable to be redeemed and that the plaintiff had no right to redeem and having failed in that appeal, they were barred by res judicata from again setting up that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem them. It, therefore, passed a decree for redemption on payment of the amount of Rs. 20 due under the original othi of 1875, that othi having been held as existing unredeemed in the former suit.

The contentions in the present second appeal are found in grounds Nos. 2 and 3, namely, "2. The lower Appellate Court should have found that the decree in Original Suit No. 211 of 1908 does not operate as res judicata against the first defendant.

"3. The lower Appellate Court ought to have found that the suit is barred by limitation by reason of adverse possession."

As regards the 3rd ground relating to adverse possession, a mortgagee cannot set up adverse possession and hence there is nothing in that ground. The learned Vakil for the appellant set up that, though there may not be limitation by adverse possession, there might be limitation under Article 134 of the Limitation Act. But that Article was not relied on in the lower Court and that Article could only apply if the mortgage to the defendants was made by the original mortgagee Irulappa Pillai purporting to act as owner and not as mere mortgagee, MUTRU PILLAI v. VEDA VYSA CHARIAR.

The document, Exhibit 5 of 1892, in favour of the defendants does not so purport and we are also not bound to allow a point to be argued not expressly raised in the memorandum of second appeal unless the plaint in its own allegations shows the suit to be barred by limitation, which is not the case here.

The contention most strenuously argued was the other question of res judicata. It was argued that though the defendant expressly appealed in the former suit to get rid of the finding of the District Munsif in that litigation the finding, namely, that the defendants were only mortgagees and that the plaintiff could redeem them by paying up the original mortgage-amount, and though they failed in that appeal, they need not and even could not have appealed against the District Munsif's judgment which dismissed the suit, and, therefore, the decision against them was not res judicata. But their Lordships of the Privy Council in Soorjomoni Dayee v. Suddananil Mohapatter (4) held that where the defendant filed an appeal against a finding notwithstanding the suit itself had been dismissed, that finding on appeal was res judicata in a second suit between him and the plaintiff. There is, therefore, nothing in this argument.

As regards the other argument based on Run Bahadur Singh v. Luchu Koer (1), Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (2) and other Bombay and Allahabad cases following Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (2), I need only say that I considered the whole question anxiously in Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnasami Naidu (5), and came to the conclusion that the Full Bench decision in Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia (9), was wrongly dissented from in the subsequent Calcutta cases and that a statement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Luchu Koer (1) was unduly stretched in those subsequent decisions and I followed Varathayyanar v. Krishnasami (10). In fact, the present case is almost exactly on all fours with Varathayyanar v. Krishnasami (10), which has never been dissented from in this Court. I have had the advantage of reading the judgment to be pronounced by my learned brother in this case and I am glad that he supports the decision in Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnasami Naidu (5).

No decision of this Court subsequent to Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnasami Naidu (5) has been quoted before us dissenting therefrom.

The learned Vakil for the appellant adopted the criticism of that judgment in Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnasami Naidu (5), found in 37 Madras Law Journal (Journal part 3) pp. 1 to 15. Having carefully considered those criticisms, I see no reason to change my view, especially as the learned reviewer after vainly trying to distinguish or explain Varathayyanar v. Krishnasami (10), finally stated in despair that "it must be treated as bad law."

I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that the second appeal should be dismissed with costs. Time for redemption is extended to three months from this date.

SPENCER, J.—The second appeal has been argued on a question of res judicata. The present plaintiff brought a prior suit against the present defendants Nos. 1 to 4 for possession of the northern half of Survey No. 851, which is the subject of the present suit. That suit was dismissed on the ground that the first defendant was holding the property as a usufructuary mortgagee and that the suit in ejectment could not be converted into one for redemption. There was an appeal and a cross-appeal, with the result that the first Court's decree was confirmed. Now that the plaintiff has brought this suit for redemption, the first defendant wishes to deny the original othi mortgage under which he got into possession as sub-mortgagee from the mortgagee and to set up a case of absolute title. The Subordinate Judge has held that he cannot do this, and I have no doubt that the Subordinate Judge is right. Undoubtedly, the matter of the mortgage was directly and substantially in issue (to use the words of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure) in Original Suit No. 211 of 1908 as the finding of the two Courts that the mortgage was subsisting led to the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. It is argued by the appellant's Vakil that, because the decree in that suit was in favour of the party against whom the finding was recorded, the matter has not been finally decided. It is true that, in the former litigation, there was no second appeal to the High Court but this was because the question as to the existence of a mortgage-right was one purely of fact and consequently the parties had no right of second appeal. In every other sense the matter was finally decided. The decision of this issue was in favour of the defendants in that suit in so far that it had the effect of causing the plaintiff's suits to be dismissed, but it operates against their contentions in this suit in which the relief claimed by the plaintiff is different from what it was before. The rule of res judicata has been described by the Privy Council, quoting the maxim interest reipublice ut sit finis litium and the commentary of Lord Coke thereupon, in Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prasad Narayan Singh (11), as being "founded on ancient precedent and dictated by a wisdom which is for all time." To allow the defendants to raise this question of mortgage or absolute title which has once been decided by two competent Courts, and have it decided all over again merely for the reason that it is not now to their advantage, that they should be treated as mortgagees would be to ignore every principle of finality and to treat the doctrine of res judicata, as a dead letter. The appellant's Vakil has quoted certain decisions of this and other High Courts which he considers to be in favour of his clients, and it will, therefore, be necessary to deal with them.

First, there is the decision of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1), which has been much quoted and not always quite understood. My learned brother in Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnaswami Naidu (5) has distinguished this case, and I agree with his observations. The Privy Council expressed an opinion on the facts of that case that the judgment of a District Munsif in a suit to recover rent was not conclusive upon a point, viz., that of title, which was only incidental and subsidiary to the main question upon which the suit was decided when the finding upon that issue did not form the basis of the Court's decree, and that the decision was not res judicata. (11) 33 Ind. Cas. 914; 43 O. 694 at pp. 705, 706; 14 A. L. J. 496; 20 C. W. N. 738; 18 Bom. L. R. 397; 23 C. L. J. 621; (1916) I M. W. N. 419; 20 M. L. T. 1; 8 L. W. 544; 81 M. L. J. 77; 43 I. A. 91 (P. C.).

judicata in a subsequent suit upon title in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. My learned brother rightly pointed out in his judgment that there is no condition in section 11 of the Code of the Civil Procedure that the decision of the particular issue should have been the basis of the decree. But the insertion of the finding in question in the decree, or its omission therefrom, as also its bearing on the general result of the suit, naturally from elements in the consideration of the question whether the matter has been directly and substantially in issue in the former suit. Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (2), is one of the cases, which purports to follow Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1).

My learned brother and Napier, J., in Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnaswami Naidu (5) dissented from the view expressed therein by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court. If a landlord sues to eject a tenant and succeeds on the defendant's plea of occupancy right, and if his suit fails for want of a proper notice to quit, the finding on the former issue is res judicata in second suit instituted after a due notice being given. So it was held in Mata Holiappa v. Vithal Gopal Habbu (12).

In Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (2) this contrary view prevailed, but I prefer the Bombay view. With due respect I consider that Kelu Nambiar v. Chelhu Nambiar (3) goes too far in laying down that a decision on an issue in an appealable suit when the decree is in favour of the parties against whom that decision is given is not a final decision and in considering that Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) is an authority for this wide proposition.

In Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (8) it was rightly pointed out by another Bench, with reference to Explanation 2 to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the test of res judicata does not depend on the right of appeal. In that case the second suit, as in the case before us, was one for redemption and the finding in the first suit whether there had been a mortgage or a sale was held to be res judicata between the same parties or their representatives in-interest. Mr. Justice

KUMARI DASTA v. HEMANTA KUMARI DEBI.

Seshagiri Aiyar, for convenience of consideration, divided cases of res judicata into four classes. The fourth class consisted of cases in which the decision upon the issue is necessary for the decision of the suit but the party against whom it is given cannot appeal as the final decree is in his favour. Even so, he held that the decision on the issue would be res judicata. The present case would fall in that class.

Secretary of State v. Swaminatha Koundon (13) cited by the appellants' Pleader, a case to which I was a party, is not really an authority on the law of res judicata. The question we had to decide was whether a party who was not adversely affected by a decree could appeal against an adverse finding recorded in the judgment alone. We answered that question in the negative and a similar question was answered in the negative in Achanta Venkatasuryanarayana v. Shiva Sankara Narayana (6) by the learned Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., upon the point whether the decision of a question as to the invalidity of an adoption would operate as res judicata there is no discussion of the law but a mere reference to Ran Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (1) and Parbatty Debya v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (14).

Parbati Debya v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (14) is another of the decisions of the Calcutta High Court upon the doctrine of "basis of the decree" which my learned brother declined in Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnasami Naidu (5) to follow.

In Anusuyabai v. Sakhararam Pandurang (7), it was rightly observed that an appeal would not lie against an unfavourable finding in a suit when the decree was in favour of the party appealing. The further observations in the same ruling as to there being no res judicata except when the party concerned had an opportunity of appealing are difficult to reconcile with those in Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (8).

In Ghela Ichharam v. Sankalchand jetha (15) there was a finding on an issue not necessary or material for the determination of the suit and it was held to lack the force of res judicata. This decision is not in point as in the case before us the finding as to the mortgage being subsisting contributed materially to the dismissal of the former suit.

The cases in Gurdeo Singh v. Ohandrika Singh (16) and Kelu Nambiar v. Chathu Nambiar (3) were concerned with the finality of adjudication between co-defendants, which stand on rather a different footing from adjudications between plaintiffs and defendants, whose interests are prima facie conflicting.

The Privy Council in Krishna Behari Roy v. Banwari Lall Roy (17), as to the determination of the status of one party in relation to the other, upon a material issue in a proper suit in a competent Court operating as res judicata in a second suit between the same parties, is distinctly against the appellants' present contention. I think that we should dismiss this second appeal with costs.

tenant holding at a fixed rent, and is entitled to the benefit of the presumption as to the fixity of the rent arising under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 9th of July 1918, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of that District, dated the 31st of July 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Appellant.—My husband was the original tenant of the holding. It was transferred to me by way of gift somewhere about the year 1275 B. S. The landlord recognised the transfer. I was thus admitted into the original tenancy with all its incidents and was in fact the successor-in-interest of my husband. See per Teunon, J., in Abhay Sankar Mozumdar v. Rajani Mandal (1). It has been found that the rent payable in respect of the holding has not been changed for more than 20 years. I am thus entitled to the presumption arising under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This presumption has not been rebutted by the defendant.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babus Amulaya Kumar Bhattacharjee and Ransari Lal Sarkar), for the Respondents.—There is no definite finding that the landlord recognised the transfer to the wife. On the other hand, our case was that the husband surrendered and then the wife took a new settlement of the holding. So that Abhay Sankar Mozumdar v. Rajani Mandal (1) does not apply. Refers to Sarat Chandra Ghose v. Sham Chand Singh Roy (2).

Babu Birendra Kumar De was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff in the Court of an Assistant Settlement Officer under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the Record of Rights prepared under Chapter X of the Act the plaintiff was entered as a settled raiyyat of the village. Her contention is that this entry is incorrect and that her status is, in fact, that of a raiyyat holding at a fixed rent. The decision of the Court of first instance was in her favour. In the Court of first appeal, i. e., the Court of the Special Judge of Mymensingh the learned Judge held that the plaintiff had succeeded in proving that the rent payable in respect of the holding had remained at Rs. 12-6-0 for more than twenty years and that the defendant had failed to prove any variation in the rent at any prior period. He next proceeded to hold that the predecessor of the present plaintiff, her husband, a person of the name of Ram Kumar, had transferred the holding to his wife somewhere about the year 1275, i. e., some 49 years before suit. According to the plaintiff, the transfer was by way of gift. According to the defendant, the transfer was by way of surrender on the part of the husband and a subsequent settlement in the name or in favour of the wife. The first Court found that the story of surrender remained unproved. The learned Special Judge came to no finding as to whether the transfer was by way of gift or by way of surrender and whether the transaction of surrender and settlement was a real surrender or a benami one. On this state of facts, acting under the provisions of section 103, Code of Civil Procedure, we have looked into the evidence and we find that the only evidence adduced with regard to this question of surrender on behalf of the defendant is that of his witness No. 2. The deposition of that witness is to the effect that Ram Kumar surrendered and took re-settlement in the name of his wife, that is to say, his case is that the so-called surrender was merely a benami transaction. It follows from this that the transaction was either by way of gift or by way of a fictitious surrender, in either case, with a view to the admission of the wife into the original tenancy as held by him. That is also apparent from the finding that the landlord has failed to prove variation in the rent at any period prior to twenty years before suit. In 1275 the rent was Rs. 12 6-0 and when the re-settlement was made in the name of the wife it was, as in fact the Judge finds, Rs. 12-6-0. In this view of the facts, on the authority of the case reported in Abhay Sankar Mozumdar v. Rajani Mandal (1), we must hold that the recognition given by the landlord to the transfer to or re-settlement in the name of the wife had the effect of admitting the wife into the original tenancy held by Ram Kumar with all its incidents and that she, therefore, became the successor-in-interest of her husband. From this it follows that the presumption that arises under the provisions of section 5C (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act has not been rebutted and that this appeal must, therefore, succeed. We accordingly set aside the decree made by the Special Judge and restore the decree made by the Settlement Officer with costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are as follows. On the 9th October 1863 a Kurmi of the name of Hulli executed a deed of conditional sale in favour of Fateh Singh for a consideration of Rs. 300. By this deed of conditional sale he transferred an eight-annas share in the village of Jamalpur in the Lucknow District to Fateh Singh. He died shortly afterwards. In the following year, Fateh Singh was represented by Himanehal Kurmi and Hulli was represented by his son Malhu. In the year 1864 the determination of the proprietary title to the village of Jamalpur came before the Settlement Courts whose decision as to title was in those days final. Many persons claimed interests in Jamalpur. Their claims were heard together by Captain Boulderson, Settlement Officer. His words with regard to the relative claims of Himanehal and Malhu are as follows:—

".....Himanehal Singh who throughout opposed the possession of the late Hulli Lambardar (Kurmi) on the strength of deeds of sale and mortgage from the Bhat only gradually purchased out all the interests of Hulli in the half share of the village by making the advances of money in 1862 and 1863 amounting to Rs. 680 for which Hulli executed certain bonds and finally gave Himanehal possession of his half share. Hulli died in November last within a month after executing his last bond of 9th October 1863 on which he borrowed Rs. 300 payable in a month's time with interest. Failing to do this, all his rights and interests in the half village were absolutely transferred to the vendor. (sic). All the bonds of Hulli Lambardar are duly engrossed on stamped papers of the proper values which have been carefully registered. They are to all appearance genuine and valid deeds."

This is the statement of the case by Captain Boulderson in his decision on the merits of the 31st August 1864. His decision on the merits is as follows:—

"As to the claim of Malhu, son of the late Hulli Lambardar, I think it is clear that he was never a proprietor in the village. But whatever rights the settlement of 64 Fasli and 1858/59 A. D. may have conferred on him he had entirely transferred to Himanchal, as before noticed, and to whom he made over possession. It is also stated in the proceedings of the District Courts that Hulli had disinherited his son Malhu on account of his mother's misconduct. I consider, therefore, that Malhu has now no claim or right in this village".

The matter did not end there. Malhu appealed to the Commissioner, Colonel Barrow. Colonel Barrow decided his appeal with others by a decision of the 18th November 1864. He says with regard to Malhu's claim,—

"But looking to what has passed between the old proprietors and Himanchal there is little doubt but that they sold their rights to him. The loss of Kanungo's records leaves the point of possession doubtful in past years though there have been many mustajirs from time to time. In 1264 Fasli Durga and Hulli got the settlement as original proprietors but then there was no inquiry into deeds of sale, etc. In 1266 Hulli then maintained his place but Himanchal Kormi superseded Durga and the evidence now before the lower Court shows that Himanchal also purchased Hulli's share in 1862/63 A. D. for which Hulli executed bonds and gave up possession. There is nothing to show that these deeds are fraudulent. They are on stamp-paper of proper value although not registered. Hulli lately died, a year since. His son Malhu, the appellant, was disinherited. So altogether his claim is invalid."

This decision of Colonel Barrow's went on to the Financial Commissioner who upheld it on 2nd May 1866,

Now, persons who have purchased the right of equity of redemption under the deed of 9th October 1863 are claiming redemption of the eight-annas share against the successor-in-interest of Himanchal. The Courts below have decided that their claim cannot be allowed. The present appeals are preferred.

The case appears to us to present no difficulty. We do not consider that this is, as the Courts below found, a case of adverse possession. We find that it is governed by the law of res judicata. The Courts below, while dismissing the suits on the question of adverse possession, did not consider that the defendants were entitled to succeed on the principle of res judicata. The question is very simple—can the plaintiffs take the plea that the deed of 9th October 1863 is a deed of conditional sale which permits redemption? If we had to interpret this deed de novo, we would certainly have come to the conclusion that it was a deed of conditional sale. There have been no foreclosure proceedings and the right of equity of redemption would exist. There can be no question of adverse possession as between mortgagors and mortgagees as was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khierajmal v. Daim (1). At page 312 it is said,—

"Their Lordships are satisfied that the possession has been that of the mortgagees throughout, and the question at issue is exclusively one between mortgagor and mortgagee. As between them, neither exclusive possession by the mortgagee for any length of time short of the statutory period of sixty years, nor any acquiescence by the mortgagor not amounting to a release of the equity of redemption will be a bar or defence to a suit for redemption if the parties are otherwise entitled to redeem."

This decision was referred to in Amir Ali v. Nias Ali (2). But it is not open to us to look at this deed, for the question was tried out and decided by the Settlement Courts in the years 1864-1866. What was the dispute before the Courts between Malhu and Himanchal? Malhu claimed proprietary rights. Himanchal said, "Whatever rights you may have had you have transferred to me." Captain Boulderson refers explicitly to the very deed now before us—the deed of 9th October 1863. He found that under that deed all the rights claimed by Malhu had been entirely transferred to Fateh Singh and from Fateh Singh to Himanehal. Colonel Barrow found that Himanehal had purchased Hulli's share in 1862-1863 and the Financial Commissioner supported these decisions. Undoubtedly, these decisions lost sight of the fact that under the deed of 1863 the executant had a right of equity of redemption, that this right had not been taken away by proper foreclosure proceedings, and that it was still in existence. The decisions lost sight of the fact. But they are nevertheless final on the point. They held that the deed entirely and completely deprived Hulli of all his rights. The facts in this case are very different to the facts in Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (3). There their Lordships of the Privy Council found that, where a man sold his rights in 1853 and appeared again as mortgaging the same rights in 1854, the vendee, who was also the mortgagee, could not be held entitled to go behind the mortgage on the ground that the rights had previously been sold to him. Of course, in such a case it was perfectly possible that the vendor after transferring his rights by sale could again acquire them and their Lordships considered that the conclusion must be drawn that he had re-acquired them from the fact that he had mortgaged them and that it must be assumed that such was the case from the fact that the vendee had taken a mortgage from the vendor in the following year of the same property. They further held that it was not open to the vendee to go behind the terms of the mortgage. But here the case is absolutely different. The point was very simple—had Malhu any rights in 1864 under the deed of 1863? The Courts found that he had not any rights. The point was essential for the determination of the case. If Malhu had rights under the deed of 1863 the Settlement Courts should have retained his name as the owner of an eight annas share noting that the share was mortgaged with possession to Himanehal. They did not do so. They declared that he had no rights of any kind and that Himanehal was the sole proprietor of the share. The matter was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between parties under whom the present parties claim. They were litigating under the same title in a competent Court. The question was heard and finally decided.

We, therefore, dismiss these appeals with costs.

ther Order XXI, rule 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, applies to sales in execution of mortgage-decrees on the Original Side of this Court.

Mr. Justice Greaves has stated in the order now under appeal that if the matter were res integra, he would be inclined to answer the question in the affirmative. But in view of the long established practice of the Court and the decision of Mr. Justice Woodroffe in Surendra Kristo Ray v. Goroo Prasad Ghose (1), he felt constrained to answer the question in the negative, and to dismiss the application of the mortgagor.

The question raises two issues:—First, Whether Order XXI, rule 89 applies to sales held in execution of mortgage-decrees; and, secondly, if it does so apply, whether the rule is applicable on the Original Side of this Court.

As regards the first point, Mr. Chakravarty has contended that rule 89 is applicable only where immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree after attachment; and, in support of that view, he has invited our attention to various rules embodied in Order XXI. We are of opinion that this contention is wholly unfounded. Rule 11 of Order XXI contemplates, as is clear from sub-rule (2) clause (1), that property may be sold in execution of a decree either after attachment or without attachment.

In the case of execution of a decree for money, the immoveable property intended to be brought to sale must be attached. This is in the interest of the decree holder who requires a prohibitory order in his favour, as otherwise the judgment-debtor might, during the pendency of the execution, transfer the property to a stranger and thus defeat the claim of the execution creditor. On the other hand, in the case of execution of a decree on a mortgage where the decree itself directs the sale of the mortgaged property, an attachment is manifestly unnecessary and the Code does not contemplate that in such a case the execution creditor should proceed to attach the property the sale whereof is directed by the decree itself. Rule 89 is expressed in perfectly general terms and lays down that where immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court certain prescribed sums. The rule is not limited by its terms to cases where immoveable property has been sold after attachment in execution of a decree; and, we are of opinion that it should not be so restricted.

The history of this matter is well-known. When section 310A was introduced into the Code of 1882, a question arose whether that section was applicable to sales held in execution of a mortgage-decree under the rules framed pursuant to section 104 of the Transfer of Property Act. There was a divergence of judicial opinion on the subject; this Court answered the question in the negative, while all other High Courts answered it in the affirmative; Kedar Nath Raut v. Kali Ohurn Ram (2), Ram Ram Singhji v. Ohunni Lal (3), Krishnaji v. Mahalev (4), Malikarjunadu Setti v. Lingamurti Pantulu (5). In order to remove the doubt thus created, the Legislature in 1908 remodelled section 310A and also repealed the sections of the Transfer of Property Act which were inserted with modifications in the new Code of Civil Procedure. We feel no doubt that Order XXI, rule 89 applies to sales in execution of mortgage-decrees.

As regards the second point, namely, whether the rule is applicable to such sales on the Original Side of this Court, we observe that Order XLIX, rule 3, specifies the rules which do not apply to any Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary or extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. Order XXI, rule 89, is not one of the rules so excluded. Prima facie, then, Order XXI, rule 89, is applicable to sales in execution of mortgage-decrees on the Original Side of this Court. This view is supported by the provisions of clause 37 of the Letters Patent which authorizes the High Court to frame rules and directs that the High Court shall be guided in making such rules and orders, as far as possible, by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Consequently, if the view is put forward that Order XXI, rule 89, does not apply to the Original Side of this Court, notwithstanding its omission from rule 3 of Order XLIX, it must be established that there is some specific provision in the rules framed by this Court which justifies such an inference.

Our attention has been drawn to only one such rule which is to be found in Chapter XXVII of the Rules framed by this Court. Rule 53 provides that, "No bidding shall be opened except with the consent of the purchaser, or unless it be shown that there has been fraud or misconduct in the management of the sale, or that the purchaser by reason of being in a fiduciary position was disqualified from purchasing". We are of opinion that this rule is of no assistance to the respondent. The rule clearly contemplates the re-opening of a bid so as to allow a higher bid to be offered. It has no application to a case where the bid has been accepted and the sale has been completed by the payment of the purchase-money and thereafter an application is made by a person competent to apply under rule 89 to have the sale set aside upon payment of the prescribed amount. There is, in our opinion, no escape from the conclusion that Order XXI, rule 89, applies to mortgage-sales on the Original Side of this Court.

As regards the decision of Mr. Justice Woodroffe in Surenira Kristo Ray v. Gooroo Prasad Ghose (1), it is plain that the question was not necessary for decision for the purposes of that case, because, even assuming that rule 89 was applicable, the applicant had not complied with the requirements of the Code. We are further of opinion that that decision attaches undue importance to the previous practice of the Court. There had been a fundamental alteration effected in the law and steps had been taken by the Legislature to negative the decision of the Full Bench in Kedar Nath Raut v. Kali Churn Ram (2). We feel no doubt that the practice which at present prevails on the Original Side of this Court is contrary to law, and upon a correct construction of the Civil Procedure Code, Order XXI, rule 89, must be held applicable to mortgage sales.

We have stated that Mr. Justice Greaves was himself inclined to adopt this view. But he probably felt constrained by the dictum in the case of Chaitram Rambilas v. Bridhichand Kesrichand (6), to treat himself as bound by a decision which, in his opinion, was not correct. That dictum, however, was not intended to be carried to this length. No doubt, when a decision of a single Judge of the Original Side of this Court is produced before another Judge, he is bound to treat it with respect, and ordinarily to follow it, if it is applicable to the circumstances of the case before him. But this does not imply that he cannot examine the matter and that it is not competent to him to take a contrary view, if he is convinced that the decision is erroneous. The answer to the question, what regard is to be had to an earlier decision of a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, must depend upon a variety of circumstances. One important factor is the length of time during which it has stood unchallenged. Another factor, possibly of greater importance, is whether the decision gives adequate reasons for the conclusion embodied therein. But the position is indefensible on principle, that, although a Judge may feel absolutely convinced that the decision produced before him is erroneous in law, he is still bound to decide against his own opinion. To take such a view is to hold that the Judge may be reduced to an automaton by the production of an earlier judgment. Reference may, in this connection, be usefully made to the course followed in such circumstances in England.

In Finlay v. Darling (7) Mr. Justice Romer observed as follows: "The only other case that has occasioned me any difficulty is that before Kekewich, J., of Bendy, In re, Wallis v. Bendy (8). That is a decision of a Judge of first instance like myself. Ordinarily, in these cases I should always follow the decision of a Judge of co-ordinate jurisdiction unless on principle I differed from it." To the same effect are the observations of Lord Alverstone, C. J., in London County Council v. Schewnik (9), that "the Court of Appeal have recently recognized that it is desirable in the public interest, and in order that people may know with certainty what their position is, that Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction should follow their decisions, unless there are strong grounds which enable the Court to say that the previous decisions ought not to be followed." The same view had been taken in 1860 in the case of Newcastle-Under-Lyne and Turnpike Roads v. North Staffordshire Railway Company (10) where Pollock, C. B., observed as follows:—"The rule is this: that wherever there is a decision of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, the other Courts will adopt that as the basis of their decision, provided it can be appealed from. If it cannot be appealed from, they will exercise their own judgment". Baron Martin added, "that is where they think the judgment of the other Court was clearly wrong; not where it is a doubtful matter".

A similar opinion was expressed by Sir George Jessel, M. R., in Osborne and Roulett, In re (11) in the following terms: "When I first had the honour of sitting here I used to think myself bound by any decision of a Vice-Chancellor that was twenty years old; but the Court of Appeal in one instance held that I was not so bound, I then reconsidered my position and thought I was not bound by any decision of a Court of co-ordinate authority. Accordingly, I have since frequently declined to follow such authority." In a later case, Gathercole v. Smith (12), Sir George Jessel made a similar statement: "That the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer followed each other's decisions was a matter of courtesy. The Vice Chancellors did not consider themselves bound by each other's decisions. I have differed frequently from Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction." There are, however, dicta of other learned Judges who apparently lay down a more stringent rule; for instance, in Merry v. Nickalls (13) Lord Justice James observed: "The whole theory of our system is, that the decision of a superior Court is binding on an inferior Court and on a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, in so far as it is a statement of the law which the Court is bound to accept." To the same effect is the observation of Brett, M. R. in Palmer v. Johnson (14) and Mr. Justice Joyce in two cases felt disinclined to depart from the decision of concurrent authorities, although he considered them to be doubtful. See Lyon v. London City and Midland Bank (15) and Ravensworth, In re, Ravensworth v. Tindale (16).

We are of opinion that the rule which should be followed in this Court is that a Judge on the Original Side is ordinarily bound to consider with respect the decision of another Judge on the Original Side produced before him, but that if he is convinced that the decision is erroneous, he is not under an obligation to follow it against his own judgment.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the order of Mr. Justice Greaves is set aside; the application under rule 89, Order XXI is granted. The appellant-judgment-debtor is entitled to the costs of this appeal and of the hearing before Mr. Justice Greaves.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 9th September 1918.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim and the Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, Ali Mohammad and Mahendra Deva Varma, for Respondents Nos. 1 & 3.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to certain property which was sold in execution of a decree obtained by Babu Balak Ram against Gauri Shankar, Sheo Prasad and Thakur Prasad, and purchased by Babu Balak Ram himself. Gauri Shankar, Sheo Prasad and Thakur Prasad lived jointly. The plaintiffs, Ram Sundar and Mahadeo Prasad, are the sons of Sheo Prasad. The remaining plaintiff, Raj Bahadur, is the son of Thakur Prasad.

The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the property in question was the joint family property of Gauri Shankar, Sheo Prasad, Thakur Prasad and the plaintiffs and that Gauri Shankar, Sheo Prasad and Thakur Prasad mortgaged the same with Babu Balak Ram without any legal necessity. They sued for the possession of the said property, offering to pay any amount that the Court might adjudge to be payable by them. The defendant, Babu Balak Ram, denied that the property in dispute was the joint family property of the plaintiffs. He pleaded that the mortgage in question was made to pay certain antecedent debts due by the family and that the plaintiffs, two of whom were born after the mortgage, had no right to maintain the suit. He also asserted that he had made certain improvements after his purchase, the cost of which the plaintiffs were liable to pay.

The Court below held that the grove in dispute was not in the possession of Babu Balak Ram, that the remaining property was the joint family property of the plaintiffs and the mortgagors and that the mortgage in question had not been made for any legal necessity binding on the family. It decreed the claim accordingly for the possession of the disputed property other than the grove, subject to the payment of Rs. 249-6-11 to Babu Balak Ram on account of the cost of repairs and improvements made by him. The present appeal was filed by Babu Balak Ram, who has died since its institution, and has been re-placed by his son, Kamlapat Ram. It is now conceded on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the property in dispute is the joint family property of the plaintiffs and the mortgagors. The main questions for consideration are, whether the mortgage in question was made for legal necessity binding on the family and whether Babu Balak Ram had satisfied himself by due enquiry as to the existence of such necessity when he advanced the loan represented by the mortgage.

It appears from the evidence that Ganesh Prasad, the father of Gauri Shankar, Sheo Prasad and Thakur Prasad, and the grandfather of the plaintiffs, carried on grain-dealing and money lending business. He died in 1883. The business was then continued by Gauri Shankar on behalf of the family. Gauri Shankar and his brothers, Sheo Prasad and Thakur Prasad, were living jointly. Gauri Shankar was the manager of the family. He had borrowed some money from the Ajodhya Bank, Limited, in lieu of which he had executed a promissory-note in favour of the Bank on the 15th March 1900. The Bank filed a suit against Gauri Shankar for the recovery of the money due on that promissory-note and obtained a decree for Rs. 4,320-14-0 exclusive of future interest and costs on the 9th October 1900 (Exhibit A-3). In execution of that decree an application for the attachment of moveable property belonging to Gauri Shankar to be pointed out by the Bank was filed, and a warrant of attachment was issued (Exhibit A-5). But before the attachment could be made, a suit was filed by Sheo Prasad and Thakur Prasad for a declaration that the property sought to be attached was the joint family property of the firm of Ganesh Prasad and Gauri Shankar and was not responsible for the payment of the money due on the decree held by the Bank against Gauri Shankar alone (Exhibit 43). Along with this suit an application was made for an injunction to stay the attachment, alleging that the attachment, if made, would interfere with the business of the family (Exhibit A-7). Gauri Shankar, Sheo Prasad and Thakur Prasad eventually borrowed Rs. 3,500 from Babu Balak Ram and paid the money due under that decree (Exhibit A-55). The attachment was not, therefore, carried out. In lieu of the money so borrowed, Gauri Shankar and Sheo Prasad executed a promissory note for Rs. 3,500 in favour of Babu Balak Ram on the 22nd March 1901. Thakur Prasad was a minor at that time. Babu Balak Ram states that Thakur Prasad joined in the execution of the promissory-note but he does not say whether he executed it himself or whether Gauri Shankar signed it on his behalf as his guardian. This promissory-note is not forthcoming. The learned Subordinate Judge considers that it was illusory; but the cheque-book of Babu Balak Ram shows that a cheque for Rs. 3,500 was actually handed over to Babu Sarju Prasad, Banker, Fyzabad, on the 22nd March 1901 (Exhibit A-55). Babu Balak Ram states that Babu Sarju Prasad cashed the cheque at the Oudh Commercial Bank, Fyzabad, and gave its money to Gauri Shankar and his brothers. The report of the process-server, who was entrusted with the warrant of attachment, shows that on the 23rd March 1901 Gauri Shankar gave that money along with other money he had with him, when he went to his house to make the attachment, in full satisfaction of the decree which the Ajodhya Bank, Limited, held against him (Exhibit A-5). Gauri Shankar does not deny that he had borrowed the money from the Ajodhya Bank, Limited, and that the Bank had obtained a decree against him. He admits that Babu Balak Ram lent him the money required to pay the debt due to the said Bank. His assertion that Babu Balak Ram did so in order to save him from the necessity of voting for Janki Prasad, who was a candidate for the Municipal Commissionership of Fyzabad and belonged to the party of Manohar Lal, the Director of the Ajodhya Bank, Limited, and to enable him to give his vote to Sheo Ghulam, who belonged to the party of Babu Balak Ram, is of little consequence. If the money was actually borrowed from Babu Balak Ram to pay to the Ajodhya Bank, Limited, the motive which might have influenced Babu Balak Ram to lend the money has no material bearing on the question of the plaintiffs' liability for the payment of that debt.

There is no reliable evidence to show for what purpose Gauri Shankar had borrowed the money from the Ajodhya Bank, Limited, for the recovery of which a decree was obtained by the Bank against him, but from the facts that Sheo Prasad joined Gauri Shankar in borrowing Rs. 3,500 from Babu Balak Ram for the payment of that decree by the execution of a promissory-note in his favour, and allowed the suit, filed by him and his brother, Thakur Prasad, to contest the liability of the family property for the payment of the decretal money to be dismissed for default, it may reasonably be presumed that the money due to the Ajodhya Bank, Limited, was a debt which the family had undertaken to pay or was liable to discharge.

The mortgage-bond in suit was executed in lieu of the money due on that promissory-note. Babu Balak Ram states that at the time of the execution of the promissory-note he had enquired as to the necessity for the loan. We see no reason to disbelieve him. The loan had the effect of saving the family property from attachment and of removing the fear of disturbance which the attachment of the moveable property was likely to cause to the family business. There is nothing to indicate that Babu Balak Ram acted otherwise than in good faith. The enquiry was made when the original loan of Rs. 3,500 was taken, and, as pointed out in Anant Ram v. Collector of Etah (1), the existence of necessity can in such circumstances be presumed. If the previous loan was good and binding on the family, it is not open to the plaintiffs to impeach the mortgage which has been effected in lieu of it. In Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council emphasized that where a joint family property had been sold out and out, or where a decree in enforcement of a debt had been obtained against the property and in execution of that decree rights had thus sprung up with regard to the joint family estate, those rights were not to be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head. It was open to them to show that the debts, in satisfaction of which the property was sold, were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchaser had notice that they were so contracted. There was no such allegation or proof in this case. The Counsel for the plaintiffs states that his clients are prepared to redeem the mortgage but the present suit is not so framed. The plaintiffs do not admit the mortgage or seek to redeem it. They impeach its validity and offer to pay any amount, for which a legal necessity may be found to exist on its avoidance. It is unnecessary to consider how far the plaintiffs' right of redemption is affected by the sale. If the plaintiffs cannot avoid the mortgage, no decree for redemption can be granted in this suit.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs dismissed with costs here and hitherto. The plaintiffs will bear their own costs throughout. The Court-fees payable by the plaintiffs to the Government shall be noted in the decree.

Appeal allowed.

Where a tenant's holding is augmented upon his taking a settlement of an additional area and a new arrangement is arrived at, and a new rental fixed thereby increasing the rent originally paid, the rent so increased is not an enhancement, and consequently section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply. [p. 414, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Pabna, dated the 11th of January 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Additional Court at Serajunge, dated the 14th of May 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Provasch Chandra Mitter, (with him Babu Bireswar Bagchi) for the Appellants:—The original rent was only 78 rupees. The plaintiffs now claim rent at the rate of Rs. 146 on the basis of my agreement. The enhancement claimed is thus more than 2 annas in the rupee. The agreement being in contravention of the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be enforced. The new arrangement or new settlement is only a colourable transaction to evade the provisions of section 29. See Raj Kumar Sarkar v. Faizuddin Tarafdar (1). Besides, there is no finding that the additional rent in excess of that allowed by section 29, is in respect of the area which has been added to the area of the original holding. The mere fact that there was some additional land included in the tenancy would not take the case out of the operation of section 29. Refers to Sonaulla Sardar v. Bhagabati Debya Chowdhurani (2).

Babu Bepin Behary Ghose (with him Babu Bansori Lal Sarkar), for the Respondents:—The provision of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to the facts of this case. Here the area of the original holding was 68 bighas and odd. An area of 21 and odd bighas has been added to the original area and a new settlement was arrived at between the landlord and the tenant for the payment of a consolidated rent in respect of a new holding of 90 bighas. Babu Provash Ohandra Mitter, in reply:—

The cases in Kedar Nath Hazra v. Manindra Ohandra Nandi (3) and Bata Mandal v. Manindra Ohandra Nandi (4) are cases of settlement of bona fide dispute between the landlord and the tenant. Refers to Prabat Ohandra Gangapadhya v. Chirag Ali (5), Manindra Ohandra Nandi v. Upendra Ohandra Hazra (6). Even if it were a case of consolidation, my original rights would remain. #### JUDGMENT.

GREAVES, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants against a decision of the Subordinate Judge modifying a decision of the Munsif. The material facts are as follows:—

The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendants rent at the rate of Rs. 146 odd in respect of the defendants' holding.

(2) 48 Ind. Cas. 35; 28 O. L. J. 142.

(3) 5 Ind. Cas. 309; 11 O. L. J. 106.

(9) 13 C. W. N. 1011 (208) notes.

The defendants' holding originally consisted of 68 bighas of land and the rent payable in respect of these 68 bighas was a sum of Rs. 78 odd. Subsequently, according to the findings of the lower Appellate Court, an area of some 21 bighas was added to the defendants' original holding and the plaintiffs' case is that a new settlement or arrangement was arrived at between them and the defendants whereby, in consideration of the additional area of 21 bighas being added to the original area of 68 bighas, the rent payable in respect of the whole holding of 90 bighas should be Rs. 146 odd, the amount now claimed by the plaintiffs in the suit.

The first Court held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover this amount of rent inasmuch as their claim was in violation of the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the Court held that they were only entitled to rent at the rate payable for the original holding, that is to say, that in respect of the addition of 21 bighas rent was payable as the rate payable from the original holding of 68 bighas. The decision of the first Court was reversed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge who held that the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had no application, inasmuch as a new arrangement or settlement had been arrived at between the parties and that, consequently, the provisions of section 29 had no application. There were various other grounds stated in his judgment but I do not think that it is necessary to deal with those, as the main subject of contention before us has been as to whether the claim of the plaintiffs is in violation of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or not, and if it is not, it is conceded that the appeal must fail.

Now, what is said on behalf of the appellants is that, there is no finding that the additional rent over and above the enhancement allowed by section 29 is attributable to the added area of 21 bighas and we are asked to remand the case in order that a finding may be arrived at as to whether this is so or not. I do not think that this remand is necessary because, in my opinion, the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act have no application to the facts of this case. I think, upon the findings of the lower Appellate Court, which are perhaps not so clear as they might have been, there is a finding that upon the defendants taking settlement of the additional 21 bighas, a new arrangement was arrived at and that a new rental of Rs. 146 was fixed. It is said on behalf of the defendants that this is a colourable infringement of the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act: if it were, I think the appellants would be entitled to succeed, for, as has been pointed out in the decision of the case of Raj Kumar Sarkar v. Faisuddi Tarafdar (1), you have to consider in each case whether the enhancement of rent claimed is really a colourable infringement of section 29 or whether it is a new rental arrived at between the parties. If it is the former, then section 29 would apply and would be a bar to the enhancement of rent claimed. If, on the other hand, as appears to be the case here from the facts found, that this is not so, but that the inclusion of the additional 21 bighas resulted in a new arrangement being arrived at between the parties, then section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application and authority for that proposition will be found in the case to which I have already referred and if further authority is desired it will be found in the case of Satish Chandra Giri v. Kabiraddin Mallick (10). At page 234 appears the argument of the learned Vakil who appeared for the appellant in that case. He argued that there had been an increase of rent on account of an increase in the area of the holding and consequently section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply. In the judgment of the Court, at page 235, the learned Judges remark: "It is argued that section 29 applies only to an increase in the rate of rent, and not to an increase in the amount of rent by reason of increase of the area," and then, later on, the learned Judges say, "we are of opinion that this contention is correct. Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to cases of increase in the rate of rent, which is ordinarily designated 'Enhancement of rent'." In the result in that case, a remand was necessary to ascertain whether an increase in the rent was due to an increase in the area. But that does not affect the statement of law laid down in the judgment to which I have already referred.

There is only one other case to which I need refer that is the case of Sonaulla Sardar v. Bhagabati Debya Choudhury (2). The learned Vakil for the appellants contended that this was an authority in support of the proposition for which he contended. But I do not think that on an examination of the facts of that case that this contention is correct. The original holding in that case was  $7\frac{1}{4}$  bighas and it was subsequently found on a fresh survey that the area was  $9\frac{1}{2}$  bighas. An increased rent was paid in respect of this increased area. Now, in that case the claim of the landlord for rent at the rate at which he claimed was disputed as being an infringement of the provisions of section 29 of the Act and this contention was upheld. But it appears to me that there is nothing in that case to show that the original holding did not consist of the area of which it was found to consist, upon a fresh survey being made, and accordingly in that case it seems to me that the rate of rent was fixed for the holding whatever its area was at the time of the demise and that accordingly section 29 applied. But the present case is entirely different from that case. Here, as I have already stated, you have an additional holding of 21 bighas and a fresh arrangement arrived at between the parties for increase of rent.

The appeal fails and it must be dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

H. and R. were tenants of an estate in the proportion of  $\frac{1}{3}$  and  $\frac{2}{3}$ ; to save the estate R. satisfied a rent decree by paying the amount due for the entire estate, and brought the present suit against H. to recover from him his share of the amount awarded by the decree:

Appeals against the decrees of the First Additional District Judge, 24 Parganas, dated the 18th of September 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Diamond Harbour, dated the 22nd of March 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babus Bepin Chandra Bose, Jatis Chandra Guha for Babus Surya Kumar Guha, Radhika Ranjan Guha for Babu Tajendranath Bose), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for contribution against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. There was a rent-decree by the landlord against plaintiff, defendant No. 1 and his niece Chandra Kumari. In execution of that decree the landlord put up to sale some of the properties belonging to the plaintiff. To save his properties which were not the subject-matter of that suit the plaintiff put in the decretal amount and compensation. The defendant No. 1 has paid off his share of the decretal amount. The present contest is with regard to Chandra Kumari's share. There being no claim against defendant No. 1 he should not have been made liable. The next question that arises is, whether the debt is to be a personal debt of Chandra Kumari or would be a charge on her father's death. The defaulting tenure has not been sold. The personal property of Chandra Kumari has been taken by defendant No. 2 as heir to her stridhan properties. Refers to Upendra Lal Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (1). It was a claim made against Chandra Kumari for contribution. That, I submit, would surely make it a personal debt. Under the rent, decree these three persons were made liable. The decree also was executed as a personal decree against them under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, Section 70 of the Indian Contract Act would apply to the case. Refers to Bireswar Das Dey v. Kamal Kumar Dutt (2); Kristo Gobind Majumdar v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (3) and Roy Radha Kissen v. Nauratan Lall (4). Here, in the present case, the question should not be looked at from the point of view that the estate has been benefited. Chandra Kumari was bound to pay the money. Supposing she had Rs. 10,000, from which she could have paid off her debt. On her death the creditors would be perfectly entitled to recover the amount from her reversioners who inherited the whole amount. Refers to Braja Lal Sen v. Jiban Krishna Roy (5) and Jiban Krishna Roy v. Brojo Lal Sen (6). Liability for rent ought to be regarded as a personal liability, the only exception being in the case of a landlord executing a decree under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As the present case is not within that exception it ought to be taken as a personal liability, which her reversioner would be bound to contribute. We have paid our share, the balance should be paid by him.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Pratul Chandra Rai), for the Respondents.—The cases cited by them have no bearing on the present point. Defendant No. 1 and Chandra Kumari were the joint proprietors. She inherited her father's properties. She having died in 1316 her properties devolved on defendant No. 2. The suits were brought after Chandra Kumari's death. The decrees, consequently, were passed long after her death, although in some suits the rents claimed were for a period prior to Chandrakumari's death. The suit could be, therefore, decreed under section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the reversioner. In a rent suit under section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act rent is a first charge. At the time when the suit was brought and the decree was passed, Chandra Kumari was dead. Hari Prosad succeeded Kali Prosad, Chandra Kumari's father. Therefore, Chandra Kumari had nothing to do with the estate neither her heirs. It was, therefore, plaintiff and Hari Prosad who were the only tenants. Further, there was no decree against Chandra Kumari. I did not make a voluntary payment which was solely for the benefit of the estate.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—These six appeals arise out of suits brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant No. 1 one Hari Prosad the sums paid by the plaintiff in satisfaction of six rent decrees which according to the plaintiff were justly payable by defendant No. 1.

It appears that the original owners of certain tenures were the plaintiff, Rama Prosad, the defendant No. 1 Hari Prosad and one Kali Prosad, the last two being brothers. On the death of Kali Prosad he was succeeded first by his widow and then by his daughter Chandra Kumari. Chandra Kumari, it appears, died towards the close of the year 1316. Thereafter the landlord brought six rent suits claiming rent for the years 1313 to 1316, that is for four years during which Chandra Kumari was alive. He made parties defendants to these six rent suits Rama Prosad, Hari Prosad and one Sital Prosad who was the daughter's son of Chandra Kumari and, therefore, heir to stridhan property. The rent-suits were decreed and payment by the defendant was directed, and it may here be observed that the payment to be made was not payment to be made out of the estate left by Chandra Kumari. The decrees are essentially rent-decrees against the tenant defendants. These decrees were put in execution and eventually some portions of the plaintiff's personal properties were put to sale and in order to recover these properties the plaintiff was compelled to satisfy the decrees in full. That he was justly liable to pay  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the decretal amount it is not disputed, and similarly it is not disputed that Hari Prosad was similarly liable to pay  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd, and in fact he has paid  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the respective decretal amounts.

The question is as to the remaining  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd, whether Hari Prosad who has succeeded to Kali Prosad's share as his reversionary heir should be required to pay the remaining  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd on account of his having inherited the share of Kali Prosad. Both Courts have answered this question in the affirmative.

The learned Vakil for the appellant contends on the strength of a number of cases which he has cited, for instance, the cases reported as Birenwar Das Dey v. Kamal Kumar Dutt (2), Kristo Gobind Majumdar v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (3) and Jiban Krishna Roy v. Brojo Lal Sen (6) that Sital Prosad and not he is liable for that  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd. We are of opinion that this contention must fail. The decrees were not made against Chandra Kumari in her life time. They were made against Hari Prosad after her death when he was in possession as tenant having interest extending to a  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share. It is true that Sital Prosad was also a judgment-debtor in that decree, but on the facts found it appears to us that he was not a necessary party. The only tenant-defendants in possession of the tenures were Rama Prosad and Hari Prosad and Hari Prosad was interested in them to the extent of  $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share. The rent-decree was the first charge on the holding in his hands and in the plaintiff's hands. The decree was against him. The payment made by the plaintiff was certainly not a voluntary payment and it cannot be said that Hari Prosad was not benefited by that payment and, on the principle laid down in section 70 of the Contract Act, Hari Prosad is bound to reimburse the plaintiff.

It has been pointed out to us that in the plaint as framed the plaintiff asked for relief not against Hari Prosad but against Sital Prosad. That claim was never formally amended, but it is quite clear that when the case came on for trial it was clearly understood that the claim was made against defendant No. 1, Hari Prosad, and that Hari Prosad fully realized that position and had every opportunity given him to meet that case. The defect in the plaint and the failure to amend it, therefore, did not affect the merits of the case and does not affect the appeal on its merits.

For these reasons, we dismiss these six appeals with costs.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The accused persons were placed on their trial with four others before the Sessions Judge of Howrah upon charges of forging, and conspiring to forge, currency notes. The Jury was unanimous in acquitting all the accused persons, and the learned Judge accepted their verdict in regard to the other four, but referred the case as against these two men to this Court under the provisions of section 307, Criminal Procedure Code.

A short account of the incidents leading up to the trial will help to make the case more intelligible. On March 18th, 1918, a forged currency note for Rs. 5 was tendered and accepted at Bagnan Railway Station, a station on the Bengal Nagpur Railway. When it was found that the note was spurious, it was sent to the Railway Police, and, later, Sub-Inspector Panna Lal Roy of Bagnan Thana took up the enquiry. On April 1st, 1918, Panna Lal searched the house of the accused Anant at village Chandbag and found two five-rupee notes, one of which was forged. A man named Shibkali Chatterjee had given to Panna Lal the information which lead him to search Anant's house on April 1st, and the same man handed over to him on April 16th, a post card, marked Exhibit II, which is said to establish a connection between Anant and Dhiraj. On April 19th, 1918, Inspector Darpa Narain Singh was placed in charge of the investigation. It is not necessary to follow all the details of his proceedings, but it may be remarked that by the time this trial was begun, the Police were in possession of no less than 84 forged notes of five rupees each, all taken, according to an expert, from the same block. On January 27th, 1919, Anant's house was searched a second time by Sub-Inspector Panna Lal Roy and this time the charred fragments of some five-rupee notes are said to have been found. Anant was arrested and taken to the head-quarters of the sub-division at Uluberia where he made a statement on the following day. He was remanded to custody, but released on bail on February 3rd and on February 13th he made a second statement. In the interval, he is said to have given information to the Police on various points. For the present, these are the principal points in the story against Anant.

Dhiraj Chandra Pal's family house is at a village called Bhowanipur, but he is said to live generally at the house of his father-in-law at Bhadreswar. A search was made of that house on January 27th, 1919, without result: then a second search was made on February 5th and this time it is said that inside a box were found some pearls wrapped in a piece of paper similar to the paper on which forged notes were printed. Dhiraj, it may be noted, was not present at this search. Then, as the result of the information supplied by Anant, the Inspector traced a man, named Lakhan, who had served in the house at Bhadreswar, to his home in Orissa. This Lakhan was brought to Calcutta, where he made some disclosures and on March 17th, he showed to the Police a tank into which the press had been thrown, and on the morning of the 18th the component parts of a press were recovered from the tank in the presence of witnesses. These are the salient points in the story against Dhiraj.

Both the accused say that they are innocent of the charges preferred against them. Anant does not admit that the charred fragments were found in his house on January 27th : he urges that the statements said to have been made by him are not admissible ; and that the evidence given by Lakhan is the evidence of an accomplice and unworthy of credit. Dhiraj says that he knows nothing about the packet of pearls, and he does not claim the pearls ; he denies having any correspondence with Anant ; he also attacks the evidence of Lakhan, and he says he is in no way responsible for what was found in the tank. He also pleads that at the time when the notes were being forged—the last quarter of 1917—he was laid up with a broken leg at Bhowanipur.

Before dealing with the evidence, I may note that the expert's evidence is not challenged. The Police are in possession of a large number of forged notes, all having a common origin, and the charred fragments are fragments of forged notes similar to the uninjured forged notes. These facts, of course, do not in any way affect the accused. One other fact to be mentioned is that the forged note found in Anant's house in March 1918 is of the same origin. That by itself proves nothing more now than it did in 1918 ; but it will become significant if it be proved that, ten months later, he had five or more similar notes in his possession. Consequently, I think that the proper starting point in considering the evidence against Anant must be the house-search that took place on January 27th, 1919.

The witnesses to this search are the Sub-Inspector and Rajani Kanta Chakravarty and Harihar Chatterjee ; prosecution witness No. 15 also signed the search list, though he was not present during the search. One Shib Kali Chatterjee also signed the search list and was present part of the time, but he has not been examined as a witness and is not to be confused with the other man of the same name (prosecution witness No. 50). This evidence has been criticised at great length. The point which impressed me most was this that if the story is true, Anant must have tried to burn the forged notes directly after the arrival of the Police, and it seems surprising that at such an early hour in the morning no one caught sight of the blaze, but as the walls are solid if the door were shut in time the light might have escaped notice. There are no doubt discrepancies in the evidence ; but the charred fragments were undoubtedly brought out of the kitchen and placed on a mat outside. The witnesses are perfectly clear on that point. They also say that the persons of the Sub-Inspector and of the witnesses were searched. The long delay that took place before Anant was marched off to the Thana is easily explained by the meticulous care with which the fragments were detailed in the search list. The result of the evidence, to my mind, is that we must either believe that the fragments were found as they are said to have been found, or we must hold that they were cunningly introduced into the kitchen by the Sub-Inspector. The first of these alternatives is, I think, proved by the evidence. The second involves overwhelming difficulties, namely, that the intended fraud must have been discovered when the Sub-Inspector's person was searched, and that Anant would instantly have denounced the Sub-Inspector. The second of these difficulties is the greater ; Rajani, Harihar and Manmatha are not hostile to Anant, and the question was not put to them. The Sub-Inspector also was not asked whether he had gone to the house with the notes in his pocket, nor whether the accused had at once charged him with fraud. Lastly, there is the statement of the accused ; he was asked by the Committing Magistrate on June 26th whether the fragments had been found by the Sub-Inspector in his oven, and his answer was "Daroga babu katakguli kagas paiyachhilen: e tukraguli taha naho." He said nothing further to the Judge. These words can only mean that the Daroga found some pieces of paper and then substituted the charred notes, but that is not the defense suggestion.

My conclusion is that the charred fragments of forged five rupee notes were found in Anant's kitchen in the manner alleged. It is his kitchen, and he is the only male inmate apparently.

Then we come to the statement made by Anant before Mr. Rahman on the following day. The objection taken on this statement is that it was made under pressure, and the pressure is said to consist of a threat by the Sub-Inspector to put Anant's womenfolk to trouble. I think it must be held on the prosecution evidence that the Sub-Inspector spoke unwisely, but I cannot believe that a man of his experience was such a fool as to use the words "bijjat karibo" in public. The position, however, was that, unless Anant shouldered the responsibility, all who were in the house at the time of the discovery might be accused and the only other inmates were his wife and mother. I think that fear may have worked on the mind of Anant, and may have been encouraged by the Sub Inspector in a subtle way in the hours that elapsed before Anant reached the Magistrate. In that view, I think that the statement is not admissible. The second statement, again, is said to be inadmissible because it resulted from inducement by the Inspector and Sub-Inspector. Shortly stated, the case is that Anant was led to believe that he would be offered a free pardon and examined as a witness. The evidence has been discussed elaborately; but I think the matter may be disposed of in a few words. After the statement on January 28th, Anant was sent to jail: an application for bail was refused abruptly, and at the instance of the Police. Then came a sudden change; Anant was released on February 3rd, on nominal bail: he went to Calcutta with Darpa Narayan, he showed the Inspector—it is said—Halder's shop and other places, in fact made him self thoroughly useful, and on February 13th he made a second statement much more detailed than the first, just the sort of statement that the Police like to have from a man who is to be used as an approver. It is difficult to believe that in those ten days he was not given to understand that a pardon was going to be offered to him on the condition that he betrayed his friends. In my opinion, therefore, the second statement made by Anant must also be rejected as inadmissible. I may say, in passing, that the omission to examine the Pleader Prabodh Chandra Chatterjee seems matter for regret.

With the confessions or statements ruled out of consideration, there remains the evidence of Thandaram and Kedar, the two coolies, and of Lakhan Jana. The evidence of the coolies loses its value by the rejection of the second confession, and I think it may be ignored. Lakhan says he was employed as a servant in the house of Dhiraj's father-in-law at Bhadreswar, and he describes the actual making of the forged notes. His evidence is assailed as being that of an accomplice or at any rate, no better than that of an accomplice. If his story is true, there can be no doubt that he was placed in an extremely awkward position, a position which would be embarrassing even to a man of scrupulous integrity. But that fact does not release him from the suspicion that must attach to a man who sees a wrong act done, and holds his peace for many months, and then tells his tale without any signs of reluctance. I think it would be dangerous to say that his evidence is free from taint and, therefore, I hold that it needs corroboration. Another point against him is that, since he was brought back from his home in Orissa he has been living under the same roof as the Inspector, and it is the Inspector who secured him his present employment. Those are facts which render it likely that Lakhan is anxious to help the Police.

The result of this consideration of the evidence is that, while I hold it proved that charred fragments of forged notes were found, as alleged, in the house of Anant, I am unable to hold that his share in the manufacture of the notes has been established.

Turning to the case of Dhiraj, the evidence is that of Lakhan Jana, supplemented by the finding of a press or parts of press near his house and of a piece of paper in his house, and the correspondence with Anant. The statements made by Anant may be left out of account entirely. Of Lakhan I have already spoken: he needs corroboration as against Dhiraj just as much as against Anant. Now, there is no reason for doubting that parts of a press were found in a tank close to the house where Dhiraj was living in Bhadreswar, but the tank is accessible to others, and it seems that better hiding places might have been found. The paper in which the pearls were wrapped gives rise to suspicion, but I doubt whether more can be said than that. As for the correspondence with Anant, the most that can be said of it is, that it proves a certain measure of intimacy between the two men.

The result is that, as against Dhiraj I think that the evidence is inadequate: it raises grave suspicion but nothing more.

RAJBANSI V. EMPEROR.

In my judgment, the verdict of the Jury should be endorsed except in regard to the charge under section 489.C against Anant. I think the attention of the Jury was so much absorbed in the charge of general conspiracy, that they overlooked the fact that this charge rested on the evidence of a few witnesses, whose evidence is wholly unaffected by the criticisms to which the other evidence is open. I hold that the charred fragments of forged notes were found, as alleged, in the possession of Anant, and from the circumstances already set out it follows that he knew them to be forged and intended to use them as genuine.

The result is, while Dhiraj is acquitted on all charges in accordance with the verdict of the Jury, Anant Kumar Banerji is convicted of the charge under section 489 C, of the Indian Penal Code, and acquitted of the other charges under section 489 A. Anant is sentenced to undergo three years' rigorous imprisonment.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 241 OF 1920.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 112—Security proceedings—Notice to show cause, whether necessary—Failure to issue notice, effect of—Revision—Application admitted on certain grounds—Procedure.

Two persons were arrested under section 55 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the ground that they were reputed habitual thieves and house-breakers and were placed before a Magistrate who fixed a date for evidence, with the object of issuing a notice under section 112 of the Code and detained the accused in custody without issuing any notice. On the date fixed the Magistrate recorded the evidence given by the Police and treated it as given in the hearing under section 110, and, without giving the accused the slightest

Held, that the procedure of the Magistrate was wholly irregular and vitiated the proceedings. [p. 42, col. 1.]

Before a hearing under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code can by law take place, it is incumbent on the Magistrate, under section 112, to make an order setting forth the substance of the information which he has received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the period for which it is to be executed and the number, character and class of sureties, if any, required. Merely informing an accused person that he is a suspected thief is not sufficient, as, however substantial that expression may be as an offensive description of an individual, it gives the person alleged to be that character not the slightest intimation as to the grounds on which it is based. [p. 42, col. 2; p. 43, cols. 1 & 2]

Where a party applies for revision and obtains an order issuing notice to show cause, he should at the hearing confine himself to the grounds upon which that order was made. [p. 42, col. 2; p. 43, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Gorakhpur, dated the 19th of December 1919.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcolmson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—These proceedings must be set aside on the ground of irregularity. The charge was the usual one against several people, including the two applicants, Rajbansi and Siar, under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the alleged ground being that they were habitual thieves and house-breakers. There has been an appeal to the District Magistrate, who points out that these two men in particular are of comparatively recent appearance in this capacity and are entitled to more lenient treatment, but the point taken before me is a good one. The two applicants were arrested on the 9th of September under section 55. That arrest was lawful as the ground on which they were arrested was that they were "reputed habitual thieves and house breakers." They were then taken before the Sub Divisional Officer who, on the 9th of September, the same date as the report made of their arrest and of the grounds on which they had been arrested, fixed the 19th of September, for the production of evidence presumably with the object of issuing a notice under section 112. As the Magistrate seems doubtful about the procedure it is desirable to point out that section 112 requires him to make an order which is really a notice in writing setting forth the substance of the information which he has received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term and the number, character and class of sureties, if any, required, so that he has to receive substantial information in order to found his authority to issue a notice to show cause. It is only after he has done that that the actual hearing under section 110 can by law take place at all. In fixing the date, the 19th September, it looks as though the evidence of which he required production was the evidence the substance of which it was necessary to set forth in the notice because he had not got it on the 9th and he did not then purport to issue notice. He thereupon detained the applicants in custody from the 9th to the 19th without having issued any notice at all. That was wrong. The procedure in such cases is clearly indicated by the Act, but it is further emphasized by the case of Emperor v. Paiml Nai (1), where my brother Knox pointed out that a Magistrate should not detain a person under section 110 unless he has information upon which he can make the order required by section 112. When the 19th of September arrived the Magistrate made matters worse by not merely issuing the notice on that date—the notice had in fact been dated the 19th September—but he seems to have forgotten the object with which he had fixed the 19th and proceeded to treat the evidence which had been given by the Sub Inspector as the evidence in the hearing under section 110 and fixed a further date for the accused to produce their evidence. One result of that proceeding, which was clearly irregular, is that the accused, who had been kept in detention for ten days without any opportunity having been given to them, were suddenly called upon to conduct their case without the slightest warning or opportunity of obtaining legal assistance. The defence is just as much entitled to be heard and developed during the evidence for the prosecution as after the prosecution evidence is closed, so that there was double irregularity. I rather doubt whether the notice was a good one. It is impossible to lay down any standard to which such notices are to conform, but when the Legislature provided that a Magistrate should make an order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received, it certainly meant a great deal more than telling a man that he was a suspected thief, because, however substantial that expression may be as an offensive description of an individual, it gives the person alleged to be that character not the slightest intimation as to what are the grounds upon which it is based. If that notice is sufficient, all that would be necessary would be to call upon anybody in India to show cause on the mere statement that he was suspected by the Police to be an habitual thief; but the procedure clearly requires something in the nature of an indictment or charge containing substantial particulars indicating the grounds upon which the Police have given information to the Magistrate. On the other hand, I make this general observation that it may be of assistance to the Bar, at any rate in any case in which I am concerned, that where the real ground for complaint against the proceedings of the Court below does not appear in the grounds of an application for revision and the gentleman appearing for the person showing cause (in this case the Assistant Government Advocate) has been taken by surprise, I should certainly make no order until the person showing cause had an opportunity of investigating the ground which is urged in Court and of which he has had no previous notice. That is an ordinary business arrangement and it is clear that the Court ought not to make any order upon either party until they have had full opportunity of meeting the points in the case. In this application there was no reference whatever to the omission of the Magistrate under section 112 and the irregularity committed on the 19th of September, and, although it would be possible for anybody examining the record to discover it for himself, it is very often like looking for a needle in a bundle of hay, and if we had not found by the incontrovertible papers on the record that the matter was too clear for argument, I should have adjourned the case for Mr. Malcolmson to get an explanation from the Sub-Divisional Officer. In this case it is not necessary, but as a rule I think it a desirable practice, that parties applying in revision should be confined,

This application is allowed and the proceedings are set aside.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 484 OF 1920.

November 15, 1920.

Present:—Justice Sir B. K. Mallik, Kt.
and Mr. Justice Bucknill.

GAJADHAR LAL alias GAJO LAL—PETITIONER

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 234, 235 Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 408, 77 A—Charge under s. 408—Court, competency of, to try with this charge three charges under s. 477 A—Revision—Finding of fact—High Court, power of, to interfere.

Where a person is charged, under section 190, Penal Code, with criminal breach of trust committed in one year in respect of a lump sum of money, the Court is competent, by virtue of the provisions of sections 234 and 35, Criminal Procedure Code, to try with this charge three charges for an offence under section 477 A, Penal Code, if committed within the period of one year and forming part of the same transaction as the offence under section 408. [p. 43, col. 2]

The High Court will not in revision interfere with a finding of fact which is within the competence of the lower Court. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated the 2nd September 1920, dismissing the appeal of the petitioner from the conviction and sentence by the Assistant Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated the 4th August 1920.

FACTS.—The charge framed under section 408, Indian Penal Code, was, that between Magh and Bhadon 1326 at Ghughuldih Gajadhar Lal, being a Patwari, Tehsildar of Musammatt Babadai, and in such capacity entrusted with the collection of rents from tenants on her behalf, collected Rs. 2,522-14-7½ but in the counter-foils of the rent receipts he dishonestly showed as realised only Rs. 1,301-11-0 and thereby committed criminal breach of trust with respect to Rs. 1,222-3-7½.

The charge under section 477A, Indian Penal Code, gave details of three such omissions (included in the gross sum mentioned in the charge under section 408, Indian Penal Code) from counter-foils of rent receipts.

An objection as to the legality of the trial was raised before the Sessions Judge on appeal and was disposed off as under,—

“A preliminary objection is taken that the trial has been vitiated by a multiplicity of charges, and I am referred to the rulings of the Calcutta High Court quoted in Raman Behary Das v. Emperor (1). In that case three charges under section 409, Indian Penal Code, were joined with three charges under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code. But in the present case there is no such combination. The charge under section 408, Indian Penal Code, relating to the gross sum embezzled is to be deemed as a charge of one offence only, under section 222 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. And the triple charge under section 477A seems to be good under section 234 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. The three offences alleged under section 477A are a selection from the series of offences alleged under section 408, Indian Penal Code; and it is perfectly legal to frame two charges about the same three offences. I consider this preliminary objection to be worthless.”

Mr. G. O. Pal, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The petitioner has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 4 years under section 408, Indian Penal Code, for having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 1,221, which was due to his employer, Musammatt Babadai, on account of rent collected from her tenants for the year 1326 Fashi. There was a second indictment under section 477A for having falsified the account-books which it was the duty of the petitioner to keep. The indictment under section 477A relates to three specific entries in the counter foil rent receipts prescribed by law for the realisation of rent from tenants.

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 729, 41 O. 722; 18 O. W. N. 1152; 15 Or. L. J. 153.

GAJADHAR LAL v. EMPEROR.

It is alleged that, for the year 1326, the net sum which was realised by the petitioner was Rs. 2,522-14-7. The petitioner gave rent-receipts to the tenants showing a payment of the full demand in various instalments which were set out in the rent-receipts, but in the counter-foils which were kept in the petitioner's office only some of the instalments were entered, and by adding the amounts therein shown one would be led to imagine that the petitioner actually realised and gave receipts for a sum of Rs. 1,301-11 0 only.

The case for the prosecution is that the petitioner has dishonestly misappropriated the balance of Rs. 1,221-3-7½.

In 1327 a theft occurred in the Toshakhana of the petitioner's employer. The petitioner was suspected and in the course of a search at his house and at his office a number of account-books were discovered in his possession among which were the counter-foil receipt books showing the false entries which are the subject of the charge under section 477A. The present prosecution was then begun upon the complaint of a servant of Musammat Babadai with the result that the petitioner was sent up for trial and was convicted in respect of both sets of charges by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Monghyr. There was an appeal to the Sessions Judge who confirmed the findings of the Trial Court and declined to reduce the sentence. The petitioner now moves this Court in revision and urges that the trial is bad and that the conviction should be set aside.

It is necessary to observe that there was another accused sent up along with the petitioner who, though found guilty by one of the Assessors was acquitted by the Trial Court. With regard to the petitioner both the Assessors, were of opinion that he was guilty of the offence under section 408, Indian Penal Code. As to the charge under section 477A, one of the Assessors was of opinion that he was guilty, while the other was of opinion that the case had not been proved.

The learned Vakil for the petitioner attacks the conviction mainly on the ground that there was an error of procedure. He contends that there was a fatal misjoinder of charges and that the petitioner having been prejudiced he must either be acquitted or a re-trial ordered. He relies upon the case of Raman Behary Das v. Emperor (1) and on Kasi Viswanathan v. Emperor (2). It is urged that three charges of falsification of accounts in regard to different sums upon different dates cannot, though covering a period of one year, be joined with a charge of a criminal breach of trust, because the offences are distinct and separate offences for which there must be separate trials and that neither the provisions of section 234 or 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code bring the case within the exception contemplated by section 233. Now the facts of the cases above cited were totally different and it is quite clear that in the case before us there has been no error of the procedure in Courts below. Here there was a charge of criminal breach of trust committed in the year 1326 in respect of a lump sum. By reason of the provisions of sections 234, 235 it was competent to the Court to try with this charge three charges for an offence under section 477A, Indian Penal Code, if committed within the period of one year and forming part of the same transaction as the offence under section 408. The learned Vakil contends that the acts constituting the offence under section 477A were not committed in the same transaction, but I am of a contrary opinion. There was a community of object and design between the two sets of acts and it is clear that the petitioner made the three false entries in order to assist and conceal his fraud in the matter of the embezzlement. Each of the three false entries was intimately connected with the act of criminal breach of trust and there was, in my opinion, no misjoinder.

The first ground, therefore, for attacking the conviction fails.

The next point is, that there has been a miscarriage of justice by reason of the inferences which the learned Courts below have drawn from the evidence. It is said that the petitioner had in his possession certain Sikha or account-papers in which the various sums realised from each tenant were entered and which, if produced, would have shown that the rent-receipts granted to the tenants were correct, and it is urged that the omission to enter all the instalments in the counter-foils was nothing more than an act of negligence on the petitioner's part.

(2), 30 M. 328; 7 M. L. J. 141; 2 M. L. T. 177; 5 Cr. L. J. 31.

GAJADHAR LAL V. EMPLOYER.

Now in regard to these Siaha papers the learned Sessions Judge finds that there were some Siaha papers in the petitioner's possession, but he also finds that they were never handed over to the petitioner's employer. That is a finding of fact at which the learned Judge was competent to arrive upon the evidence and it cannot be said that he has committed any error of law in believing the petitioner's employer and in disbelieving that part of the evidence which is inconsistent with her story.

The other finding in regard to which the learned Judge has been attacked relates to the petitioner's employer's account books, the petitioner's case is that he has made payment to his employer fully covering the amounts which forms the subject of the charge of criminal breach of trust and that his employer has books of account which, if produced, would clearly establish his innocence. The learned Judge finds that no such account-books existed and he draws the inference that the petitioner has in fact embezzled the money. Here, again, the inference drawn by the learned Sessions Judge is one of fact which it was competent for him to draw, and I am not able to say that there has been any error of law on his part. There is a clear finding by both Courts that there is a discrepancy of Rs. 1,221-3-7½ between the rent-receipts and their counter foils, that this sum was collected by the petitioner and that it never reached the hands of Musummat Bibidai.

The Courts below have chosen to disbelieve the story told by the petitioner and the witness who deposed in his favour and to believe the evidence of the prosecution, and in revision we see no reason for interfering with that finding.

The only question that remains is, whether in law the offence of criminal breach of trust has been made out. If that offence is established it is not disputed that a conviction under section 477A must also follow. Now the learned Vakil for the petitioner maintains that, although there might be reason for proceeding in a Civil Court for a claim upon a civil liability, there is no ground for holding that there was that criminal or dishonest intention on the part of the petitioner which is necessary for an offence under the Indian Penal Code. Here, again, the question is one of fact and if we agree, as we do agree, with the findings of the Courts below there is an end to the petitioner's case.

Finally, there is an appeal by the learned Vakil for reduction of sentence. We think, on a consideration of the whole circumstances, that the sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment for each offence is perhaps too severe. We reduce the sentence to one of two years rigorous imprisonment on each charge and direct the sentence to run concurrently.

BICKNILL, J.—His Lordship Mr. Justice Mullick has dealt with this matter very fully and it is hardly necessary for me to add anything, but I should like to say one or two words. Counsel for the petitioner raised really four points. The first was as to the propriety of the frame of the charges. I think, however, that the cases which were quoted are easily distinguishable from the present one. Here we have a general charge under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code relating to lump sum of money embezzled and then we have three counts under one charge, under section 477A of the Code, each count referring to a particular falsification of accounts, that is to say, in this case omissions to enter accounts in books these three instances refer to part of the general embezzlement covered by the previous charge under section 408. I have never heard it argued that under the Indian Penal Code such a framing of charges is improper. On the contrary, I have often seen charges framed like this one and I do not remember that I have ever heard an objection of this sort taken against them. The cases, on the other hand, which have been quoted, show, I think, that it is embarrassing to an accused person if several disconnected, that is to say, more than three disconnected, instances of such more or less cognate charges as embezzlement and falsification of accounts relating to the same set of transactions are joined in one indictment. Here, however, it is impossible to imagine how the accused could be in any way embarrassed by the form in which the charges were framed.

As to the second point, the questions raised were as to whether the lady has kept private books of account and as to the existence and importance of certain rough accounts kept by the applicant. As has been pointed out by Mr. Justice Mullick, those questions are merely questions of facts or of inferences drawn from facts, it may be that the Court below took a wrong view. it may be that they did not, but, at any rate, it is impossible, I think, for this Court to say that the views to which they came regarding these two points were decisions to which they could not have reasonably come upon the evidence.

Then, thirdly, it is contended that there was no proof that the accused has any mens rea i. e., any intention, when, if he did, he retained this money, of permanently misappropriating it or converting it to his own use. Now, there again it seems to me quite clear that on the evidence which was before the Courts it was quite open to them to come to the conclusion that there was proof that the accused intended to deal with the money dishonestly.

As to the question of sentence I agree that the sentence was too severe and should be reduced as stated by his Lordship Mr. Justice Mullick.

In a suit upon a hand-note executed by R. for himself and his brother L, R appeared and resisted the claim and the plaintiff gave up his claim against him. L did not appear and the Court, finding the claim true, passed an ex parte decree against him. After this, upon an application by R it was found that the paper on which the note was written was issued on a date subsequent to the date of the note, whereupon R applied for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff: the Court granted the application without notice to the plaintiff and at the same time called upon him to show cause why the ex parte decree should not be vacated. Plaintiff moved the High Court to quash the order directing his prosecution:

Held, that, in the face of the finding that the claim on the hand-note was true, the order directing the prosecution of the plaintiff without deciding the genuineness or otherwise of the document in the presence of the plaintiff and R., the order was wholly illegal and without jurisdiction, and that, although no notice is essential in a proceeding under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, yet, in the circumstances of the present case, notice was necessary, and the order having been passed without notice, it was wholly invalid. Civil criminal revisions against the order of the Munsif, Puri, directing the prosecution of the petitioners by his order, dated the 6th July 1920 and 7th August 1920.

JUDGMENT.—In Civil Criminal Revision No. 14 Rakhal Mohan Ray Churamani is the petitioner. In Civil Criminal Revision No. 15, Akshay Kumar Ray Churamani and Dina Bandhu Mahanti are the petitioners.

The aforesaid petitioners have been directed by the Munsif of Puri to be prosecuted under sections 193 and 467/471, Indian Penal Code, for offenses said to have been committed in connection with a hand-note produced in the Court of the Munsif in Suit No. 4 of 1920. The petitioner, Akshay Kumar Ray, was the plaintiff in that suit and the petitioner, Rakhal Mohan Ray, and his younger brother, Lalit Mohan Ray, were defendants Nos. 1 and 2 respectively. The plaintiff is the cousin of the defendants. The petitioner, Dina Bandhu Mahanti, is the gumashita of Akshay Kumar Ray.

The hand-note in question purports to have been executed by Rakhal Mohan Ray for himself and his brother Lalit Mohan Ray on the 27th December 1916, for Rs. 510. The defendant No. 2 was in Jail on that date having been convicted in 1913 and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The defendant No. 1, Rakhal Mohan Ray, received the summons for himself and his brother Lalit Mohan Ray. Rakhal Mohan Ray, defendant No. 1, did not appear in the case. Lalit Mohan Ray appeared in Court and resisted the claim of the plaintiff challenging the genuineness of the hand-note in question and disputing his liability on the ground that the money borrowed was not necessary for the payment of Government revenue or to support his wife during his imprisonment as she was living in her father's house.

At the trial, on the 15th May 1920, the plaintiff gave up his claim against Lalit Mohan Ray, and obtained an ex parte decree against Rakhal Mohan Ray only. He examined his gomashta, Dina Bandhu Mahanti, the petitioner, to prove that the hand-note was given for consideration.

On the 17th May 1920 Lalit Mohan made an application before the Munsif to send the paper on which the hand-note was written to the Controller of Government papers for his opinion if the paper was in circulation on the date the hand note is purported to have been executed. The reply received from the Controller showed that the cartridge paper was issued later than the date when the hand-note was written.

On the 2nd June 1920 Lalit applied under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff.

On 6th July 1920, the Munsif passed an order under section 476 of the Code directing prosecution of the plaintiff and his gomashta under sections 193 and 467/471, Indian Penal Code, and issued a Civil Rule upon the plaintiff to show cause why the ex parte decree obtained by him should not be vacated as being illegal and fraudulent.

In the meantime, the plaintiff moved the High Court to quash the order for prosecution. The criminal proceeding was stayed by the order of this Court pending the disposal of the Civil Rule. In the Civil Rule, the plaintiff showed cause on the 2nd August 1920. On that very day, Rakhal Mohan Ray filed a petition admitting that he borrowed Rs. 510 in cash from the plaintiff on 27th December 1916 and that he wrote the hand note with his own hand some months after and put the 27th December 1916 as the date of the hand-note. Notice was issued upon Lalit Mohan for his attendance, but he did not appear. The Munsif did not accept the explanation and held that the claim was not a true one and that the hand-note was forged and fraudulent. He, however, did not disturb the decree as the defendant No. 1 did not dispute it, but in that proceeding he directed the prosecution of defendant No. 1 also under the aforesaid sections. The plaintiff and his gomashta, therefore, renew their application to this Court for quashing the order of the Munsif directing their prosecution. The defendant No. 1 has also moved against the order of the Munsif, dated the 7th August of 1920, by a separate application. Hence the aforesaid two Rules.

As regards the application of the plaintiff and his gomashta in Civil Criminal Rule No. 15 of 1920, the learned Assistant Government Advocate raised a preliminary objection. He says that the present application is barred by the order of this Court in Civil Criminal Revision No. 12 of 1920, dated the 27th July 1920 dismissing the first application for revoking the sanction. I do not think there is much force in this objection, inasmuch as the High Court did not go into the matter at that stage because the Civil Rule issued by the Munsif against the plaintiff was then pending and the plaintiff might have obtained the relief and it was possible that the Munsif would have come to the conclusion that the claim was a true one and the hand-note genuine and would have himself discharged his former order.

Coming now to the merits of the application, it appears that the order for prosecution of the plaintiff and his gomashta was passed on the 6th July without any notice to them. The decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff on the 15th May. Lalit Mohan's application for sanction was made two days later on the 17th May and on receipt of the report from the Controller of papers the Munsif straightway directed the prosecution of the plaintiff and his gomashta on the 6th July. The decree passed by the Court in favour of the plaintiff concluded the civil suit before the Munsif. There was no finding of the Munsif upon which he could base his order for the prosecution of the plaintiff and his gomashta. On the other hand, his decree was to the effect that the claim of the plaintiff based upon the hand-note was true. It was wholly illegal, verging upon want of jurisdiction, on the part of the Munsif to direct the prosecution of the petitioner merely upon the report of the Controller without deciding the genuineness or otherwise of the document in the presence of the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 who were the parties to the decree. The Munsif issued the Civil Rule calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the decree should not be set aside. This should have been decided first before the order of the 6th July could be passed. Apparently, this was the view of the learned Judges of this Court in Civil Criminal Rule No. 12 of 1920, who directed the plaintiff to go to the Civil Court to seek redress in the proceeding which related to the validity or otherwise of the decree. The order of the 6th July 1920 to my mind is without jurisdiction. Although no notice is essential in a proceeding for an order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, yet, in the circumstances of each case, it is to be seen whether the party affected by the order was entitled to any notice, and whether, in the circumstances of the case, notice was necessary as in the present case the order passed under section 476 will be irregular, if not wholly invalid and illegal.

Again, the order of the 7th August does not direct the prosecution of the plaintiff and his gomashita. It has already been held that the order of the 6th July was invalid and ultra vires. There is, therefore, no valid order for the prosecution of the plaintiff and his gomashita Akshay Kumar Ray and Dina Bandhu, two of the petitioners. Again, the decree has not been disturbed. In other words, the claim of the plaintiff based upon the hand-note has been affirmed. It seems to me anomalous that the plaintiff's decree should stand and side by side he should be prosecuted for having brought an unjust and fraudulent claim. If the claim was fraudulent, the Munsif ought to have set aside the decree in spite of the defendant's admission of the claim, for fraud vitiates the most solemn proceedings of a Court of Justice and the Court coming to know of it must vacate its decree. No Court can be permitted to be party to a fraudulent decree. The order of the 7th August is, therefore, unintelligible and inconsistent.

Coming to the case of defendant No. 1, Rakhal Mohan Ray, he has been directed to be prosecuted by an order of the 7th August passed in the Civil Rule issued against the plaintiff to show cause why the ex parte decree against the defendant No. 1 should not be set aside. No Rule was issued upon him and he was not called upon to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. He appeared in pursuance of the Rule against the plaintiff and filed a verified petition admitting the plaintiff's claim and explaining the circumstances under which the hand-note was executed in 1917 with respect to the loan taken in 1916, the hand-note bearing the date of the actual loan. It is impossible to conceive that the defendant would suffer a decree to be passed against him for a large sum of Rs. 510 when in fact the loan was not taken by him. It is possible that he wanted to bind his younger brother Lalit Mohan Ray also on the ground that the loan was for family necessities, he being the head member of the family. It would have been otherwise if Rakhal Mohan Ray, defendant No. 1, had forged the signature of Lalit Mohan Ray upon the hand-note. He signed it for himself and as guardian of his younger brother Lalit Mohan Ray. Lalit Mohan Ray objected, and the plaintiff finding it difficult to prove the family necessity referred the matter to the panches and upon their advice he contented himself with obtaining a decree against defendant No. 1 alone. The learned Munsif has disbelieved his explanation. As a matter of fact, he says that it does not concern him so long as the allegation in the plaint is untrue. I cannot look upon the case from that point of view. If the explanation of the defendant No. 1 is true, there can be no prosecution with respect to the hand-note in question, for in that case it will not be a forgery at all.

Now the Munsif bases his order upon the ground that there was a conspiracy between the plaintiff, his gomashita and the defendant No. 1 to obtain a decree against Lalit, the defendant No. 2. There is no material upon the record to justify this supposition. Even if it were true, it is impossible to obtain any evidence in the case for the prosecution. These three persons connected with the execution of the hand-note and the advance of Rs. 510 to defendant No. 1 are accused in the case. There is no witness to prove that the transaction was a false one and that no money was advanced by the plaintiff to defendant No. 1. Lalit admittedly was not present at the transaction. It is the case of no body that Lalit took the money. Defendant No. 1 takes the entire responsibility of having taken the money. He simply wanted to bind his brother on the ground of family necessity. Lalit Nohan's evidence is that of a negative character. Besides, he did not appear when called upon by the Munsif in the Civil Rule. There is, therefore, absolute want of evidence in the case and there is thus no chance of successful prosecution in the present case. It will not be sufficient to show that the cartridge paper upon which the hand-note was written came into existence a few months later than the date when the document was written. There is nothing to controvert the case of the defense.

For all these reasons, I would set aside the order of the Munsif of the 6th July as well as of the 7th August and make both the Rules absolute.

APPLICATION IN FIRST APPEAL NO. 198
OF 1920.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Criminal proceedings initiated by Civil Court—Appeal on same facts pending in High Court—Criminal proceedings, whether should be adjourned.

Where criminal proceedings are initiated by a Civil Court under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the fact that an appeal upon the same facts is pending in the High Court cannot be regarded as a valid reason in law for the adjournment of the criminal proceedings till the decision of the civil appeal. [p. 429, cols 1 & 2.]

Mr. S. O. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—I have before me two applications which have been preferred as Miscellaneous Applications in First Appeal No. 198 of 1920. The unusual nature of the applications is apparent as much from the headings as from the actual contents of these papers. The names of the parties to the first appeal are, of course, given, but the miscellaneous application as it describes itself is made in terms as against the King-Emperor opposite party, and notice has under the orders of this Court gone to the Government Advocate and to no one else. An appearance has been entered on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent to the first appeal, but I do not think I should be justified in taking any action upon this fact, seeing that notice was not ordered to go to him. The two applications are connected in this way. Raj Kunwar Singh is the defendant-appellant in First Appeal No. 198 of 1920 which has been admitted and is pending in this Court, the other applicant Sunder Lal is described in the affidavits before me as a Faisakar on behalf of the defendant in the Court below, and it is stated that he was allowed to be examined by the plaintiff during the proceedings in that Court in connection with a certain matter. The suit in the Court below was decided in the plaintiff's favour and one of the points in controversy was as to the genuineness of two documents, the production of which in the Trial Court took place on the application of the defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge in deciding the suit has held those documents to be forgeries. He has now taken action under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code and has issued notice to the defendant Raj Kunwar Singh, and also to Sunder Lal, to show cause why their prosecution should not be ordered for offences punishable under sections 471 and 471 109 of the Indian Penal Code. The prayer in each of the two applications before me is that these proceedings be stayed pending the decision of the appeal by the defendant to this Court. It is not suggested that a stay order of this nature could be obtained under any provision of the Civil Procedure Code. The established practice of this Court, resting upon a course of judicial decisions, which treat any application in revision against an order of a Subordinate Civil Court passed under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code as an application in civil revision, governed by the provision of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, makes it impossible to regard these applications as governed by anything in the Code of Criminal Procedure. I can only regard the applications, therefore, as invoking the general powers of superintendence of this Court over the proceedings of all Courts subordinate to it. I am not prepared to say that it would not be within the jurisdiction of this Court, under those powers, to direct a Presiding Officer of any Civil Court subordinate to it to adjourn for a time any proceeding, of whatsoever nature, which he might have initiated by virtue of any powers exercisable by him as the Presiding Officer of such Court. In any case, as has rightly been argued on behalf of the applicants, a mere expression of opinion by this Court that the proceedings in question might well be suspended would probably be sufficient to give the applicants what they desire. While, therefore, I do not think that applications of this kind ought to be encouraged, I am not prepared to go back on the order of the Judge of this Court who admitted the applications and to say that it is outside the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain them.

The question then arises whether, on the facts stated in the affidavits before me, supplemented as these have been by extracts which have been read to me from a certified copy of the judgment delivered by the Trial Court in the civil suit out of which the first appeal arises, it is advisable or expedient that any order or direction should be issued to the learned Subordinate Judge in this matter. On the general question of the stay of criminal proceedings when these, on the face of them, raise a question of fact which is still under adjudication by a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction as, for instance, by this Court in first appeal, a valuable note is to be found in Appendix S. to the Edition of the Criminal Procedure Code by Mr. G. P. Boys, Advocate of this Court. The tendency has been, whenever possible, to secure a final adjudication by the Civil Court before the actual trial of the accused persons in a Criminal Court, I do not think, however, that any direct authority can be quoted for interfering with proceedings by a Subordinate Civil Court under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code merely on the ground that an appeal upon the same facts is pending before this Court. The general intention of the Legislature undoubtedly is that action under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code should ordinarily be taken by the Presiding Officer of the Civil Court before which the alleged offence has been committed, and should be taken as promptly as possible upon the termination of the suit in the said Court. Having regard to the present state of the pending file of this Court, it seems probable enough that an order granting these applications would result in the stay of the proceedings initiated by the learned Subordinate Judge for a period of at least two years and probably in those proceedings being continued by some successor-in-office of that gentleman. This seems to me altogether inexpedient. In the present case a further question has been suggested whether there are not documents which may be required in the course of the criminal trial, not at present on the record of the civil suit, which may nevertheless require to be brought as speedily as possible into the safe custody of the Court of the Subordinate Judge. This could be done as part of the preliminary enquiry under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and an order staying the proceedings under the section would interfere with its being done.

A curious difficulty has, however, been brought to my notice in the course of the argument, based upon a reported decision of this Court in Mathura Kunwar v. Durga Kunwar (1). On the face of it, that decision seems to lay down that, if criminal proceedings are once instituted upon an order by the learned Subordinate Judge as the result of the proceedings now initiated, the fact that a first appeal is pending in this Court would not be regarded as a valid reason in law for the adjournment of those criminal proceedings, reference being made to section 344 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If so, it would almost appear as if a postponement of the criminal prosecution, should this appear desirable in the interests of justice, could only be ordered before the proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code came to a termination in an order directing the prosecution of the accused person or persons. I am obliged, however, to the Appendix to Mr. G. P. Boys' book, to which I have already referred, for a note which I have no doubt is based upon an examination of the actual record of the case in the course of which the decision above referred to was pronounced, this shows that a way was found out of the difficulty. As I have heard the parties at length on the general question of the proper procedure which should be followed, or directed to be followed, in connection with this matter, I think it just as well to express my opinion that a course of action similar to that suggested in Mr. Boys' note might well be followed in the present case.

I decline to interfere with the pending proceedings to which these applications refer and both these applications accordingly stand dismissed.

When the accused persons come before a Magistrate it will be open to them to move this Court, which undoubtedly has, under the Criminal Procedure Code, itself very large powers over Criminal Courts of subordinate jurisdiction, to direct a temporary postponement of the prosecution pending further action in this Court. The further action which I suggest should take the form of moving this Court to expedite the hearing of the first civil appeal in connection with which these applications have been made. Assuming that the defendant-appellant shows all possible diligence in the matter, and that this Court is prepared to accept the pendency of a criminal prosecution as a valid reason for expediting the hearing of the appeal, there is no adequate reason why the appeal should not be disposed of in such reasonable time as to admit of the stay of the criminal proceedings until its disposal. If it should appear otherwise to this Court, when the question of expediting the hearing of the first appeal is raised, then, on the principles laid down by the learned Judge who decided the case of Mathura Kunwar v. Durga Kunwar (1), the matter will have to proceed to trial in the Criminal Courts, even though the question in issue may be one requiring legal reconsideration on the part of this Court in the first civil appeal. I have had to consider the question of the costs of this application and I feel myself in a somewhat unfortunate position, in view of the facts already noticed, I am really not able to allow the plaintiff-respondent to the appeal, the costs which have been certified on his behalf, upon his entering appearance in this matter without having been called upon to do so; the learned Government Advocate, who would undoubtedly have been entitled to his costs, has not been able to certify them, I simply dismiss these applications, making no order as to costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 145—Possession, decree for, by Civil Court—Adverse party in possession—Criminal Court, order by, in favour of such party to continue in possession—High Court, whether will interfere.

Although a Criminal Court is bound to respect the decree of a Civil Court and delivery of possession and cannot go behind the decree, yet when, in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is shown by evidence that, notwithstanding such a decree, the party affected adversely thereby has continued in possession, and the Criminal Court has declared that that party should continue in possession until evicted in due course of law, the High Court will not interfere. JUDGMENT.—This is an application against an order passed under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure declaring the possession of the first party over the land in dispute, 1 bigha, 16 kathas. This land originally belonged to one Biswa.

SHEW KHELAON RAM KALWAR v. NAYAN BEPARI.

nath Chondhari who sold it under a registered kabala for Rs. 100 (Exhibit 5) to Babu Sri Mohan Thakur whose estate is now under the management of the Court of Wards. Sri Mohan Thakur turned the land into orchard and included it into his adjoining garden making all into one large block. This was recognised as a separate holding for which rent was paid by the first party to the landlord. It was separately recorded in the survey and the number in Khasra is 47. In 1911, the landlord brought rent suit against the original tenant Biswanath for Khasra No. 748 and included the disputed land in Khasra No. 47 also for rents due for 1315 to 1318 Fasli (1908 to 1911). This period is long after the purchase by the first party in 1905 and his recognition as a tenant of Khasra No. 47. Rent-decree was obtained and in execution thereof both Khasras Nos. 748 and 47 were purchased on 23th of October 1918, delivery of possession being effected on the 6th of March 1918. The present dispute arose in May 1920 when the second party wanted to construct a Machan on the disputed land. The Court below has held that, in spite of the rent decree and the possession delivered in execution thereof, the first party continued to be in possession and hence declared that party to remain in possession until evicted therefrom in course of law. The order is challenged on the ground that the Court below was wrong in not giving effect to the Civil Court decree and delivery of possession. There is no doubt that the Criminal Court is bound to respect the Civil Court decree and delivery of possession and cannot go behind it and in certain cases the Criminal Court has been held to recognise the delivery of possession even as against persons not parties to the Civil Court decree, but in all those cases the parties disputing the delivery of possession by the Civil Court derived their title from the judgment-debtor or the decree was obtained in a representative character [Doulat Koer v. Rameswari Koeri (1), Kunja Behari Das v. Khetra Pal Sing (2)]. In other words, the Civil Court sale must have passed the interest of the persons not parties thereto. This would have been so in the present case if the party's purchase of 1905 was not recognised by the landlord. In the present case the sale was recognised and a separate khata (holding) was created in favour of the first party. The landlord ought to have made the first party vendee a party to the civil suit. His interest in the land in dispute, therefore, did not pass under the sale. Atul Ohandra Mandal v. Srinath Laik (3).

Again, the Court below has upon evidence held that, in spite of the dakhal dahani in March 1919, the 1st party continued to be in possession of the property up to the present time. This concludes the contention of the petitioner (second party). The petition is accordingly rejected.

The provisions of section 137 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are imperative. first party in a proceeding under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, to show cause why the proceeding should not be revived. I applied for the removal of a hide godown belonging to the opposite party which was causing a great nuisance. The preliminary order was made and the opposite party appeared and showed cause. The Magistrate, without taking any evidence, on the report of the Assistant Commissioner dropped the proceedings. I submit it is obligatory to take evidence in cases under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code. Refers to Sarajbasini Devi v. Sripati Oharan Chowdhury (1). That case is exactly on all fours with the present case. In Upendra Nath Mandal v. Rampal (2) it has been laid down that the provisions of section 137, Criminal Procedure Code, are mandatory and even the consent of parties does not dispense with the obligation with the duty of Court in the taking of evidence. Refers to Srinath Roy v. Ainadi Halder (3).

Mr. Syed Muhammad Saadullah, for the Opposite Party.—My submission is that, under section 137, Criminal Procedure Code, it is the duty of the first party to apply for and summon witnesses. He could himself have got examined as in a summons case under section 244, Criminal Procedure Code. I submit a Court cannot of its motion summon witnesses and take evidence on the complaint of a person who does not at all care to prove his complaint. The Court in such a case cannot but drop the proceedings.

Babu Hemenra Kumar Das replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Lakhimpore and the opposite party to show cause why the order dropping proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, should not be set aside and the case proceeded with according to law.

The opposite party has appeared to show cause.

The petitioner before us complained against the opposite party that a hide godown belonging to him was causing a great nuisance in the locality and prayed that it might be directed to be removed. The learned Magistrate thereupon made a conditional order under section 133. The opposite party was served with notice to show cause and he showed cause. Thereupon the Deputy Commissioner directed the Assistant Commissioner to make an inquiry at his own convenience and report. On receiving the report of the latter, the Deputy Commissioner made the following order:—"Read the Assistant Commissioner's report. This shows that there is no ground for an order under section 133, Criminal procedure Code. Rule discharged."

We think that this order ought not to have been made without taking evidence as directed by section 137 of the Code. The provisions of that section are imperative. The section runs as follows:—"If he appears and shows cause against the order, the Magistrate shall take evidence in the matter" as in a summons case. Now, clause (2) of the section lays down that, if the Magistrate is satisfied that the order is not reasonable and proper, no further proceedings shall be taken in the case. But before the Magistrate can make an order under clause (2) it is clear that he must take evidence in the matter as directed by clause (1). We may refer to the case of Sarajbasini Devi v. Sripati Oharan Chowdhury (1) and also to the case of Upendra Nath Mandal v. Rampal (2).

It is contended on behalf of the opposite party that the petitioner does not appear to have applied to the Magistrate for examining witnesses. But, evidently, he had no opportunity of adducing evidence before him. The Deputy Commissioner, on receipt of the report of the Assistant Commissioner, at once dropped the proceedings.

The order complained of must, therefore, be set aside and the case sent back to the Deputy Commissioner in order that he may proceed according to law.

Order set aside;

entertainable.

Inasmuch as a preliminary decree in a partition suit is not a decree which can be executed, an application for the purpose of actually effecting a partition and that a final decree be prepared, is not an application for execution the limitation for making which is governed by Article 141 of Schedule
I to the Limitation Act; such an application is an application in the suit to which the law of limitation does not apply. [p. 434, col. 1.]

In a partition suit a plea on the ground of inconvenience, not urged in the Courts below cannot be urged in second appeal. [p. 434, col. 2.]

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to partition a dwelling-house situate in a village along with its chabutra, as the latter is only an appurtenance to the dwelling-house, and as no question of the division of a ground-site at all arises in the case. [p. 434, col.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard Counsel in this case and have decided that the appeal must be dismissed. There is no ground upon which the defendants appellants are entitled to succeed here.

The facts may be briefly stated as follows:
—In the year 1906 a suit was brought by Musammât Waris Fatima against members of her family for partition of certain family property consisting of a dwelling-house. On the 15th of February 1907 a preliminary decree was passed by which the shares of the parties were defined. The lady was given a share of 7/12ths. It is admitted that afterwards by reason of an appeal to this Court—which was decided on the 20th of August 1909, the lady's share was increased to one of 1-12th (sic). Nothing appears to have been done with reference to the case until the 10th of March 1916 when an application was put in before the Trial Court in order that proceedings might be continued and that a final decree in partition might be prepared. The case was delayed for a good while, but eventually an amin was appointed to make a division of the property. The final decree has now been prepared and the property has been allotted by the Trial Court. An appeal against the final decree was taken to the lower Court and has been decided against the present defendants-appellants. They come here in second appeal and various pleas have been raised, the first of which to be noticed is a plea of limitation.

The argument here is this. The preliminary decree, which was finally passed by this Court, was passed on the 20th of August 1909. No application was made to the Trial Court until the 10th March 1916 and it is claimed that that application was beyond time by reason of the provisions of Article 181 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. The lower Court repelled this contention and its decision, in my opinion, was a perfectly correct one.
The application was not in any sense an application in execution for there was in existence no decree which was capable of execution. A preliminary decree in a partition suit is not a decree which can be executed. The application, therefore, was an application in the suit and, so far as I am aware, there is no law of limitation which can be applied to an application of this nature. Various cases have been cited before me but the matter seems to me to be concluded by a judgment of the Calcutta
High Court reported as Dwarka Nath Misser
v. Barinda Nath Misser (1). In the concluding portion of the judgment reported at page 434
the Bench observed as follows:—

"Having in view the principles which underlie the case to which we have just referred, there can be no doubt that no formal application need have been made by the plaintiff to the suit in which the order of the 10th of March 1885 was passed for the purpose of effecting a partition of the property, which was the subject-matter of the suit. The Court was bound upon any application, oral or otherwise, to proceed with the suit, and to make a final decree in it, after appointing a Commissioner for the purpose of effecting a partition of the property. The same view was adopted in another case decided by this Court on the 4th of December 1894, and, following this decision, we think there can be no limitation to the application which was made by the plaintiff on the 1st of August 1891."

(1) 22 C. 425; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 284.

KAMINI KESHORE SEN v. PARBARTYA TIPPERAH RAJ.

On the same principle there can be no limitation to the application which was made in this case on the 10th of March 1916. The plea of limitation, therefore, fails.

The next point of law which is argued relates to a certain portion of the premises in dispute which is styled a chabutra. The Court in the final decree has made a certain division or allotment of this chabutra and the point raised here is that this allotment was made without jurisdiction. A reference is made to the judgment of the learned District Judge who dealt with this case at its preliminary stage in appeal and it is argued that, from the language of the judgment there, it is plain that it was not intended that there should, in these partition proceedings, be any division of land as distinct from houses. What I understand the judgment to mean is this, that the Court had before it a case in which the parties were seeking a division of the family dwelling-house. The learned Judge has laid down that there was not in these proceedings to be any division of the ground site occupied by the premises. It is not, however, proper to argue that, in view of the language which was employed in the judgment just referred to, the Court below has had no jurisdiction to make any division or allotment of the chabutra. The chabutra is, in my opinion, an appurtenance to the dwelling house which was the subject matter of the partition and I am satisfied that the Court below was perfectly correct in holding that the expression "house" included the chabutra. There is no question of the division of a ground-site at all. The chabutra is one of the appurtenances for the convenience of the house and was, therefore, liable to division like any other part of the premises.

The only other matter which has been touched on second appeal is with regard to the allotment of a certain latrine. In second appeal I cannot listen to any pleas which are urged upon the ground of inconvenience. It may be very inconvenient to the appellants here that the latrine should have been allowed to one of the other parties in the case, but that is a matter with which I have got nothing to do here. I am concerned only with questions of law and no question of law arises in connection with the allotment of this particular portion of the premises.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100 c—Defective procedure, what amounts to—Defendant not appearing before Commissioner, whether can object to Commissioner's report.

The procedure of a Court is substantially defective within the meaning of clause c) of section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code, if a) it rejects the report of a Commissioner without affording him an opportunity to meet objections raised by a defendant who neither appeared nor placed the objections before him for consideration; b) if it permits documentary evidence to be considered piecemeal by two different Commissioners, and c) if it places reliance upon a sketch map when it is possible to prepare a scientific map. [p. 416, cols. 1 & 2.]

A defendant who fails to appear before a Commissioner cannot ordinarily object to his report. [p. 435, col. 2.]

KAMINI KESHORE SEN V. PARBARTYA TIPPERAH RAJ.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Sylhet, dated the 13th of October 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court, at Nabinagar, dated the 12th of May 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Rishendra Kumar Sarkar, for the Appellant. The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of land on a declaration of plaintiff's title thereto. The plaintiff claimed the land to belong to his taluk while the defence was that it appertained to their taluk. The first Court appointed a Commissioner to identify the lands with reference to the thak map. The defendants not appearing before the Commissioner the investigation was held ex parte. The defendants did not further contest the suit which was decreed ex parte. Subsequently, on the defendants' application the suit was restored. The defendants filed two documents thereafter and to identify the lands covered by them a Commissioner was appointed who prepared a sketch map. The suit was decreed on the basis of the first Commissioner's report. On appeal, however, that decision has been reversed and the suit has been dismissed on the basis of the second Commissioner's report. My submission is that the procedure adopted by the Appellate Court is illegal and defective under section 100 (c), Civil Procedure Code. The report of the first Commissioner ought not to have been rejected summarily without affording him any opportunity to meet the defendants' objections. Refers to Rames Surut Soondree Debea v. Babu Prosonno Oommar Tagore (1). The investigation of the second Commissioner was imperfect and insufficient. The Court ought not to have relied on a sketch map. It ought to have relied on the map prepared by the first Commissioner which was done with reference to the thak map. I would, therefore, ask for a remand for the investigation of these points afresh.

Babu Govind Chandra Dey Roy (with him Babu Birendra Chandra Das), for the Respondents.—I submit there has been no error or defect of procedure as contemplated by section 100 (c), Civil Procedure Code. The Court considered the report and maps of both the Commissioners and came to its own conclusions. It is discretionary for a Court to examine the Commissioner. Refers to Sitaram v. Ram Prosad Ram (2). The other side has not made out a case sufficient to be remanded back for further consideration.

Babu Rishendra Kumar Sarkar replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title.

The case for the plaintiff is that, the disputed land appertains to Taluk Ratana-ballav, the case for the defendants is that it is included in Taluk Golam Ali. The Court of first instance appointed a Commissioner to identify the lands with reference to the thak map. The contesting defendant did not appear before the Commissioner, with the result that his proceedings were held ex parte. The report he submitted supported the claim of the plaintiff. There can be no doubt the Commissioner adopted the only course which was open to him, namely, to proceed ex parte in the absence of the defendants. In such circumstances, the defendants would not ordinarily be entitled to take objection to the report of the Commissioner, as was pointed out by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in the case of Eshan Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Soorjo Loll Gosain (3) which was followed in Bamun Doss Mookerjee v. Brojo Kishore Mitter (4). See also the decision of the Judicial Committee in Meer Mahomed Tuque v. Jadurath Jha (5). The defendants, however, appeared in Court, and were allowed to take exceptions to the report of the Commissioner. They prayed that the Commissioner might be examined, so that they might establish that the proceedings had been defective. The Court refused the application, apparently on the ground that there had been laches on their part. The defendants then did not contest the claim and the suit was decreed ex parte. Subsequently, the defendants applied to have the ex parte decree set aside. This application was granted, and the suit was restored. The defendants then prayed for a fresh local investigation. This application was refused. Some months later, the defendant produced two documents which had not been previously filed: one of these was a conveyance, the other was a lease. To identify the lands covered by these two documents, the Court appointed a second Commissioner who prepared a sketch map. The case then came before the Trial Court again, and that Court accepted the conclusions of the first Commissioner in preference to the view taken by the second Commissioner. The result was that a decree was again made in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge has rejected the report of the first Commissioner, on grounds which the Commissioner had no opportunity to controvert, and has accepted the report of the second Commissioner; on this basis, he has finally dismissed the suit.

On the present appeal, it has been argued on behalf of the appellant that the procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge was substantially defective within the meaning of clause (c) of section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the matter should be re-investigated. We are of opinion that this contention is well-founded and must prevail.

No doubt, as was pointed out by this Court in the case of Sitaram v. Ram Prosad Ram (2), the Court has a discretion to examine the Commissioner as a witness upon an application by either party, but if the report of the Commissioner is attacked on grounds which require explanation, it is necessary that the Commissioner who has acted as an expert should be examined as a witness and furnish the explanation required in justification of the report submitted by him. This is clear from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rajkumar Roy v. Gobind Ohundur Roy (6). The first defect in the procedure adopted by the Court below is that the report of the first Commissioner was rejected without any opportunity afforded to the Commissioner to meet objections raised by the defendants who neither appeared nor took care to place the objections before him for consideration. It has been pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ranee Surul Somdree Deaea v. Baboo Prosonna Ocomar Tagore (1) that, in circumstances like these, it is not safe for a Court of Appeal to act as an expert and to sit in judgment over the Court below in considering the report of a Commissioner: [Monkee Dumber Sahes v. Monkee Bhullundur Sahes (7).]

The second defect in procedure is that the investigation of the second Commissioner was imperfect and insufficient. In order that the rights of the parties may be satisfactorily determined, the matter must be investigated in its entirety; in other words, the question whether the thak map has or has not been rebutted by the documents produced by the defendants at a late stage of the case should be considered by one Commissioner and not piecemeal by two different individuals. It is further plain that reliance should not be placed upon the sketch map when it is possible to prepare a scientific map. In view of these defects, it is impossible for us to support the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge reversed and the case sent back to the Court of first instance to be reheard, in accordance with law. A Commissioner will be appointed, to deal with the thak map and the other documents upon which the parties rely, and the Court will pronounce judgment on the materials placed before it by the Commissioner and such other evidence as may be brought forward by either party.

Costs will abide the result.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

The mere fact that there is no oral evidence to identify the deponent of a deposition made more than 60 years ago, is not sufficient to render the provisions of section 80 of the Evidence Act inapplicable thereto, nor would the absence of the signature of the Presiding Officer to a copy of such deposition preclude the presumption that the copy is a true copy. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 31st May 1919.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Pandit Sarju Prasad, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for Respondent No. 4.

JUDGMENT.—This first appeal arises out of a suit for possession of the property of one Ujagar, deceased, on the death of his widow, Ramdei, in the village of Patman in the Bara Banki District. The only point now at issue between the parties is one of the pedigree. The plaintiffs-respondents, Mata Din and Ganeshi, are the sons of Basti and the grand-sons of one Sheodin whom they allege to have been the son of Debi, the common ancestor. The defendants appellants, Sarabjit and Radha Kishan, are the great grand-sons of Udit, the son of Debi, and, therefore, if the plaintiffs' pedigree is correct, are one degree more remote from the deceased Ujagar than the plaintiffs are. The defendants-appellants, on the other hand, insert two generations Banna and Badla between Sheodin and Debi, thus making the plaintiffs one degree more remote than themselves. The case turns on the weight to be attached to the documentary evidence produced by the parties. The oral evidence has been ignored both in the Court below and in this Court. The plaintiffs' documentary evidence is earlier in time and, if it is genuine, there can, I think, be no doubt that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in giving it greater weight than that produced by the defendants. The plaintiffs' evidence consists of the following Exhibits:—

Exhibit 3 is a copy of an application made by the plaintiffs' father, Basti, in the Settlement Court in 1866 in which Basti describes himself as the son of Sheodin the son of Debi. (Exhibit 4 is the order passed on this).

Exhibits 6 to 10 are copies of papers forming part of the record of certain suits which were brought in connection with the first Summary Settlement. The originals are no longer available.

Exhibits 5 and 7, which are orders of the Court are admitted.

Exhibit 6, which is a compromise between the plaintiffs' father and one Gohray; and Exhibit 5 to 10, which are copies of statements of Bala and Makka, whose names appear in the family pedigree are disputed.

These papers, if genuine, amply establish the plaintiffs' case and they relate to a time long before the present suit arose. The appellants attack their genuineness or suggest that, at least, they should be regarded with some suspicion. The attack was particularly directed at Exhibit 3 the original of which was perused by the learned Subordinate Judge and has been called for again in this Court. This is certainly an old paper and the general appearance of the ink and the writing does not suggest that it is a forgery. The chief points of attack against it are,—

(a) that it has a horizontal fold across the centre of the paper which no other paper on the same record has and had at the time of its production in the lower Court no vertical fold;

(b) that the ink has run slightly near this fold though admittedly it has not done so in any other part of the document;

(c) that the signature "Muhammad Hussain" on the document differs somewhat from other signatures of the same person on the Settlement file;

(d) that there is no other application

SARAJIT U. MATA DIN.

document on the Settlement file on precisely similar paper, and

(e) that the description of Basti as son of Sheodin, son of Debi, is unusual and does not occur in other documents on the file.

These criticisms have some force but may, perhaps, be explained by the compromise having been originally prepared out of Court. Considering the variety of papers which do appear on the file, I cannot attach any weight to the alleged difference in the paper. If the document had been a forgery prepared on old paper of as spongy a nature as this paper is, I should have expected the ink to spread to some extent in other parts of the document. From the fact that there was a fold in the paper when the compromise was written it does not necessarily follow that it is a forgery. As regards point (e), it is not denied that such descriptions did sometimes occur in old documents of this period.

If the plaintiffs' case rested on Exhibit 3 alone I might feel some doubt about it but the attack on the remaining exhibits is of a much more unsubstantial character and, after examining them carefully, I can find no reason for not agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge in treating them as genuine. They are on old Court-fee stamps and bear various endorsements which show not the slightest trace of being forged. They bear the seal of the Deputy Commissioner's Court of Daryabad which was at that time the Tahsil and what purports to be is the signature of the European Officer responsible for the issue of copies. It is urged that Exhibits 5 and 7 bear the words "True Copy" in English whereas the other copies do, not but these two copies were issued under the signature of a different officer from the others and the latter bear a corresponding endorsement in Urdu. It is objected that section 80 of the Evidence Act cannot be applied to these depositions because oral evidence was not given to prove the identity of the persons who made them. It would be very difficult to give such evidence in the case of a deposition made more than sixty years ago. It is sufficient to say that they bear internal evidence that the persons by whom they were made were the Bhole and Makha mentioned in the pedigree of the family. It is also objected that section 80 cannot apply, inasmuch as the copies of depositions do not purport to bear the signature of the Presiding Officer, which is the fact. It is possible that the signature may have been omitted in copying but even if the Presiding Officer omitted to sign the depositions I do not consider that this fact absolutely precludes the Court from presuming that the copies are what they purport to be, namely, true copies certified by competent authority of depositions made in a suit in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner. The question is not, however, of supreme importance as, even without the depositions, the compromise is sufficient for the respondents' purpose.

Accepting as I do the plaintiffs' evidence as genuine, it is unnecessary to discuss in detail that of the defendants or to add more than a word or two to what the learned Subordinate Judge has said regarding it. The defendants' evidence consists partly of proceedings in a suit by Surajbali and Ujagar against Musammal Tikan in 187-88 in which they set up a pedigree similar to that now set up by the defendants, and partly of the fact that the plaintiffs subsequently pre-empted a portion of this property, on a sale by Surajbali and Ujagar, without setting up their title by inheritance. A deed of gift executed by Musammal Ramdei in favour of the defendants has also been referred to in which she calls them her next reversioners but this is, for obvious reasons, entitled to very little weight. The other evidence does carry some weight but, as the learned Subordinate Judge says, it was to the interest of the parties in the litigation of 1887 to say nothing as to the plaintiffs' rights. It is not so easy to see why they said nothing about their rights in the pre-emption suit, but the plaintiffs would only have been entitled to a half share of the property in dispute in that suit. If they had set up a claim based on inheritance instead of suing for pre-emption it would have been a good defense to say that the portion of the property which Surajbali and Ujagar had sold was less than the half share to which they were admittedly entitled.

MOHENDRA NATH MAITI v. PARAMESWAR SAMANTA.

Other points which were raised in the lower Court are not now pressed.

On the whole I can find no sufficient ground for disturbing the order of the lower Court and I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of '88), s. 52—Lis pendens. Plaint in suit returned to make up stamp-duty—Plaint re-presented—Suit, whether pending in interval.

A transfer of property effected between the date when an insufficiently stamped plaint is returned for the stamp-duty to be made good, and the date of its re-presentation, is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens, as on the date of the transfer no suit was pending. [p. 10, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 4th of May 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Tamluk, dated the 19th of August 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarty (with him Babu Kalikinkar Chakravarty), for the Appellant.—Defendant No. 1 is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of certain lands on the basis of a purchase. The defendant No. 2 was the owner of a jots. The plaintiff's case is that there was a contract for sale of the land with the plaintiff on 6th February 1912. The plaintiff then sued for specific performance. The plaint having been insufficiently stamped was returned on 3rd April 1912. The suit was then properly filed on 9th April 1912. On 6th April 1912 defendant No. 2 sold the land to defendant No. 1. I bought without notice of the previous contract with plaintiff, neither was I impleaded in that suit which was decreed on 18th December 1913 on appeal. Plaintiff obtained the conveyance by Court on 23rd July 1914. The plaintiff has now brought this suit. My defense was that I was a bona fide purchaser without notice, that the property in suit was a mere right of occupancy and not saleable without the landlord's consent, that I had been recognised by the landlord by his acceptance of rent from me. The plaintiff's answer was that I had bought with notice and that the tenancy was permanent and, therefore, saleable and that I was bound by the doctrine of lis pendens. The first Court, accepting the plea of lis pendens, decreed the suit although it found that my purchase was without notice and that the holding was non-transferable without the landlord's consent. On appeal, the suit was decreed on the ground of lis pendens alone. I submit the doctrine of lis pendens does not bar my title as I was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice and my purchase was long before the plaintiff's conveyance. Further, I am recognised by the landlord while the plaintiff's story of recognition was negatived. As regards my first point about the applicability of the doctrine of lis pendens, there was no suit pending in Court in course of active prosecution when I purchased. The plaint was then withdrawn.

[BUCKLAND, J.—Was the plaint returned when it was filed with insufficient stamps and five days were allowed for filing it with proper stamps?]

The plaint was withdrawn. No suit was pending in any Court then. Mere pendency alone of a suit would not be sufficient. Reads section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. Irregular presentation of a plaint does not amount to proper and actual initiation of a suit. If my first point succeeds, the case will succeed and will have to go back on remand.

Babu Mohendranath Roy (with him Babu Santosh Kumar alior B. on Jyotish Chandra Hura, for the Respondents.—The suit must be taken to have been instituted on 3rd April 1912. Refers to Order VII rule 11 (c), Civil Procedure Code; sections 148, 149, Civil Procedure Code. The former requires a Court to dismiss the plaint on failure of plaintiff to put insufficient stamps within the time granted. The order was—Plaintiff to file deficit Court-fee stamps within five days. It was evidently made under Order VII, rule 11 (c), Civil Procedure Code.

[BUCKLAND, J.—Ought the Court not to have kept the plaint in its file?]

According to the practice it does not matter after such an order where the plaint is kept. The order made was not then final. Some other order would be necessary either to register the plaint or to reject it; when the deficit stamps are paid the plaint will be treated as having been filed on the date it was originally presented in view of section 149, Civil Procedure Code. Assuming, therefore, that the defendant was bona fide purchaser for value without notice he did not acquire a valid title by his purchase. The provisions of section 52, Transfer of Property Act, are clear on the point.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarty replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

BUCKLAND, J.—The only question that arises in this appeal is whether or not on the 6th of April when the land in question was sold by the second defendant to the first defendant there was a suit pending so as to introduce the operation of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. According to the register it appears that the plaint was actually registered under Order IV, rule 2, as if it had been admitted on the 9th April. It is not clear what occurred in connection with the insufficiency of the Court-fee, but if the Munsif returned the plaint actually to the plaintiff and then allowed him five days within which to present it again with the additional Court fee, such order does not appear to be strictly in accordance with Order VII, rule 11, of the Civil Procedure Code. In the circumstances, we accept what we find in the register of suits. In consequence, there was no lis pendens on the date, that is the 6th of April. In the circumstances, we reverse the judgment of the learned Judge. The learned Judge has not come to any findings on the other points in the case with reference to the nature of the right claimed or whether the transfer was without notice and we remand the case to the learned District Judge for him to come to findings on those points.

Costs of this appeal to abide the result.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

An Asthan is essentially an institution of Sannyasi celibates and ascetics, having no worldly connections either of wealth or of family, and there is a presumption that the Mahant of an Asthan has no property other than Asthan property and that his income consists in the profits of that property and the offerings made to him in the character of trustee of the institution, but this does not disable him from owning property of his own, only those who allege the separate and personal character of any property found in the possession of a Mahant must prove their allegation; and in the absence of such proof, or of proof of unavoidable necessity, an alienation made by a Mahant is ultra vires. The fact that there have been a large number of alienations by successive Mahants proves nothing more than breaches of trust by the alienors [p. 442, col. 2; p. 443, col. 1; p. 446, col. 2; p. 447, col. 1.]

WAZIR HASAN, A. J. C.—This appeal arises out of the suit brought by Mahant Durga Bharthi against Rampat and Ramenkh in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda for recovery of possession of the following villages situate in Pargana Utraula in the district of Gonda :—

1. Bankasia, hamlet of Magaipur, under-proprietary right to the extent of 6 annas.

2. Bankasia, superior proprietary right, the whole.

3. Matebna, hamlet of Magaipur, under-proprietary right to the extent of 4 annas.

4. Pura Bharpurwa, superior proprietary right, the whole.

5. Magaipur, superior and inferior proprietary rights, the whole.

6. Sahayapur, superior proprietary right, the whole.

7. Dubaiha, under-proprietary right, to the extent of 2 annas; and

8. A house in Magaipur.

The plaintiff's case, briefly stated, is that the properties in suit appertain to the Asthan of Parela in the district of Basti, that one Dasrath Bharthi, brother of the defendants, was in possession of those properties in virtue of the settlement of the 6th April 1906 between him and the plaintiff; that Dasrath Bharthi made a transfer of them by way of shankalap under a deed, dated the 20th of September 1913 in favour of the defendants; that Dasrath Bharthi died on the 10th of March 1915; that the said transfer was ultra vires, and that the plaintiff, in the capacity of the Mahant of the Asthan as well as under the settlement, is entitled to recover possession of the properties in suit from the defendants.

The defence, so far as it is necessary to notice for the purposes of this appeal, raised three main pleas in answer to the plaintiff's suit. The questions which thus arose for determination were embodied in the following issues framed by the learned Subordinate Judge :—

(1) Was the property in suit Asthan property in the hands of Dasrath Bharthi?

(2) Did he exceed his powers of alienation in making the shankalap in question?

(3) Did the plaintiff become entitled to the whole of the property in suit on the death of Dasrath Bharthi?

The Trial Judge decided the foregoing issues in favour of the plaintiff and, in consequence, gave him a decree for possession of the properties in suit. Aggrieved by this decree the defendants have appealed to this Court. The same three points to which I have already made reference were argued before us though in somewhat modified forms. The questions, therefore, which we are called upon to decide in this appeal are :—

(1) Whether the properties in suit appertain to the Asthan in question.

(2) Whether Dasrath Bharthi was competent to alienate them.

(3) Whether Durga Bharthi, the plaintiff-respondent, is entitled to eject the defendants-appellants.

About 300 years ago Jagdeo Gurn, says the tradition, was the head of a monastic institution of Sannyasis, known as Bharthi Mahants, at Gaura in the district of Basti. One Ori, Chattari by caste, became his disciple and drank deep of the fountain of religious mysteries at the feet of his Gurn. After having attained the zenith of perfection, Ori Bharthi, under the authority of his preceptor, made Parela, a village in the same district, the seat of his devotional exercises. His fame spread far and wide and consequently Parela began to attract large congregations of the people of the neighbourhood and Ori Bharthi, within a comparatively short interval of time, amassed a large fortune out of the presents he used to receive. True to his creed, he spent his wealth on the construction of a monastery (Asthan) at Parela and after furnishing it with necessary things consecrated it to the service of his ascetic brotherhood, and purchased the following villages from the Raja of Basti for the maintenance of the institution :—

Bezpur, Pirpur, Amrangor, Tamaku Gois, Kakkar Gania, Thour, and Jonkadih.

Ori Bharthi then framed a set of rules, continues the tradition, based upon the usages obtaining in the monastery of his preceptor for the guidance of his successors. "Whereby he provided that out of his disciples, the most competent of them should succeed him and should lead the life of a celibate and acting as a custodian of the properties left behind, should out of its profits continue the work of charity. After him his disciple Gangu Bharthi, Chattari by caste, who was the most trusted of all, succeeded him and observed the practice laid down by the rules." (Vide Exhibit 2, the waib-ul-az of village Bzpur). In the absence of any defects of anachronism and more reliable evidence to the contrary, the general accuracy of the tradition must be accepted. Indeed, no attempt was made at the Bar to impeach it. In my opinion, the Asthan at Parela, as founded, was completely in accordance with the type of monasteries of the old days. The several legal concepts which emerge out of the foregoing narrative may be stated to be as follows:—

(1) It is a congregation of Sannyasis, celibates and ascetics, who have entirely cut themselves off from worldly ties.

(2) The properties appertaining to the Asthan are held in trust for the purposes of the Asthan.

(3) The purposes of the Asthan are maintenance of the devotees and propagation of charities.

(4) The head of the Asthan is the trustee of the institution and of the properties attached to it.

(5) The rule of descent of the headship or of the gudde is founded upon the special usages and customs obtaining in the Asthan.

The origin of such institutions is generally traced to the conception of the life of a Hindu of the twice-born classes as composed of the four Holy orders so truly illustrated in the life of Ori Bharti who founded the Asthan in question:—

(1) A Brahmachari, or student, living with the Guru as a member of his family

(2) A Grihastha, or house-holder, married after the first stage was over.

(3) Vanaprastha, or one retired from the world, residing with persons of the same order engaged in religious practices and contemplation of the deity, being free from all worldly cares—the retirement saving the effect of extinguishing his right to the property he had at the time of retiring.

(4) Yati, or itinerant contemplative ascetic (Treatise on Hindu Law by Golapchandra Sarkar, Sastri, 4th Edition).

The third stage clearly necessitated foundations of the character of Mathas, Matte, Satras, Asthans or Asthals. The spread of Buddhism gave great stimulus to the growth of such institutions. Rai Bahadur Jogendra

Chundar Ghose expresses the idea in felicitous language as follows:—

"Buddhism cannot exist without the three gems.

"Buddha, the Dharma and the Sangha, i. e., the congregation of monks, who observed the law in its purity." (J. C. Ghose's Principles of Hindu law, Volume I, page 209, Third Edition).

On the revival of Brahmanism about the eighth century A. D. Sankara Acharya, the greatest Hindu scholar and philosopher of modern India, (or his disciples) founded the ten orders of Sannyasis, called after the names of the ten disciples of the foremost favourite pupils of his, namely, (1) Giri, (2) Sagar, (3) Parvat, (4) Pari, (5) Saraswati, (6) Bharavi, (7) Pirtha, (8) Aaram, (9) Ban and (10) Aranga. (Vide Sastri's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, page 455).

An Asthan, therefore, is essentially an institution of Sannyasis celibates and ascetics—having no worldly connection either of wealth or of family; and the Asthan at Parela is an Asthan of Bharti Sannyasis being of the sixth order above-mentioned.

A Math should, by a person having faith in the Shastras, be made three-storied or two-storied or one-storied, consisting of different apartments, possessed of an elephant; accommodated with places for meditation, for study, for burnt offering to consecrated fire and the like, and for teaching..... And he should endow a village or sufficient land for meeting the expenses, so that the ascetics and the travellers getting shelter (there) may receive sandals, shoes, umbrellas, small pieces of cloth and also other necessary things. Thus, having established an asylum beneficial to the persons practising austerities and also to other poor people seeking shelter, he should declare—"I am endowing this asylum, May He who is the support of the universe be pleased with me"—Baraba Purana (Vide Sastri's Hindu Law, pages 475 and 476).

I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the villages which Mahant Ori Bharti had purchased from the Raja of Basti were dedicated to the Asthan of Parela and he and his successors held them as trustees. Having shown the true characteristics of Sannyasis and the real character of an institution like an Asthan, I am led to the conclusion that in the very nature of things there must arise a presumption to effect that the head of an Asthan has no property other than Asthan property and that his income consists in the profits of that property and the offerings made to him in the character of the trustee of the institution. The law of the land, of course, does not disable him from owning property of his own, but all I say is that those who allege the separate and personal character of any property found in the possession of a head of an Asthan of Sannyasis and which has descended to him in an unbroken course of succession of Mahants for a long time must have the onus laid upon them of proving their allegation.

Vijnaneswara, himself an ascetic, the author of the Mitakshara, in commenting upon Yajnavalkya's text—"The heirs of a hermit, of an ascetic and of a professed student, are in their order, the preceptor, the virtuous pupil, and the spiritual brother and the associate in holiness"—observes as follows:—

"Are not those, who have entered into a religious profession, unconnected with property; since Vasishtha declares, 'They, who have entered into another order, are debarred from shares.' (Vasishtha, XVII, 52). How, then, can there be a partition of their property? Nor has a professed student a right to his own-acquired wealth: for the acceptance of presents, and other means of acquisition, are forbidden to him. And since Gantama ordains, that 'a mendicant shall have no savings.' (Gantama, II, 11) the mendicant also can have no effects by himself acquired.

"The answer is, a hermit may have property: for the text (of Yajnavalkya) says, 'The hermit may make a hoard of things sufficient for a day, a month, six months, or a year; and, in the month of Asvina he should abandon what has been collected' (Yajnavalkya, III, 47). The ascetic, too, has clothes, books, and other requisite articles, for a passage directs that 'he should wear clothes to cover his private parts;' and a text prescribes that 'he should take the requisites for his austerities and his sandals.' The professed student likewise has clothes to cover his body: and he possesses also other effects,

"It was, therefore, proper to explain the partition of or inheritance to, such property." (Mitakshara, Chapter II, section VIII, Paragraphs 1, 7, 8 and 9, Setlar's Collection of Hindu Law Books, 1911 Edition).

I will here give the line of succession from Mahant Jagdeo Bharthi down to the present Mahant,—

I need hardly say that the above pedigree represents the succession of 'monday disciples' (shaved disciples) as they are called in these proceedings. I now proceed to trace the acquisition of each item of the properties involved in this appeal.

(1) Bankasia—"It is about 200 years ago that Bhikham Bharthi, the ancestor of the proprietor of the village, having purchased a jungle from the talukdar of Utraula, cut it and populated it." Half of the village under certain vicissitudes was lost to the Asthan prior to the old settlement and the only other half now remains (Vide Exhibits A 28, A 29 and A 32).

(2) Matebna—This village was purchased by Mahant Jogendra Bharthi in the year 1855 (Vide Exhibit 1).

(3) Para Bhardpurwa was purchased by

RAMPAT U. DURGA BHARTHI.

Mahant Bhikham Bharthi in the year 1207 Fasli, i. e., in 1800 A. D. Only the superior rights in this village are now possessed and owned (Vide Exhibits 2, A 38 and A 39).

(4) Magaipur was purchased by Bhikham Bharthi in 1207 Fasli, i. e., in 1800 A. D. In this village also only the superior rights are now possessed and owned (Vide Exhibits 2 and A 38).

(5) Sahayapur was purchased by Bhikham Bharthi in 1209 Fasli, i. e., 1802 A. D. As in the other two foregoing villages only superior rights are now owned in this village.

(6) Dubaiha was purchased by Partab Bharthi in 1886 A. D.

If the sources of the income of a reigning Mahant for the time being must be presumed, as I have held before, to be limited to the profits of the endowed properties and the fresh offerings received by him in his character as such it follows that subsequent acquisitions must equally be presumed to have been made with the aid of such income and consequently will follow the same character as of nucleus. I will first deal with the legal character of offerings. The essential fact to be borne in mind in this connection is that the offerings made at an Asthan of the kind in question are made to the priests of the Sannyasi order who, as I have shown above, possess no wealth of their own. Such offerings would, I conceive, bear a more marked stamp of trust property than offerings to an idol at an ordinary shrine. In the case of Babajirao Gambhirsing v. Lazmandas Guru Raghunathdas (1) Sir Lawrence Jenkin, C. J., made the following observations:—"A Math, like an idol, is in Hindu Law a judicial persona capable of acquiring, holding and vindicating legal rights, though of necessity it can only act in relation to those rights through the medium of some human agency." An Asthan, therefore, as much as an idol is a juristic person capable of holding property and consequently offerings made to the priest of the Asthan presumably at least belong to the Asthan. The judgment of Mr. Justice West in the case of Manohar Ganesh v. Lakhmiram Govindram (2) is extremely illuminating and instructive if I may say so. At page 265 the learned Judge observes as follows:—"But if there is a juridical person, the ideal embodiment of a pious or benevolent idea as the centre of the foundation, this artificial subject of rights is as capable of taking offerings of cash and jewels as of land. Those who take physical possession of the one as of the other kind of property incur thereby a responsibility for its due application to the purposes of the foundation—Compare Griffin v. Griffin (3), Mulhallen v. Marum (4), Aberdeen Town Council v. Aberdeen University (5). They are answerable as trustees even though they have not consciously accepted a trust, and a remedy may be sought against them for maladministration by a suit open to any one interested, as under the Roman system in a like case by means of a popularis actio." This decision was affirmed in appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chotalal Lakhmiram v. Manohar Ganesh (6).

The observations of a learned Hindu Judge, Sir Gura Das Bannerji, in the case of Girijanund Ditta Jha v. Sailajanund Ditta Jha (7) must command our respect and are, in my opinion, conclusive on that point that such offerings cannot be treated as the personal property of the priest or the Mahant whoever the trustee may be. At page 655 the learned Judge observes as follows:—"But where, as in this case, the idol is an ancient one permanently established for public worship and the offerings are generally of a more or less permanent character, being coins and other metallic articles, in the absence of any custom or express declaration by the donor to the contrary, they are, as they ought to be, taken to be intended to contribute to the maintenance of the shrine with all its rites, ceremonies and charities and not to become the personal property of the priest. However much a Hindu votary may wish that his offerings to public shrines should ultimately go to the use of meritorious Brahmins, he can never be supposed to intend, nor does the Hindu Law anywhere allow, that they should become the property of the priest, to be squandered by him or devoted to purposes foreign to the endowment." I am, therefore, of opinion that the offerings, if any, made at the Asthan of Parela, must be deemed, unless proved to the contrary, to be properties belonging to the Asthan and not the personal properties of the Mahant for the time being.

Now I come to the question of the profits of the endowed properties. The view taken in the case of Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyantidhi Tirtha Swami (8) as to the legal position of a Mahant and his power of disposal of the surplus income of a Muth cannot now be accepted as correct. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in his judgment in the case of Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar Avergal (9) observes as follows:—"A Matathipathi has been compared to a corporation sole in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyantidhi Tirtha Swami (8) but (speaking for myself) I do not like to dwell on that analogy, as (unless we are very careful) that analogy might not only mislead us into the complications and difficulties of considering and construing the varied opinions given in English cases about corporations sole, but there is this fundamental distinction, namely, that whereas 'the properties belonging to an English Bishop' (a corporation sole under the English Law) 'including his savings from the revenues of the benefice, devolve upon his legal representatives or heirs,' the savings of a Matathipathi devolve upon the succeeding Matathipathi. I am also not at all sure that as regards even the income of the Muth properties, a Matathipathi has an absolute and unqualified power of disposition as a Bishop over the income of his benefice, that is, to squander it away in even immoral or extravagant ways." In the case of Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Tirumala Anandam Pillai Purisa Sriranga Charylu Varu (10) their Lordships of the Privy Council threw the entire income of the Muth in question in that case into the scheme of management which they framed. Paragraph 2 of that scheme is as follows:—

"All funds to be in the custody of the treasurer. Rules to be framed by the District Court to ensure the proper receipt and custody of all offerings, income and funds, and investment of any surplus, and to prevent misappropriation, and to ensure the proper management of any estate or other properties or investments."

With due respect to the learned Judges, I am unable to accept the proposition of law laid down in the case of Sree Mahant Kishora Dossjee v. Coimbatore Spinning and Weaving Company (11). The report does not show what texts from the Hindu Sacred Law Books were referred to: as regards which the learned Judges remarked that they 'cannot be looked on as anything more than counsels of perfection.' In my opinion, such of the texts as I have quoted in this judgment show beyond any reasonable doubt that the several characteristics of a Sannyasi mentioned therein constitute the very essence of his existence as such and are not merely 'counsels of perfection.' But as I read the judgment in that case, I am of opinion that it mainly depends for its conclusions not upon any rule of law but upon the facts of that particular case. The matter seems to me to be concluded by the recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (12). Lord Shaw, in delivering the judgment of His Majesty's Privy Council in the above-mentioned case, observed as follows:—

"An Asthal, commonly known in Northern India as a Muth, is an institution of a monastic nature. It is established for the service of a particular cult, the instruction in its tenets and the observance of its rites. The followers of the cult and disciples in the institution are known as chelas; the chelas are of two classes, celibate and non celibate..... The Mahant is the head of the institution. He sits upon the gaddi; he initiates candidates into the mysteries of the cult; he superintends the worship of the idol and the accustomed spiritual rites, he manages the property of the institution; he administers its affairs, and the whole assets are vested in him as the owner thereof in trust for the institution itself. Upon his death or abdication he is succeeded by one of the bairagi chelas. These bairagi chelas are, as stated, celibates; or if they have ever been married they must, prior to their initiation as bairagi chelas, have renounced their wives and families and have conformed to the practice of the Math. This practice is ascetic: it involves a separation from all worldly wealth and ties, and a self-dedication to the services and rites of the Asthal ..... It is, however, the rule that this property is held by the Mahant as its owner, and the succession to him in such property follows with the succession to the office. The nature of the ownership is, as has been said, an ownership in trust for the Math or institution itself, and it must not be forgotten that, although large administrative powers are undoubtedly vested in the reigning Mahant, this trust does exist, and that it must be respected." The full effect of this pronouncement has been recognised in a recent decision of a Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Baluswami Aiyar v. Venkataswamy Naicken (13). In a still later decision of His Majesty's Privy Council the following observation occurs:—"Their Lordships concur with the learned Judges of the High Court and the Trial Judge that the village of Lowthwa attached to the Asthal, is endowed property subject to the trust set out in the grant, and that all acquisitions with the income thereof are subject to the same trust." (The italics are mine—Vide Basudeo Roy v. Jugalkishwar Das (14)).

The learned Subordinate Judge supports his finding on Issue No. 1 by reference to the admissions made by Dasrath Bharthi on several occasions (Vide Exhibit 14, written statement of Dasrath Bharthi in the previous litigation: Exhibit 20, judgment by the Court of first instance in that litigation: Exhibit 1, compromise in the same litigation: and Exhibit 17, deposition of Dasrath Bharthi). I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge as regards the evidential value of these documents. Agreeing, therefore, with him I answer the first question in the affirmative. It follows that the alienation made by Dasrath Bharthi of the properties in suit in favour of the defendants appellants was ultra vires of him, no case of unavoidable necessity being either proved or argued before us. See Abhiram Gowami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (15) and Basudeo Roy v. Jugalkishwar Das (14). But it is contended that Dasrath Bharthi acquired the power of alienation under the terms of the settlement of the 6th of April 1906. This brings me to the consideration of the second question stated at the outset of this judgment.

In connection with this point, it is necessary to give a short history of a previous litigation between Mahant Darga Bharthi, the plaintiff-respondent, and Dasrath Bharthi in whose shoes the defendants-appellants claim to stand. We have seen that several Mahants of the Parela Asthan successively acquired large properties in the district of Gonda. Bezpur was also one of the villages acquired by Ganga Bharthi so far back as 1772 Fasli, (i. e., 1765 A. D). Bezpur in course of time became the centre of the landed interest in the Gonda district of the original Asthan at Parela and in very recent times acquired the status of a branch Asthal to the chief institution. Instances of such branch Asthans are not rare. See Giyana Sambandha Panlala Sannadhi v. Kendusami T mbiran (16). Some of the more ambitious chelas took up their abode at Bezpur and in many instances, which I will notice later, abused the trust which they voluntarily took in their charge. Dasrath Bharthi appears to have been a prominent figure in this respect. After the death of Mahant Suro Dayal Boarthi in October 1900, a dispute arose between the plaintiff and Dasrath Boarthi as to the succession to the Asthan gaddi; the latter claiming to be the successor of Saltanat Boarthi, who had taken possession of the Bezpur properties during the minority of the plaintiff. Saltanat Boarthi died early in 1902. Durga Bharthi went to Court in 1904 against Daserath Bharthi (Vide Exhibit A 48, Plaint) but lost his suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda on the ground that he had failed to prove his succession to the gaddi of the Asthan at Parela (Vide Exhibit 20, Judgment). Durga Bharthi appealed to this Court. The parties entered into a compromise which was embodied in a petition presented to this Court on the 6th of April 1906 (Exhibit 1). The appeal was decided accordingly and a decree was prepared in terms of the said compromise (Exhibit 13). The construction of this compromise is one of the questions in the case.

In my judgment, there can be no two opinions on this point. The preamble and the several clauses of this settlement unmistakably recognise the real character of the properties dealt with as belonging to the main Asthan of Parela and Durga Bharthi as the successor of the last Mahant of that Asthan, namely, Sheo Dayal. The pleadings of that suit and the absence of any issue as to whether the properties appertained to the Asthan or not also support this interpretation of the compromise. I am clearly of opinion that the two elements mentioned above constitute the entire foundation of the compromise and it is not open to any of the parties to resile from those conditions [See Kanhai Lal v. Lala Brij Lal (17)]. The dispute is settled by a temporary partition of the trust properties between the two claimants, but care is taken to restore their integrity on the death of either of the two. Clause 6 of the compromise is as follows:—

"No party to this suit shall have the right of making disciples as long as one of the parties does not die; and when one of them dies his share will devolve upon the other and the surviving party shall then be entitled to make disciples:"

and clause 7 is "Each party shall be the owner and possessor of his respective share and shall be entitled to have his share mutated in his name."

It is contended, on the strength of the word 'owner' used in clause 7, that (17) 47 Ind. Cas. 207; 40 A. 487; 22 C. W. N. 914; 8 L. W. 212; 24 M. L. T. 236; 85 M. L. J. 459; 16 A. L. J. 825; (1918) M. W. N. 709; 28 C. L. J. 394; 5 P. L. W. 294; 20 Bom. L. R. 1048; 45 L. A. 118 (P. C.).

Daserath Bharthi acquired complete proprietary rights unburdened with any trust in favour of the Asthan, in the properties allotted to him under the 7th clause of the compromise and reliance is placed upon several decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in support of the contention.

I think the rule of construction laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Swarnani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (18) at once negatives the contention urged by the appellants' learned Pleader. The rule is that "the use of the word 'malik' implies 'absolute ownership' unless there is anything in the context or surrounding circumstances to qualify such meaning." In the 'context' we find clause No. 6, the first portion of which restricting the right of making disciples loses all sense if, in construing the word 'malik' in clause 7, I hold that it implies 'absolute ownership.' Similarly, the second portion of clause 6 relating to the devolution of the share of one party on the survivor of the two is deprived of all sense and significance if I were to accept the construction put forward by the Pleader for the appellants. The 'surrounding circumstances' equally exclude the construction sought to be placed by the appellants. The litigation which ended by the compromise related to the succession to the gaddi of the Asthan—an inalienable right; the compromise deals with properties which were not alienable at the sweet pleasure of the Mahant; it recognises the trust character of the properties; it further recognises the status of the parties as Mahants and, finally, any attempt to alter the character of the properties from trust into personal would clearly have been defeated by law.

A large number of alienations on the part of the plaintiff were brought to our notice as evidence of conduct in aid of the construction pressed upon us by the learned Pleader for the appellants—Exhibits A 61, A 55, A 57 (b), A 58 and A 59. The rule under which this aid is sought is stated in Beal's Cardinal Rules of Legal Interpretation, page 106, Second Edition, as follows:—"The acts of the parties done under the contract can be looked at to ascertain the intention, if the words of the contract are ambiguous, or to show that the contract does not express that which the parties intended to express in it." I am of opinion that the words of the compromise which we have to construe in this case are perfectly clear and there is no ambiguity whatsoever about them. Under the circumstances, the rule quoted above does not apply.

"The words of a written instrument must be construed according to their natural meaning, and it appears to me that no amount of acting by the parties can alter or qualify words which are plain and unambiguous."—North Eastern Railway v. Lord Hastings (19), Earl of Halsbury, L. C. Further, having found that the properties held by the successive Mahants are trust properties as belonging to the Asthan, I must hold that these alienations amount to nothing more than so many instances of breach of trust on the part of the alienor [See Madhab Chandra Bora v. Sarot Kumari Debi (20) and Gordhan Das v. Chuni Lal (21)]. On these grounds, I reject the contention of the appellants and, in agreement with the Trial Judge, answer also the second question in favour of the respondent. Now remains the last question as to the status of the plaintiff. Mahant Sheo Dayal Bharthi was the last undisputed Mahant of the Parela Asthan. The position of the plaintiff as his successor is fully recognised by the settlement of the 6th of April 1906 and I have already expressed my opinion that the parties or their representatives-in-interest cannot be permitted to resile from the terms of that settlement. But, apart from the title of the plaintiff in the character of a Mahant, it is clear beyond any doubt that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the properties in suit under the sixth clause of the compromise as being the survivor of the two parties to it. I decide the last question against the appellants and in favour of the respondent.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Custom—Adoption, what constitutes—Suit to set aside gift—Appeal by donor, whether competent.

Where one person makes a gift in favour of another alleging that the latter is his adopted son, a declaration to that effect made at the time of mutation and repeated subsequently in the course of a suit brought by the collaterals of the donor to contest the validity of the gift is sufficient proof of adoption. [p. 449, col. 1.]

Where in such a suit a decree is passed declaring the invalidity of the gift, the donor alone is competent to prefer an appeal against the decree. [p. 449, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 20th February 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Hissar, dated the 24th June 1917.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, for the Appellant
Mr. O. L. Gulati, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by Tota for a declaration that a gift of land made by his brother Mukha in favour of Bal Ram, nephew of both Mukha and Tota, shall not affect his reversionary rights. Mukha made the gift in 1919 by causing mutation of names to be effected in favour of Bal Ram, alleging at the time of mutation, that he had adopted Bal Ram in 1912. The plaintiff denies that any such adoption was made. The defendants, vis., Mukha and Bal Ram, produced oral evidence in support of the adoption alleged to have been made in 1912 but this evidence has been disbelieved by both the lower Courts. The first Court decreed the suit, holding that no adoption had taken place. The learned District Judge on appeal, while agreeing that no adoption had taken place in 1912, remarked that Mukha's allegations made at the time of mutation and repeated in the course of this suit to the effect that Bal Ram was his adopted son were sufficient proof of an adoption. The learned District Judge relies on Budh Singh v. Mula Singh (1) where it is held that the execution of a deed coupled with the adoptor's clear statement in Court and continuous subsequent treatment is sufficient to constitute the appointment of an heir. So the District Judge reversed the decision of the first Court and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appeals to this Court. One point which has never been expressly stated in the pleadings nor put in issue is whether the parties are governed by Hindu Law or by custom. If they are governed by Hindu Law, then the ruling relied on by the learned District Judge has no application, but looking to the wording of the plaint I can only say that if they are governed by Hindu Law, the plaintiff has not shown on what ground he claims to challenge his brother's gift of land. The land is not joint and there is no question of a joint Hindu family. So that, even in the absence of any adoption, I do not see what there is to prevent Mukha from gifting his land to his nephew if he wished to do so. On the other hand, if the parties are governed by Customary Law, then, no doubt the plaintiff can challenge a transfer of ancestral land made without necessity. But in this case the ruling relied on by the learned District Judge becomes applicable and has, I consider, rightly been applied.

On behalf of the plaintiff appellant it is urged that the learned District Judge has set up a new case for the defendant and decided questions which were not put in issue: but the real question between the parties was simply whether there had been anything amounting to an adoption or a customary appointment of an heir and even though the alleged adoption in 1912 was held to be not proved, still I think the District Judge had a perfect right to hold that Mukha's actions at and subsequent to the mutation proceedings amounted to an adoption.

The other point urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant is that the appeal to the District Judge should have been dismissed because it was lodged only by the donor and not by the donee, but the donor had a distinct interest in appealing from the decision of the first Court because he obviously wanted to gift the land to his nephew and the plaintiff wanted to thwart his wishes by wresting the land from the donee after the donor's death. I hold, therefore, that Mukha had a perfect right to appeal to the District Judge. I note in conclusion that it is very doubtful if plaintiff would have gained much by getting a decision in his favour in the present suit, as Mukha is still alive and I do not see what there is to prevent him from formally adopting his nephew to-morrow if he wishes to do so.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 22 (3), 49 (b) —Occupancy holding, acquisition of, by ijaradar from landlord—Sub-letting, effect of—Tenant inducted by ijaradar on holding, whether trespasser.

The plaintiffs were the owners of an osat taluq which was let out in ijara for a certain period. The ijara lease authorised the ijaradar to buy holdings at sales in execution of decrees for arrears of rent and also provided that during the term of the ijara he would be at liberty to sub-let the same. During the term of the ijara the ijaradar purchased a certain holding in execution of a decree for arrears of rent in respect thereof and sub-let the same to the defendants without any written agreement. On the expiry of the ijara lease the plaintiffs sought to eject the defendants as trespassers:

Held, that, having regard to the provisions of section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also to the terms of the ijara lease, the holding continued and the defendants who were inducted upon the same by the ijaradar were in the position of under-raiyats, that, therefore, when the plaintiffs succeeded to the ijaradar in the possession of the holding, they took it burdened with the under-raiyats inducted by the ijaradar and the sub-letting not having been by a written lease, the defendants could not be ejected otherwise than after notice under section 49 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, [p 450, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the subordinate Judge, Kbulna, dated the 19th of November 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Bagerhat, dated the 17th of December 1917.

BARKAT BIBI v. KARAM BIBI.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Atindranath Mukherjee for M. A. K. Farul Haq, for the Appellant.—The ijaradars were standing in the shoes of the taluqlars. When, therefore, the ijaradars purchased the holdings the tenants' interest merged in the superior interest of the landlord and, therefore, the ijaradars could not have re-let to the defendants as under raiyats or, in other words, the holding could not have continued after its purchase by the ijaradars. My next contention is that even if the defendants be held to be under-raiyats, the sub-letting not having been by a written lease, section 49 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied and the defendants could not be ejected otherwise than after notice.

Babu Broj Lal Chuckerbutty (with him Babu Susil Kumar Bose), for the Respondent.—The case of the defendants was that they were raiyats and not under raiyats. That position is clearly negatived by the terms of the ijara lease and also by the provisions of section 22 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Having regard to the nature of the title set up by the defendants the question of notice was not gone into and it is now too late for them to raise that question.

Babu Atindranath Mukherjee was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. The plaintiffs in the suit are the owners of an osat taluq. For a certain period their property was let out in ijara. During the term of the ijara the tenant of a certain holding, one Salim, fell into arrears. A suit was brought against him and in execution of a decree obtained, the holding was purchased by the ijaradar. Having thus purchased the holding he next proceeded to sub-let the same to the old tenant, Salim. Thereafter, Salim died and on the death of Salim the ijaradar or purchaser of the holding next inducted upon it his heirs the present defendants. On the expiry of the ijara lease the landlord seeks to eject the heirs of Salim as trespassers. The first question in the case is, whether the ijaradar when he re-let to Salim re-let to him as an under raiyat or as a raiyat of the holding which he had purchased at the auction, that is to say, whether this holding continued. Having regard to the provisions of section 22 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also to the terms of the ijara lease we must conclude that the holding continued and that Salim and after him his heirs who were inducted upon the same by the ijaradar were in the position of under-raiyats. The ijara lease authorized the ijaradar to buy holdings at sales in execution for arrears of rent and also provided that during the term of the ijara he was at liberty to sub-let the same. The sub-letting to Salim's heir must, therefore, be taken to be by consent of the landlord. The sub-letting to Salim's heirs was not by a written lease. When the proprietor succeeded to the ijaradar in the possession of the holding he took it burdened with the under-raiyats inducted by the ijaradar. The sub-letting not having been by a written lease section 49 (b) applies and it follows that Salim's heirs, the present under raiyats, cannot be ejected otherwise than after notice. It follows, therefore, that this appeal must succeed and that the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Defendant, who was the occupancy holder of a square of land, agreed to gift it to the plaintiff provided the latter paid the money required for the acquisition of proprietary rights. Plaintiff was put in possession of the square in pursuance of the gift, but when the proprietary rights had been acquired the defendant refused to be bound by the gift on the ground that the plaintiff had not paid the money agreed to be paid by him.

BARKAT BIBI v. KARAM BIBI.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 15th August 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 9th November 1914.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul and Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellant.

Sheikh Abdul Qadir, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Piran Ditta died leaving him surviving his widow, Musammat Karam Bibi, and four daughters. Musammat Karam Bibi succeeded to certain occupancy rights held by her deceased husband in a square of land in the Canal Colony. She also succeeded to similar occupancy rights on the death of her brother-in-law Allah Ditta, who died without issue. Subsequent to this, she is said to have told her four daughters that if they chose to pay the necessary sum for the acquisition of the proprietary rights in the said square of land, she (Musammat Karam Bibi) would make a gift of the said land to them. In accordance with this arrangement the said Musammat Karam Bibi on the 6th of March 1911 applied to the Revenue Authorities for mutation of the said land in the names of her four daughters, alleging that she had made a gift of it to them and was taking steps to acquire the proprietary rights. On the 13th of March 1911 the sum necessary for the acquisition of the proprietary rights was deposited. Her application for mutation in favour of her daughters was rejected by the Collector who was under the impression that the proprietary rights had not been acquired by her. That this is so is clear from the order of the Commissioner, dated the 17th January 1912, and the report of the Assistant Settlement Officer, dated the 17th February 1912. The Commissioner, however, on the 28th February 1912, passed an order to the effect that as mutation of proprietary rights had not yet been effected in the name of Musammat Karam Bibi, the present entry would stand till Musammat Karam Bibi had been recorded as "proprietor," and that after that she could make a fresh application. On the 21st of June 1912 Musammat Karam Bibi's name was duly entered in the proprietary column. She, however, made no further application in connection with the mutation in favour of her daughters. On the 4th of March 1914 she executed a deed of gift under which she donated the whole of the land in favour of one of her daughters, Musammat Bhagan Bibi, and mutation in accordance with that deed was duly sanctioned by the Collector. On the 18th of April 1914 Musammat Barkat Bibi, one of the other daughters, instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. In it she alleged that her mother had gifted the land to her and her three sisters on condition that they paid the necessary amount of money for the acquisition of the proprietary rights; that she had duly paid in her share of the necessary sum and had been put in possession of her share of the gifted property, and prayed for a declaration that she was owner of the land of which she was in possession, and that the gift in favour of her sister, Musammat Bhagan Bibi, did not affect her interest. The Trial Court dismissed the suit holding that there had been no gift. The lower Appellate Court recited the facts as stated above and came to the conclusion that Musammat Barkat Bibi had failed to prove that she had paid the sum of Rs. 200, to her mother as alleged and that, therefore, she was not entitled to the decree. It is also held that even if the plaintiff were allowed to maintain that the gift was an "unconditional" one, she could not succeed as she had not shown that the gift had really been acted upon, inasmuch as her other three sisters had not been put in possession of their respective shares. Musammat Barkat Bibi has thereupon come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Ghulam Rasul, and we have heard Mr. Abdul Kadir on behalf of the respondents.

The real question is, whether the gift was a completed one, for if it was, it is clear that Musammat Karam Bibi had no power to revoke it. The fact that Musammat Karam Bibi applied to the Revenue Authorities for mutation of names in favour of her four daughters is beyond dispute. It is also perfectly clear that in her application to the Revenue Authorities she definitely stated that she had made the gift. It has also been found as a fact that Musammat Barkat Bibi had, in pursuance of this gift, been put in possession of her share of the land in question. Mr. Abdul Kadir contended that the possession of the appellant was merely a cultivating possession, but we are unable to concur in this view having regard to the fact that the possession was definitely given as a result of the gift. The possession was given in Kharif of 1911; Musammât Karam Bibi had become proprietor on the 13th March 1911 when the necessary money was paid in. In these circumstances, qua the appellant the gift had been acted upon, and whether or not Musammât Barkat Bibi had paid her share of the money to her mother is a matter that did not affect her legal right to the land.

We accordingly accept this appeal with costs and, setting aside the judgments of the Courts below, grant the plaintiff-appellant a decree as prayed.

—Patni, diminution of area of—Rent, whether can be summarily levied.

The fact that since its creation a patni has diminished in area, from whatever cause, would not exempt the patni from the provisions of the Patni Regulation as to the summary levying of the rental. [p. 453, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Jessore, dated the 14th of June 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 30th of August 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Ohandra Sen (with him Babu Surendranath Bose), for the Appellant.—The patni sale held on the 15th May 1913 was not a valid sale under the Regulation. The patni was created on the 15th January 1879. Since that time it has shrunk into a certain fraction of its original size. It was, therefore, impossible to bring to sale the entire patni as created on the 15th January 1879. A valid sale under the Regulation must be of the entire patni as it existed at its inception. See section 8, paragraph 1, clause (1) of Regulation VIII of 1819.

Dr. Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty (with him Babu Sarat Ohandra Roy Ohoudhury, Khetra Mohun Ghose and Sarat Chandra Dutt), for the Respondents.—The contention of my learned friend is not supported by section 8 of the Regulation. The only requisites under the section are whether the patni at the time of its creation was made subject to a reservation that it could be sold by the summary procedure prescribed by section 8 of Regulation VIII of 1819. The fact that the original patni had subsequently shrunk into a certain fraction of its original size, cannot free it from the liability to summary sale. Section 37 of the Transfer of Property Act is clearly applicable under such circumstances. Refers to Ramnarayan Banerjee v. Jayakrishna Mookeries (1).

Babu Surendra Ohandra Sen replied.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the third defendant in a suit for declaration of title to a Patni Taluk. The patni was created on the 15th January 1879 and was in its inception, held by Obedulla Khan under Nilmoni Bhatterjee as the Zemindar. Subsequently one Gohar Ali Kazi purchased an one-eighth share both in the patni and in the Zemindari. The result of these purchases by Gohar Ali was that the patni interest in the one-eighth share merged in the Zemindari interest in the one-eighth share. All that remained of the original patni was a seven-eighths share under the owner of an equal share of the Zemindari. The lands were also partitioned, so that specific lands corresponding to seven-eighths of the lands comprised in the original patni were allotted to the patnidar. This patni was brought to sale under the Patni Regulation on the 15th May 1913. The point in controversy is, whether this was a valid sale under the Regulation and passed a good title to the purchaser.

The appellant contends that there was no valid sale and that as it was impossible in the events which had happened to bring to sale the entire patni as created on the 15th January 1879, no sale could have taken place under Regulation VIII of 1819. We are of opinion that this contention is unfounded.

Reliance has been placed on the first paragraph of the first clause of section 8 of Regulation VIII of 1819 which provides as follows: "Zemindars, that is, proprietors under direct engagements with the Government, shall be entitled to apply in the manner following for periodical sales of any tenure upon which the right of selling or bringing to sale for an arrear of rent may have been specially reserved by stipulation in the engagements interchanged, on the creation of the tenure." In order to determine whether this provision is applicable to the patni as it existed after an one-eighth share thereof had merged in an equal share of the superior interest, let us examine the terms of this clause. The test to be applied is, whether this is a tenure, which at the time of its creation, was made subject to a condition that it could be brought to sale for an arrear of rent and whether there was in the engagements interchanged a stipulation reserved that the property could be sold by the summary procedure prescribed by section 8 of Regulation VIII of 1819. The answer can only be in the affirmative. The fact that the original patni had shrunk, by course of events subsequent, into seven-eighths of its original size, has not freed it from the condition imposed upon it at the time of its creation. In fact what has happened is precisely what is contemplated by section 37 of the Transfer of Property Act which lays down the rule for the apportionment of benefit obligation on severance. That provision is plainly applicable to patni tenures, and there can be no room for doubt that the rent payable in respect of the seven-eighths share of the patni was seven eighths of the original rent. This rent, in our opinion, could be summarily levied under the provisions of the Regulation. It is conceded that the contrary view has never been suggested, far less maintained, since the enactment of the Patni Regulation just a century ago:—This is significant as transformations of patni tenures, similar to what has happened here, are by no means infrequent under a variety of conditions. To take one illustration, as pointed out by a Full Bench of this Court in Ramnarayan Banerjee v. Jayakrishna Mookerjee (1), a patni-dar, like any other lease-holder may bring a suit against the Zemindar for abatement of rent. It does not appear to have been ever suggested that if abatement of rent is granted on the ground that part of the land of the patni has been resumed by Government or has disappeared by diluvion, the provisions of the Regulation cease to be applicable to the patni.

We are of opinion that there is no ground for this appeal, which must be dismissed with costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

If the father of a minor girl is present and consents to the contract of her marriage entered into by another person it is all the same as if he himself had contracted the minor in marriage. There is no option of puberty in such a case. [p. 454, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decrees of the District Judge, at Lahore, dated the 26th March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, first Class, Lahore, dated the 27th May 1919.

Pandit Bindra Ban, for the Appellant.

Lala Amar Nath Chopra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the lower Courts dismissing the plaintiff's suit for cancellation of her marriage. She sues on the ground that the marriage was contracted by her step-grand mother, Musamm-t Mehr ul Nisa, who could not act as guardian during the lifetime of her father, and that now she wishes to exercise her option of puberty which she has under the Mubammadan Law. The lower Appellate Court has found that the marriage contract was effected by Musamm-t Mehr-ul Nisa, but that the plaintiff's father was a consenting party to the marriage, which plaintiff, therefore, could not repudiate.

In second appeal it is urged that, because the guardian who contracted the marriage was other than the father or grand-father of the minor, she is entitled to repudiate it on attaining puberty. In Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, IV Edition, Volume, I, page 422, the rule is stated to be as follows: "Where minors are contracted in marriage by a father or grandfather they have no option on arriving at puberty, but when contracted by any other than a father or grandfather, they may, according to Abu Hanifa and Muhammad, on arriving at puberty, if they wish it, either abide by the marriage or cancel it."

Counsel for the appellant wished to contest the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the father consented to the marriage. He pointed out that the learned District Judge has misread the evidence because he said that the father affixed his thumb-mark to the deed of dower. This, however, was obviously a mistake on the part of the District Judge as the deed upon which his thumb-mark was affixed was the agreement, Exhibit D-1. This mistake on the part of the District Judge, however, does not vitiate his finding, because the execution of the agreement has been proved and it shows that the father did consent to the marriage of his daughter with the defendant. Moreover, the grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court do not contest the finding of the first Court that the plaintiff's father consented to the marriage.

The only point which I have to decide is whether the father's consent validates the marriage when the contract for marriage was made by Musamm-t Mehr-ul-Nisa. The appellant's Counsel has been unable to cite any ruling bearing on the point but Counsel for the respondent has referred to Kullan v. Piari (1) wherein the law is stated as follows:—"A contract of marriage entered into by a father or grandfather on behalf of an infant is valid and binding, and the infant has not the option of annulling it on attaining maturity...if the contract is made by a more distant guardian while a nearer is present and competent to the guardianship, the contract is dependent on the sanction of the nearer." See second paragraph at page 448 of the record. I fully agree with this exposition of law for I think it is obvious that the Mubammadan Law upon this question as laid down in the passage from Ameer Ali quoted above must be interpreted in a reasonable manner. If the father is present and consents to the contract of marriage entered into by another person it is all the same as if he himself had contracted the minor in marriage. In this case, moreover, the deed of agreement, Exhibit D-1, shows that both father and Musamm-t Mehr-ul Nisa got the girl married to the defendant.

I, therefore, agree with the decision of the lower Courts and dismiss the appeal with costs.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.—The mortgagor made a deposit under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. Interest on the principal money should, therefore, cease from the date of the tender or as soon as the mortgagor has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of Court. See section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act. On the deposit being made it was the duty of the Court to cause notice to be served upon the mortgagee. It is not necessary for the mortgagor to prove that the Court did its duty and served the notice on the mortgagee. The first Court ought to have dismissed the suit as no question was raised as to the sufficiency of the amount deposited.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak for Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy and Babu Sitaram Banerjee, for the Respondents.—The finding is that the service of notice of deposit on the mortgagee has not been proved. My friend is not entitled to ask your Lordships to make a decree of dismissal on the ground that there was a valid and sufficient deposit under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, because that point was not taken by the present appellant in the lower Appellate Court.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose replied.

JUDGMENT.

MOOREJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendant in a suit to enforce a mortgage security. In the Court of first instance it was pleaded that a deposit had been made under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Court overruled the contention that the deposit was valid, because it found that the service of notice on the mortgagee had not been proved. The Court thereupon made a decree for the principal sum with interest at a reduced rate. Upon appeal, the District Judge has allowed interest at the contract rate up to the date of suit. It is not necessary, however, to investigate whether the Court was competent to restrict interest at the contract rate up to the date of suit only, because we are of opinion that the view taken by the Court of first instance as to the scope of sections 83 and 84 is erroneous.

Section 83 contemplates a deposit to satisfy the mortgage. Section 84 provides that "when the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has...deposited in the Court under section 83 the amount remaining due on the mortgage, interest on the principal money shall cease...as soon as the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court." It is plain that the second paragraph of section 83 casts a duty upon the Court to cause the notice of deposit to be served upon the mortgagee and not on the mortgagor to see that the notice has been served. In the present case, the mortgagor made the deposit as required by law and carried out the prescribed requirements in connection therewith. It is not necessary for him to prove that the Court did its duty and served the notice on the mortgagee. As no question was raised as to the sufficiency of the amount deposited, the Court of first instance should have dismissed the suit. We are, however, not in a position to make that decree, because the point was not urged by the present appellant in the lower Appellate Court.

The result is, that the decree of the District Judge is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. There will be no order as to the costs of this Court or the lower Appellate Court.

The appellant will be at liberty to deposit the decretal amount within three months from the date of service on him of notice of arrival of the record in the lower Court.

FLITCHER, J. I agree.

In a contest between the landlord (and the collaterals of a deceased occupancy tenant with regard to the succession to the tenancy the burden of proving that the requirements of the proviso to section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act have been fulfilled lies on the collaterals. [p. 456, col. 2; p. 457, col. 1.]

The mere fact that the collaterals are in possession of the land and that mutation has been effected in their favour does not shift the burden of proof on to the collaterals. [p. 456, col. 2]

The Civil Courts have to come to an independent finding in such cases and cannot base their decision merely on an opinion formed by the Revenue Authorities. [p. 457, col. 1]

In the parcha tasdiq of 1881-1882 it was entered that the occupancy tenants who were real brothers had stated that they had occupied the land in 1860:

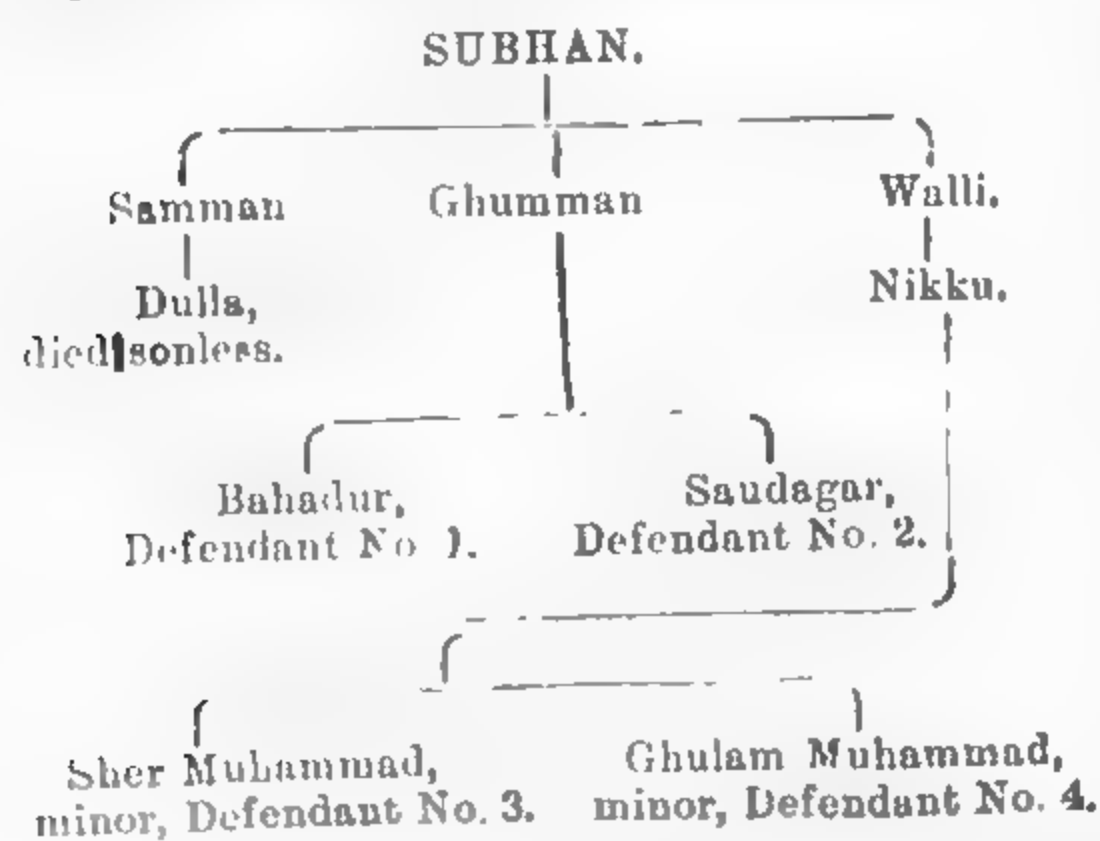

Held, that there was no presumption that the word "they" included their father. [p. 457, col. 1.]

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. R. Obbard and T. D. Khanna, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The genealogical tree of the parties is as follows:—

The plaintiff who is the landlord sues for possession of the land left by Dulla who was an occupancy tenant. The defendants are cousins of Dulla and contend that the occupancy tenure is not extinct as the common ancestor Subhan occupied the land. The earlier revenue entries show that Subhan's three sons, Samman, Ghumman and Walli, had a joint khata. Later on, Samman's share was separated from that of his two brothers, so the tenure certainly was not joint at the time when Dulla died, and Bakhshi Tek Chand who appears on behalf of the defendants-appellants has not argued ground No. 4 of the appeal which urges that the rule of survivorship applies. The only question, therefore, for my decision is whether the common ancestor occupied the land. This question has been decided by the lower Courts in favour of the plaintiff who has been given a decree. On behalf of the defendants it is urged that as the tenancy was shown as a joint one, the presumption is that Subhan's three sons got the land in succession to their father. But whatever the presumption may be in cases generally, in this particular case we find from the parcha tasdiq of 1881-82 that Subhan's three sons then stated that they had come from a village in Patiala in Sambat 1917 (1860 A. D.) and got the land from the contractors, i. e., the proprietors. The phrase ham ne might, of course, be used by the sons when describing a family transaction and might possibly refer to an act done by their father, so the meaning might be that their father had come from Patiala and taken the land, they accompanying him and succeeding him on his death. On the other hand, if the father had really come himself from Patiala, there seems no particular reason why the sons should not have stated that their father came and took possession of the land in 1860.

On behalf of the defendants-appellants it is urged that as they are in possession and mutation of names has been effected in their favour by the Revenue Authorities the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff. It is, however, a case of contest between the landlord on the one hand and the collaterals of the late tenant on the other, and section 59 of the Tenancy Act clearly lays down that collaterals are entitled to succeed only provided that the common ancestor occupied the land. I am, therefore, of opinion that the burden of proving that the requirements of the proviso are fulfilled lies on the collaterals. As regards possession it may be remarked that some of the defendants were cultivating the land in dispute as sub-tenants even during the lifetime of Dulla. As regards mutation, I consider that the Civil Courts have to come to an independent finding in such cases and cannot base their decision merely on an opinion formed by the Revenue Authorities. I note, too, that it is a common practice for the Revenue Authorities to effect mutation in disputed cases in favour of the party in possession without attempting to decide, except, perhaps, in a summary manner, the disputed question of title. Reverting to the entry in the parcha tasdiq of 1881-82. I am unable to hold that it means anything else than that the persons who made the statement themselves came over from Patiala and occupied the land in 1860 A. D. So I see no reason for holding contrary to the lower Courts that it is proved that the common ancestor occupied the land.

I uphold the decree of the lower Courts and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1886), s. 85—Under-whether can eject heirs of under-raiyat.

It is not a violation of the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for an under-raiyat to agree to accept from his landlord a heritable tenancy; and when such agreement has been entered into, the landlord cannot ignore it and treat the tenancy as if it were not heritable and eject the heirs of the under-raiyat. [p. 458, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 28th of July 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Lakhipur, dated the 18th of July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Amulya Charan Banerjee (Jr.)), for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs-appellants are *raiya*s, the defendants are the heirs of the under-*raiya*s. The appeal arises out of an action in ejectment. The Court of first instance decreed the suit, the Court of Appeal below dismissed the suit. The facts are shortly these. In February 1899 one Makaram Ali, the predecessor of the present defendants, took a permanent heritable lease by a registered document. The property was described therein as a kosat raiyati (under *raiya*ti) holding. The plaintiffs seek to eject the defendants on the ground that the holding is non-heritable and non-permanent. The tenant died in 1914. The suit was commenced in December 1915. The kabuliyat was executed in 1913. In 1911 the plaintiffs brought a suit for arrears of rent against the original tenant. That suit, however, was compromised and a decree was passed on the basis of a solenamah which provided, amongst other terms, that the holding would be treated as heritable in accordance with the terms of the lease of 1899 on payment of a premium of Rs. 25. The compromise was put in writing and filed with the record of the case which was decreed. My point is that the solenamah being an unregistered document not incorporated in the decree is of no avail now to the defendant. Neither the lease of 1899 nor the solenamah could create a heritable tenancy in contravention of the provisions of section 89 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The whole point, therefore, resolves to this, viz., whether the tenancy was determined on the death of the under *raiya*ti. Refers to section 147 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I submit the learned Judge ought not to have given effect to the compromise in contravention of the express provisions of the law.

Babu Romesh Chandra Sen, for the Respondents, was not called upon to reply.

AMINULLA CHOWDHURY v. MAHABAT ALI.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for ejectment. The subject matter of the litigation is an under raiya holding created on the 11th January 1899, in contravention of the terms of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the raiya granted a permanent lease to the under-raiya. The under-raiya continued in occupation for many years on payment of the rent fixed in the lease. Default was thereafter made and in 1911 the raiya sued the under-raiya for recovery of arrears of rent. Various defences were taken to the claim. On the 9th August 1911 the parties came to a settlement. One of the terms of the agreement was that the under-raiya should abandon all opposition to the suit; another term was that on payment of Rs. 25 as premium to the raiya, the latter should agree to treat the holding as heritable. A decree was drawn up in the rent-suit on the basis of this settlement; and, although the terms of the compromise are not set out in the decree, it is stated explicitly that the decree was made by consent of parties. The premium of Rs. 25 was made, and the under-raiya continued in occupation till his death early in 1914. On the 9th December 1915 the raiya instituted the present suit for ejectment of the representatives in interest of the under-raiya. The claim is based on the allegation that the interest of an under-raiya is not heritable, and that consequently the defendants in occupation are trespassers and are liable to be ejected. We are of opinion that the claim cannot possibly be sustained.

We shall assume for the purposes of the present appeal, and for that purpose alone, that the lease of the 11th January 1899 was not operative as a permanent lease, even between the grantor and the grantee, because it was granted in contravention of the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We shall further assume that the position of the lessee was that of an under-raiya, who held without any fixed term. The effect of the agreement of the 9th August 1911 was that the raiya consented to transform the tenancy of the under-raiya into a heritable tenancy. Such an agreement is not in contravention of the terms of section 85 of the Bengal

Tenancy Act. There may be tenancy for nine years or even for a shorter time, which may be a heritable tenancy. [Maharaja Tek Chund Bahadur v. Sri Kanth Ghose (1), Gobind Lal v. Hemendra Narain (2), Hedict Khasia v. Karan Khasiani (3), Kishori Lal Roy v. Krishna Kamini (4)]. The provisions of section 85 were in no way violated when the under-raiya agreed to accept from his landlord a heritable tenancy. The plaintiff raiya now seeks to obtain relief in contravention of his solemn engagement, although he has taken consideration for the agreement. The previous suit, which was defended by the under-raiya, was decreed in favour of the raiya without contest on the basis of that compromise. No Court of Equity will now permit him to turn round, to ignore the engagement, to treat the tenancy as if it were not heritable, and to eject the heirs of the under-raiya as if they were trespassers. The well-known rule in Walsh v. Lonsdale (5) has been repeatedly followed in this Court, as shown by the long line of cases from Bibi Jawahir Kumari v. Chatterput Singh (6) to Syam Kishore Das v. Umesh Chandra (7) and is applicable here. The raiya must be deemed to have honestly carried out his engagement, namely, executed valid document whereby a heritable right was conferred on his under-raiya. This is only an illustration of the principle that where B. agrees to let land to A. who takes possession and the agreement is one of which specific performance would be granted, A. and B. have the same legal rights and liabilities as between themselves, as if a lease had been executed, provided the rights of third parties are not affected. In this view, it is impossible for the plaintiff to maintain the suit, which has been rightly dismissed.

We need not examine the validity of the grounds which form the basis of the decision of the District Judge; nor need we express an opinion on the question whether Lala Hargopal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In 1872 Khaira effected two sales of land in favour of Misri. The sale-deeds contain no reference to a share in the shamilat land. On the 18th of February 1888 Misri sold the whole of the property purchased by him from Khaira to Bhola Ram, plaintiff-respondent, for Rs 483. In July 1889 Bhola Ram re transferred the khewat land which he had bought from Misri to a third person reserving to himself the share in the shamilat which appertained to the land sold. Subsequently, Hussain, the grandson of Khaira, sued Bhola Ram for a declaration that Khaira had not sold any share in the shamilat to Misri and succeeded in that suit. The result was that Bhola Ram was deprived of the share in the shamilat land appertaining to the land bought by him from Misri and amounting nearly to 27 kanals. Misri having died, plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendants, his representatives, for a declaration that 123 kanals of shamilat land, which had come to them on account of Misri's other land belonged to them and for possession of 58 kanals of khewat land formerly owned by Misri by way of compensation for the 247 kanals of shamilat land of which he had been deprived. The Trial Court gave the plaintiff a decree in respect of the shamilat land only dismissing the suit for 58 kanals of khewat land. The lower Appellate Court held, following the principle laid down in the unpublished ruling of the Chief Court in Civil Appeal No. 2680 of 1917, that the plaintiff was entitled to be compensated not only out of Misri's shamilat land but also out of his khewat land. It, therefore, gave plaintiff a decree for possession of the 58 kanals of khewat land also. The defendants have filed a second appeal to this Court in respect of the khewat land only.

In the unpublished ruling, Civil Appeal No. 2680 of 1917, Rattigan, C. J., followed the principle enunciated in Beli Ram v. Shahrada Begam (1) and if the deed of sale shows that Misri purported to sell to plaintiff a share in the shamilat land I think the latter would, if I follow this ruling, be entitled to the 58 kanals of khewat land decreed by the lower Appellate Court. It is, however, argued by appellants' Counsel that Misri did not actually sell any share in the shamilat land, but only sold any share which he owned and which appertained to the khewat land sold by him. The deed of sale specifically mentions the khewat land and Misri purported to sell it together with all the rights which appertained thereto. The deed then goes on as follows:—Aur jo haqq shamilat nish tarazi bala muh ko the, ush sub ch muktri ko hue. Generally, in deeds of sale when a vendor intends to sell his proprietary rights together with shamilat land after describing the proprietary land the words bameh hissa shamilat deh or words to that effect are used. In the present instance, however, Misri did not purport to sell khewat land together with a share in the shamilat deh. He sold the khewat land with all its rights and then added a clause which, literally translated, means "whatever rights I had in the shamilat in respect of the above-mentioned land all those rights now belong to the purchaser." The deed does not state that the seller does own any share in the shamilat, and it appears to me that the deed was so worded because Misri was not sure whether he owned any share in the shamilat in consequence of Khaira's sale to him. There is no covenant in the sale deed that if it turns out that he owns no shamilat land in respect of the khewat land sold he will compensate the vendee. I, therefore, hold that Bhole Ram is not entitled to be compensated out of Misri's khewat land for the loss of shamilat consequent on Hussain's suit.

(1) 101 P. R. 1894.

RAM SUNDAR DAS v. SHAJIDUR RAHAMAN.

I accordingly accept the appeal and, modifying the decree of the lower Appellate Court, dismiss the plaintiff's suit for possession of the 58 kanals of proprietary land and restore the decree of the first Court. Under the circumstances, I direct that the parties bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 4—Decree against several defendants on common ground —Appeal by one—Appellate Court, jurisdiction of, to vary decree in favour of all,

Where a decree proceeds against several defendants on a common ground, an Appellate Court has jurisdiction under Order XLI, rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, upon the appeal of one defendant only to vary the decree in favour of all the defendants.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Sylhet, dated the 9th of January 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Moulvi Bazar, dated the 28th of July 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Paresh Lal Shome), for the Appellant.—The decree should have been allowed to stand as regards the defendants who did not choose to prefer an appeal. It was only defendant No. 3 who preferred an appeal. I beg to submit that the Court of Appeal had no jurisdiction to vary the decree in favour of all the defendants, as all of them did not appeal. The Appellate Court had gone beyond its legitimate jurisdiction, and so I assail the judgment of the Appellate Court. The other side will argue that the judgment of the learned Judge is right and proper, regard being had to the provisions of Order XL, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code. But I submit that that section does not authorise the learned Judge to pass the judgment as he has done.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Choudhury, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is concluded by the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. It has been urged that the first Court had passed a decree against all the three defendants, and the appeal having been filed only by one of them, namely, defendant No. 3, the decree could not have been reversed as regards the defendants who did not appeal, and that, so far as those defendants were concerned, the decree should have been allowed to stand. We do not think that this contention is well-founded. The language of Order XLI, rule 4 is sufficiently wide to give jurisdiction to the Appellate Court to vary the decree in favour of all the defendants, the decree against them proceeding on a common ground.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Where a sale is held to be partly for necessity it should not be converted into a mortgage for the sum proved to have been paid for necessity, the sale should be allowed to stand subject to the proviso that when succession opens out the heirs of the last male owner would be entitled to recover the land on payment of the sum found to have been paid for necessity.

Semle:—The re-marriage of a proprietor who has a son alive is not such a necessity as would justify the sale of ancestral land.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 16th August 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Sialkot, dated the 21st December 1915.

Mr. J. O. Vaughan, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued for a declaration that the sale of 111 kanals of land effected by his father on the 5th of April 1904 should not affect his reversionary rights. The land has been found to be ancestral and the only other question in the case is whether the alienation was for consideration and necessity.

The land was sold for Rs. 1,200. Of this sum Rs. 675 were due to one Chanda Shah, a previous mortgagee, and so far the sale was clearly for necessity. The rest of the Rs. 1,200 is made up as follows:—

Cash taken for the marriage of the vendor	370-0-0
Earnest-money	13-0 0
Pro-note	142-0-0

The proceeds of the pro-note are also said to have been taken for the vendor's marriage. The vendor was a widower at the time of the sale but he had a son alive, namely, the present plaintiff. The first Court held that to get married again was such a necessity as justified the sale of ancestral land. So the first Court held that the sale was both for necessity and consideration and dismissed the suit.

The learned District Judge on appeal held that as the plaintiff already had a son alive re-marriage was rather a luxury than a necessity and the sale of ancestral land was not justified. So the learned District Judge held that, though the sale was for consideration, necessity was not proved beyond Rs. 675 and, reversing the decree of the first Court, the District Judge gave the plaintiff a decree that the sale should not affect his rights after his father's death except to the extent of Rs. 675. The District Judge adds at the end of his judgment "or in other words, I convert the sale into a mortgage for Rs. 675." The decree of the District Judge also winds up by saying "the sale is converted into a mortgage."

The alienees appeal urging that the re-marriage of the vendor was a necessity. We know of no authority in support of the proposition that the re-marriage of a proprietor who already has a son alive is such a necessity as justifies the sale of ancestral land, but we note that the only question raised in the appeal is simply one of custom and we cannot go into the question in the absence of a certificate.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs, but on our own motion we must correct the wording of the District Judge's decree. The sale in such a case should not be converted into a mortgage, otherwise it is quite conceivable that the plaintiff might claim to redeem the land anywhere within sixty years. The sale remains the same so far as the alienor is concerned, but when succession opens out to the plaintiff, he can recover the land anywhere within twelve years on payment of Rs. 675. The decree of the District Judge is upheld except that the words "the sale is converted into a mortgage for Rs. 675" are omitted.

Before 1263 Fasli they converted 112 bighas, 15 biswas of cultivated land into grove land by planting trees thereon. Between 1263 and 1266, Fasli they further converted 125 bighas, 14½ biswas of cultivated land into grove land by planting trees thereon. At the time of the first Summary Settlement which took place in 1859 the village formed part of the confiscated properties held by the Government. On certain reports made by the persons in immediate charge of the village a rent of Rs. 114 8 0 was assessed on the former area and a rent of Rs. 274 2 6 was assessed on the latter on the ground that the thekadars had no right to deprive the Government of the rent which the said area had been fetching before the trees were planted. The thekadars evidently held certain groves besides, which were of old standing.

In the waib-ul arz prepared at the first Regular Settlement a portion of plot No. 2,000 khassra, measuring 62 bighas, 19 biswas, 2 biswansis, was shown as an old grove held by Bisheshwar Prasad, Ram Narain, Ganesh Prasad and Balbhaddar Prasad rent free from 24 years. The remaining portion was assessed at Rs. 31. Another grove standing on a portion of No. 2672 old khassra, measuring 5 bighas, was similarly shown as held by the same persons rent-free from 16 years. The remaining portion of that plot was assessed at Rs. 4-6-0. Another plot No. 2034 old khassra, measuring 85 bighas, 4 biswas, 18 biswansis, out of which 27 bighas, 3 biswas were grove land, was shown as rented at Rs. 12-15-0. There was a fourth plot bearing No. 2622 old khassra, measuring 2 bighas, 18 biswas, 18 biswansis, which was shown as land held on grain rent amounting to Rs. 15 per year.

By the time the recent Settlement was started, the condition of things appears to have been considerably changed. The khatauni for 1299 Fasli prepared before that Settlement shows that plot No. 2000 old khassra, which contained 62 bighas, 19 biswas, 2 biswansis of grove land held rent-free at the time of the first Regular Settlement, was assessed to a rental of Rs. 11-9-0, due possibly to a portion of the grove land having been brought under cultivation. Plot No. 2672 old khassra, which contained 5 bighas of grove land and 6 bighas, 13 biswas, 6 biswansis of cultivated land, was assessed at Rs. 6 6 0 instead of Rs. 4 6 0 which was the rent assessed at the time of the Regular Settlement. The third plot No. 2034 old khassra, measuring 60 bighas, 18 biswas, was assessed at Rs. 9 8 0 and was held by Ram Narain, and No. 2034½ old khassra, measuring 25 bighas, 4 biswas was assessed at Rs. 44 and was held by Gaya Prasad. With regard to the fourth plot No. 2622 old khassra the rent was shown to have risen from Rs. 15 to Rs. 16-4-0.

LADHA SINGH v. AHMAD YAR.

At the last Settlement the entire area held by the defendants, cultivated and uncultivated, was lumped up together and assessed at a rental of Rs. 167 8 0, representing a total area of 131 bighas, 3 biswas. Out of the said area the defendants have since been ejected from 26 bighas, 13 biswas of cultivated land. The present suit has been filed with regard to the remainder of the land which is occupied by trees. The notice issued by the plaintiff to eject the defendants from the latter was disallowed by the Revenue Court on the ground that the land was held under grove-tenure from which the defendants could not be ejected. The Court of first instance decreed the claim for proportionate rent in respect of the grove land in question. The lower Appellate Court disallowed the claim.

The khatauni for 1299 Fasli indicates the rent which was assessed on the grove lands in question before the last Settlement took place. From the proceedings which took place in 1859 it is evident that the proprietor of the village for the time being assented to cultivated land being converted into grove land on condition that the persons who planted the grove, paid rent therefor at the rate at which rent was levied in respect of it before it was so converted. Whether the groves which now exist are the groves which were then planted cannot definitely be ascertained. Most of the trees then planted may have died out or been cut by the persons to whose shares the land occupied by the said groves may have been allotted by partition. The thekadars may not, moreover, have considered it profitable to maintain all the trees after the land was assessed to rent. In any case, in 1299 Fasli the rent found assessed on the portion of No. 2000 old corresponding with No. 2208 new khassas, measuring 62 bighas 19 biswas 2 biswansis, was Rs. 11-9 0, that assessed on No. 2722 old corresponding with 3133 new khassas, measuring 11 bighas, 13 biswas, 6 biswansis, out of which 9 bighas, 14 biswas are now in dispute, was Rs. 6 6 0, that on the portion of No. 2034 old corresponding with No. 2266 new khassas out of which only 27 bighas, 18 biswas, 13 biswansis are now grove lands, was Rs. 9-8-0 and that on No. 2622 old corresponding with No. 3000 new khassas, measuring 3 bighas, 18 biswas, 18 biswansis, was Rs. 16-14-0. The proportionate rent for which the defendants are liable for the grove land in question according to that arrangement is thus Rs. 11-9-0 for land No. 2228, Rs. 5-5-0 for No. 3133, Rs. 9 8 0 for No. 2266 and Rs. 16-14 0 for No. 3000, or Rs. 44-4-0 in all. The claim is for Rabi 1323, 1324 and 1325 Fasli.

The appeals are, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff decreed for Rs. 10-2 0 with interest at one per cent. per mensem from the date the rents fell due and proportionate costs here and hitherto and future interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till realization against the defendants, who will bear their own costs throughout.

Appeals allowed.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), s. 6—Mortgage by agriculturist in favour of third person in order to pay off debt due to non-agriculturist, validity of.

There is nothing illegal or opposed to public policy in a third party coming in and taking the land of an agriculturist on mortgage, undertaking in exchange to pay off the debts due by the mortgagor to a non-agriculturist [p. 411, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act III of 1919, for revision of the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujrat, dated the 28th November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Gujrat, dated the 29th July 1919.

Mr. Beni Pershad Khosla, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Zafulla Khan, for Ahmad Yar, Respondent No. 1.

KUMUD BAN V. TRIPURA CHARAN.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case was owed Rs. 234 by Ahmad and Muhammad. As the plaintiff is a non agriculturist, the land of Ahmad and Muhammad could not be alienated in his favour, so Ahmad and Muhammad mortgaged some of their land in favour of Ahmad Yar who executed a bond for Rs. 200 in favour of the plaintiff and another bond for Rs. 34 in favour of the plaintiff's son. The plaintiff's son subsequently sued on the bond for Rs. 34 and got a decree against Ahmad Yar for Rs. 80 principal and interest. The plaintiff in the present suit sues on the bond for Rs. 200, claiming Rs. 500 principal and interest. Ahmad Yar's defence is that he was only a nominal mortgagee, introduced merely because the Land Alienation Act was a bar to the land being alienated in favour of the plaintiff. The first Court held that the transaction was a benami one but gave a decree for Rs. 200 against Ahmad Yar, remarking that he would retain his interest as mortgagee, and disallowing the claim for interest on the ground that the plaintiff had all along been receiving a share of the produce of the land. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal held that as Ahmad Yar was only a benami mortgagee, no decree could be passed against him, and so the suit was dismissed with costs. The plaintiff applies to this Court for revision.

There is nothing illegal or opposed to public policy in a third party coming in and taking the land on mortgage, undertaking in exchange to pay off the debts due by the mortgagors to a non agriculturist. Farther, in the present case it appears that Ahmad Yar has since attempted to sell his rights as mortgagee to another agriculturist, though I am told that this transaction fell through and mutation of names was refused. I am unable to see any reason for releasing Ahmad Yar from the obligation which he undertook when the land was mortgaged in his favour. There seems to me no sufficient reason for holding that Ahmad Yar's name was merely borrowed and that he never really held any rights as mortgagee. The mere fact that the plaintiff subsequently received a share of the produce does not necessarily point to the transaction being benami. Such an arrangement might well have been come to between himself and the mortgagors in order to prevent interest charges from swelling. I consider, therefore, that Ahmad Yar is liable under the bond which he had executed, but as the lower Courts have found that the plaintiff has been receiving a share of the produce, the plaintiff will recover only the principal sum due under the bond.

As to the amount which the mortgagors will have to pay Ahmad Yar to redeem the land from him, this need not be determined in the present suit; it will probably be a matter for decision should a redemption suit be brought later on.

I accept this application for revision and, reversing the decision of the Senior Subordinate Judge, I give the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 200 against Ahmad Yar. The plaintiff himself complicated matters by taking the produce of the land which was not mortgaged to him, and I leave the parties to bear their own costs in all Courts.

Rules against the order of the District Judge, Chittagong.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bipin Behari Ghose (Jr.) (with him Babus Chandra Kant Sen and Promathanath Banerjee), for the Petitioner.—The petitioners before your Lordships question the propriety of an order made by the District Judge of Chittagong with regard to the annual budget of a certain Hindu religious endowment, the temple at Sitakundu, which is the subject-matter of a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By a consent order it was arranged that the pronami offered to the Mahant of the temple by the faithful would be his personal property and would form no part of the income of the endowment. It is now ordered that as the pronami is to go to the Mahant, certain items of expenditure of the endowment will not be met by the income of the endowment. According to the consent order, as also in accordance with well-established law, the pronami is the personal property of the Mahant. That being so, there is no reason why all the legitimate expenses of the endowment should not be met by its income. Moreover, in the budgets as submitted by the Mahant there is not a single item of expenditure which is not legitimate. The expenses of repairing the Mahant's residence have been disallowed. This cannot be done as the Mahant is entitled to maintain his position and dignity as head of the religious endowment. Refers to Umeshananda Dut Jha v. Ravaneshwar Prosad Singh (1).

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Babus Hirulal Chakravarty and Sarat Chandra Mitra), for the Opposite Parties.—The District Judge passed a perfectly correct order. When the consent order was made, it was understood that, as the pronami was to go to the Mahant, certain items of expenditure would not, in future, be borne by the endowment. This was the most natural arrangement, for the Mahant was not to acquire property. Whatever income may come to him as Mahant should be spent for religious purposes.

Babu Bipin Behari Ghose was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

MOORE, J., ACIG. C. J.—We are invited in this Rule to consider the propriety of an order made by the District Judge with regard to the annual budget of the Sita Kunda Temple, which is the subject-matter of a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, in his Court.

The litigation has been pending for many years. On the 20th November 1911 an appeal was preferred to this Court against the decision of the District Judge declining to remove the late Mahant. In this Court a decree was made by consent of parties, on the 5th February 1915, and a scheme was drawn up, on the model of the scheme sanctioned by the Judicial Committee in the case of Prayag Doss Ji Varu v. Terumila Srirangacharla Varu (2), and applied by this Court in Umeshananda Dut Jha v. Ravaneshwar Prosad Singh (1). One of the directions given in the scheme was that the Mahant, two months prior to the commencement of every Bengali year, would prepare and file in the District Court a budget of the expenses to be incurred in the ensuing year. There was a supplementary provision that the Treasurer would put the Mahant in funds for all disbursements according to the budget and for any further expenditure considered necessary by the Mahant; but unless by leave of the District Court such further expenditure was not to exceed Rs. 500 during any one year. The scheme has been in operation for some years, and there have been disputes from time to time as to the items to be inserted in the budget, with the result that by a subsequent consent order it was decided that the pronami, or personal offering to the Mahant by the faithful, should not be treated as part of the income of the endowment. After this order had been made by consent, the budget for the following year was submitted by the Mahant to the District Court. Objections were thereupon taken on behalf of some of the plaintiffs who had instituted the suit as representatives of the Hindu community, that certain items of expenditure should be excluded on the ground that as the pronami was now to be taken by the Mahant, some of the items of expenditure, which in previous years had been met from the income of the endowment, should be thrown upon him. The District Judge has accepted this contention as well founded and has modified the budget accordingly. We are of opinion that this view cannot possibly be supported.

Mr. Sanyal for the plaintiffs has contended that it was understood when the consent order was made with regard to the pronami that certain items of expenditure should no longer be borne in future by the endowment. It is impossible for us to entertain this suggestion; whatever the motives of the parties might have been, they are bound by the consent order so long as it stands, and by that consent order the pronami is the personal property of the Mahant. This, indeed, is in accordance with what is well established law. It was pointed out by Mr. Justice Banerjee in the case of Girijanund Datta Jha v. Sailajanund Datta Jha (3) that there is a fundamental distinction between the offerings made to the deity and the offerings made to the Mahant personally. If offerings are made to the deity, they belong to the endowment and must be applied by the Mahant for the purposes of the endowment: on the other hand, if offerings are made by the faithful to the Mahant personally, they do not become merged in the income of the endowment. Illustrations of the applications of this principle will be found in the cases of Dhadphale v. Gurav (4), Kashi Ohandra Ohuckerbutty v. Kailash Ohandra Bandopadhyaya (5) and Kalyana Venkataramana Aiyangar v. Kasturi Ranga Aiyangar (6) whether a particular offering is made to the deity or to the Mahant personally depends upon the intention of the faithful devotee and no inflexible rule can be formulated, no general test can be prescribed, to determine whether on a particular occasion the offering has been made to the deity or to the Mahant personally. But so far as the pronami is concerned there can be no doubt that it is made to the Mahant personally and becomes his personal property. It is, consequently, impossible to maintain the view that, because the Mahant takes the pronami, certain items of expenditure, which in previous years had been legitimately thrown upon the income of the endowment, should thenceforward be thrown upon the Mahant personally. The items have been placed before us, and we are of opinion that they were rightly charged on the endowment in previous years, and should not have been thrown on the Mahant in the budget under consideration.

A question has been raised as to whether money should be spent out of the income of the endowment for the repairs of the dwelling-house of the Mahant. We are of opinion that the necessary repairs should be effected from the income of the endowment. The dwelling house of the Mahant is part and parcel of the endowment and must be maintained in a suitable condition so as to be proper residence for the spiritual head of the religious foundation. As was pointed out in the case of Umeshanand Dut Jha v. Ravaneshwar Prosad Singh (1), so long as the Mahant remains in office, he must be treated with the dignity which belongs to the holder of that office. In the present case, there is ample indication on the part of the plaintiffs that they have endeavoured to take objections which, if accepted, would seriously affect the dignity and position of the Mahant.

The result is that the Rule is made absolute, the order of the District Judge set aside, and the budget approved as submitted by the Mahant.

We are finally of opinion that it is not necessary to have an Examining Committee, (6) 88 Ind. Cas. 73; 20 M. L. T. 490; 5 L. W. 625; (1917) M. W. N. 400; 40 M. 212; 31 M. L. J. 777.

on the obvious ground that multiplicity of machinery always leads to increase of dispute. The Examining Committee must consequently be discharged. Rule No. 50F will be discharged.

Where a temple was built for public worship and has been open always to such worship the facts that the first worship was performed by a member of the public; that the temple has received further grants and gifts from the public; that fairs and public worship are annually celebrated, and that admissions as to the temple being wakf have been made in previous litigation, are sufficient, in the absence of evidence that the temple was gifted to a particular Mahant, to raise the presumption of a public dedication, and the Mahant of the institution is not the absolute owner of the whole income derived from the trust property, the assets being vested in him as owner for the time being as trustee for the institution nor, except in cases of necessity, has he any power to alienate the property; nor can he apply the surplus income to his own personal uses but must add the same as an accretion to the trust property. Appeals from the decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 14th May 1919.

Babu Mahesh Prasad, for the Appellants in Appeal No. 35 and Respondents in No. 47.

Mr. M. N. Chak, for the Respondents in Appeal No. 35 and Appellants in Appeal No. 47.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in these appeals relates to the Mahabir Temple situated in Aliganj, one of the suburbs of the Lucknow City, and the properties appertaining thereto. The defendants and their ancestors have been in charge of the temple from some generations. The allegation of the plaintiffs is that the defendant, Ram Narain, who describes himself as the Mahant of the temple, has been mismanaging the affairs of the temple and neglecting the repairs of the buildings attached thereto; that the other defendants have also been fattening themselves on the income derived from the temple property; that some of the temple property has been wrongfully alienated and the religious services at the temple are neglected. They also allege that the defendant, Ram Narain, has a concubine in his keeping; that some of the other defendants are also men of an undesirable character, and that no accounts of the income and expenditure of the trust property have been kept by them. They sue for the removal of the defendants from the charge of the trust property and ask that a suitable scheme may be framed for the proper administration of the trust.

The defendants deny that the temple was a public trust of a religious or charitable nature. They allege that the temple was their private property, to which the public had no right of access except on such conditions as the manager of the defendants' family might from time to time impose, and that they have kept up the performance of religious services regularly. They admit that they have kept no account of the income and expenditure of the property, and that they have alienated a small portion of the same, but they assert that they have made those alienations for family purposes and have made repairs and reconstructions in the course of their management. They also assert that they have been in adverse possession of the disputed property and that the claim is barred by limitation.

The Court below found that the temple in question, with the property attached to it, was a public trust of a religious and charitable nature; that the defendants had mismanaged the trust and neglected to keep the temple property in proper repair, and that one of the defendants, Ram Narain, who described himself as the Mahant of the temple, had a concubine in his keeping and was unfit to continue in charge of it. It accordingly framed a scheme for the administration of the trust, the essential features of which were that the defendants, Lachhman Das, Radha Kishan and Ram Chandra, were permitted to realize the income of the trust property and to appropriate 75 per cent. of the income for the maintenance of their respective families and to pay the remaining 25 per cent. to the committee of management for carrying out the purposes of the trust. Both the parties are dissatisfied with that decision.

The first question for consideration is, whether the temple in question, with the property attached to it, is a private trust or a public trust of a religious or charitable nature. It appears from an inscription affixed above the northern door of the main temple building that the temple was built in its present form by Lala Jatmal, in accordance with the suggestion of Mahant Khasa Ram, in Sambat 1840 or 1783 A. D. The inscription records that the construction of the mandak, or dome of the temple, was completed on Tuesday Baisakh Sudi 5, Sambat 1840, corresponding with the 6th May 1783; that Lala Jatmal received the grace or blessing of Shri Mahabirji and that Lala Sada Nand performed the worship. It is not possible to say whether the idol of Mahabirji was brought at the time from some other place and installed there or whether some sort of temple or structure containing the idol existed there from before. The latter is, however, more likely, for the date given is not the date of the installation but the date of the completion of the dome, and the worship is said to have been performed not by Jatmal but by Sada Nand. The main temple building contains, in addition to the temple proper, several apartments for the accommodation of pilgrims or visitors and the residence of the Fujari or Mahant. Round that building is a large enclosure marked as No. 331 in the old Settlement map of Shekhpur, measuring 2 bighas, 2 biswas, with a large pond and an open piece of land standing behind it on the west, which was entered in the name of Sheo Din, the then Mahant, at the old Settlement. The entire plot with the pond and the land on the west is evidently the property of the temple and has remained in the possession of every successive Mahant since except for such alienations, as any of them may have made, the validity of which cannot be determined in this proceeding.

In 1267 Fasli, Durga and Ram Shankar, the Chowdhris of Aliganj, executed a mahearnama, declaring that 5/6ths of a grove standing in front of the asthan Mahabir, had been given by their ancestors to the Mahant of the Mahabir Temple and the remaining 1/6th share had been sold by Babu Ram to Moti (Exhibit A-1). As the temple has a door on the west, too, it is not improbable that the land entered in the name of Mahant Sheo Din at the old Settlement may have been the site of the grove herein referred to.

In 1269 Fasli, Chhedi and Dukhu gave two plots of land in Aliganj to Thakur Das, the Mahant of the Temple of Hanumanji (Exhibit A-2); and in the same year Ram Dayal, who held a part of the house of Chheda and Dukhi, sold that part to the Mahant (Exhibit A-3). Thakur Das is stated to have been the brother of Hulas Das, the name of whose son, Sheo Din, figures in the Ahasra of the old Settlement. The exact identity of these plots is not, however, ascertainable.

On the 18th June 1855 Sheo Din, the then Mahant of the temple, mortgaged a dalan and a shed standing in the enclosure of the temple with Ram Din. In 1876 Musammat Janki, the widow of the younger brother of Ram Din, filed a suit for possession of the same, alleging that she had been wrongfully ejected therefrom by Gopi Nath, the predecessor of the present defendant, in November 1894. The sons and the widow of Gopi Nath, who had died meanwhile, defended that suit on the ground that the whole temple with the buildings appertaining thereto was the property of Mahabirji and was waqf property and that no person had a right to mortgage the same (Exhibit 8). They claimed to be in possession of the said property as trustees, and succeeded in establishing that the mortgage made by Sheo Din was invalid (Exhibit 7). Sheo Din had died 28 or 29 years earlier, leaving a widow, Musammât Makhana, but without issue. He was apparently succeeded in the office of Mahant by Gopi Nath, a descendant of another branch of the family, to which Khasa Ram belonged. Gur Sahai, the eldest son of Gopi Nath, was examined in that case. He admitted that the temple was reputed to have been constructed by Jatmal, that he was the Pujari of the temple, and that the Mahant had the right to the income of the temple but no right to the property attached to the temple (Exhibit 10).

On the 28th March 1898 Musammât Bitto, the widow of Gopi Nath, executed a Will, wherein she declared that the whole property in her possession, though inherited, was the riyasat or property of Mahabirji and that her sons should divide the offerings at the temple, after paying all the expenses connected with the temple, among themselves in equal shares, but none of them would have any power to alienate the property of the temple (riyasat mutadliq Asthan Mahabirji) (Exhibit A-9).

On the 24th June 1904 Gur Sahai executed a Will bequeathing his one-fifth share in the offerings and in the temple property, which he described as his own, to his two sons, treating the grove, pond, trees and land as forming part of the Mahabir Temple (Exhibit A-10).

The defendant's own witnesses admit that the public have a right to go to the temple for worship. Babu Hari Shankar (D. W. No. 1) states that the public go inside the temple for worship and every Hindu has a right to go into it for the purpose. Mohan Lal (D. W. No. 7) and Shiam Bahari (D. W. No. 14) say the same. So does Bhagwant Singh (D. W. No. 2), though he adds that the defendants can stop them if they like, but have never done so. There are several respectable witnesses produced by the plaintiff, who depose that the temple is public property, at which regular worship is performed in the morning and evening and an annual fair is held, which is attended by from 30,000 to 40,000 persons and that the public have a right of worship at the temple. The defendant, Ram Narain, admits that several presents in the shape of brass doors, brass phandis and the like have been made by the worshippers to the temple and that, though the members of the family of Gopi Nath divide the offerings, the temple or the buildings attached thereto cannot be divided or alienated.

In a part of the temple building there is, for instance, a lantern post, made of stone, stating in Hindi that the entire stone work was done by Chandi Din, Mistri, and Janki Prasad in 1802. The main gate of the temple possesses doors plated with brass, which bear an inscription in English, Hindi and Urdu, stating that the doors were constructed by the employees of the Lucknow Iron Works on the 7th June 1910. Above the eastern door of the temple there is another inscription in Hindi, stating that the workmen of the Lucknow Narrow Gauge Railway, under their Mistri Jawahir, had constructed the Tiba in Sambat 1965 or 1908 A. D. At another place there is a wooden post for putting up a flag, which is covered with brass plates, bearing an inscription, indicating that the same had been constructed by Pancham Srivastava and another workman of Mashakganj, Lucknow, in Sambat 1974 or 1917 A. D. From the main road there is a pathway leading to the temple, on either side of which there are raised platforms for stalls and some apartments in a more less ruined condition, intended either for the use of shop-keepers or for the accommodation of pilgrims at the annual fairs. On the occasions of these annual fairs large offerings are made at the temple which the Mahant for the time being has hitherto been appropriating. The worshippers visit the temple and make offerings during the other parts of the year, too, and more particularly on Tuesdays without any let or hinderance.

These facts are inconsistent with the temple having been the private property of the defendants. It was built by Lala Jatmal evidently for public worship and has been open to public worship ever since. There is no evidence that Lala Jatmal made a gift of the temple in favour of Mahant Khasa Ram. After the construction of the temple was completed, the first worship was performed by a member of the public and not by Khasa Ram. The temple has received further grants and gifts from the public from time to time. The celebration of annual fairs and public worship, read with the inscriptions borne by the temple and the admissions made by the defendants in the previous litigation, go to show that the temple and the land and buildings appertaining thereto are public property. As pointed out in Mohan Lalji v. Gordhan Lalji Maharaj (1) and Lachhman Das Buba v. Rajan Lal (2) a presumption of a public dedication would not be unjustified in the circumstances.

The next question is, whether Mahant Ram Narain and the other defendants have been mismanaging the affairs of the temple and neglecting the performance of regular worship there. The Commissioner reports that he found some of the buildings in the enclosure of the temple in a dilapidated condition. Bhagwant Singh (D. W. No. 2) says that the buildings to the west are in a dilapidated state from seven or eight years. The defendants admit that they have kept no account of the income and expenditure connected with the temple. They also admit that they have been appropriating the entire income derived from the temple and that some portions of the temple property have been alienated or mortgaged by them.

A Mahant is not the absolute owner of the whole income derived from the trust property. All the assets of the Mutt or Asthal are vested in him as the owner thereof for the time being in trust for the institution itself. The nature of the ownership is, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (3), an ownership in trust for the Mutt or institution itself and it must not be forgotten that, although large administrative powers are no doubt vested in the regining Mahant, this trust does exist and that it must be respected. The Mahant has no power to alienate any property except in cases of necessity (Murugesam

Pillai v. Gnana Sambanda Pandara Sannadhi (4) and Palanippa Ohetty v. Deivarikamony Pandara Sannadhi (5) and even in regard to the surplus income his powers are of a very limited character, for, as pointed out by Lord Shaw in Arunachellam Ohetty v. Venkatachalapathi Guruswamikal (6), he cannot apply the surplus income to his own personal purposes other than those connected with his duties or the dignity of his office, but must add the same as an accretion to the trust property. Ram Narain claims to be the present Mahant; but he has neglected his duties as Mahant and his living with a concubine. His brother, Ram Bharose, is insane. Gur Sahai is dead. No explanation is forthcoming why the repairs of the buildings attached to the temple have not been carried out and no accounts are available to show how the surplus income, if any, has been dealt with. Neither Ram Sahai, nor any of the members of the family of the defendant, can, therefore, be trusted with the sole management of the trust.

The scheme of management framed by the Court below gives a seat on the committee of management to Lachhman Das, one of the members of the family, which has hitherto supplied the successive Mahants. The line of Mahant Khasa Ram, who was originally in charge of the temple when it was built in its present form by Lala Jatmal, has already become extinct. Sheo Din was the last representative of that line. His widow, usammah Makhana, has died too. During her lifetime Gopi Nath, a descendant of Aa Ram, the brother of Khasa Ram, managed the trust and acted as Mahant. On the death of Gopi Nath his eldest son, Gur Sahai, succeeded to the office. He was succeeded by Ram Narain, the present Mahant, who is unfit to hold that position. Lachhman Das, the next senior member of the family, is a fit person to represent the family on the committee. The scheme of management is, however, defective because, though it nominally places the administration of the trust in the hands of the committee, it practically allows three members of the family of Mahant Gopi Nath, namely, Lachhman Das, Radha Kishen and Ram Chandra, to realize the income and appropriate 75 per cent. thereof and to make over the remainder to the committee of management for carrying out the purposes of the trust, inclusive of the repairs of the temple buildings. Two of these persons are not even members of the committee. The percentage of the income allowed to the defendants is, moreover, excessive and leaves an insufficient margin for the repairs of the temple property and carrying out the objects of the trust. It seems desirable, therefore, to alter the scheme so as to entrust the management to five respectable Hindu residents of Lucknow, willing to work on the committee, one of whom should be the representative of the family to which Mahant Khasa Ram belonged. Consistently with the objects of the trust the members of the family cannot be allowed more than 50 per cent. of the total income and that allowance should be liable to forfeiture or reduction, if the member of the family who is placed on the committee or the other members of the family fail to discharge the obligations connected with the regular performance of worship and such other duties as may be assigned to them in connection with the trust in an efficient and faithful manner.

The parties agree that, in the place of Pandit Ram Narain Shukla and Lala Partab Chand, Babu Gar Prasad, a contractor of Lucknow, and Lala Dalli Sab, a cloth-merchant of Aliganj, be placed on the committee. The extent of the trust property, as ascertainable, is sufficiently indicated above. Any further property that may hereafter be found to appertain to the temple shall also be treated as trust property, as also gifts or grants which may henceforth be made for the purposes of the trust by the worshippers or persons interested in the trust.

The appeal of the plaintiffs is, therefore, allowed in so far that the scheme of management framed by the learned Additional Judge will be amended in accordance with the scheme appended below. The appeal of the defendants is dismissed. The plaintiffs will get their costs here and below from the income of the trust property. The defendants will bear their own costs throughout.

THE SCHEME OF MANAGEMENT.

1. The endowment shall be called the Aliganj Shri Mahabirji Trust.

2. Trust shall comprise the temple of Mahabirji in Aliganj, Lucknow, with the lands, buildings, groves, trees, wells and other properties moveable and immoveable appertaining or belonging thereto and shall include any offerings that may be made at the temple on any grants or gifts made therefor and any property that may hereafter be acquired by the Trust or be given or dedicated to it.

3. The objects of the Trust shall be

- (a) to maintain the temple of Shri Mahabirji and the properties appertaining thereto in a proper state of repair and in a good sanitary condition,
- (b) to arrange for the regular performance of the customary religious services and worship thereat,
- (c) to look after and arrange for the convenience of pilgrims or visitors visiting the temple for worship or devotion,
- (d) to do such other acts, religious, educational or charitable as may be considered desirable by the committee for the advancement of learning or religious instruction or for the support of siddhus, fakirs or indigent students visiting or staying in the precincts of the temple for such instruction.

4. The Trust shall be administered by a committee consisting of five Hindu residents of Lucknow as members, of whom one shall be a representative of the family of Mahant Gopi Nath, related by blood or adoption, so long as such a representative is available, with power to appoint a Secretary and to elect a Chairman from amongst themselves for one year or for such period as the committee may fix.

5. The first committee shall consist of (a) Lachhman Das, representing the family of Mahant Gopi Nath, (b) Babu Basdeo Lal Bhargava, Advocate, (c) Babu Lachhman Prasad Srivastava, Vakil, (d) Babu

GAURI NATH KAKAJI v. RAM NARAYAN.

Gur Prasad, contractor and (a) Babu Dalli Sab cloth merchant, Aliganj.

6. The Committee shall meet at least once in every three months to examine accounts, check receipts and expenditure for the preceding months and to devise and adopt measures for carrying out the purposes of the trust and the protection of the trust property. It shall also hold an annual meeting, in the month of Jeth as far as practicable, to pass the annual accounts and to frame the budget for the succeeding year and also to elect a Secretary and a Chairman for the succeeding year or for such period as the Committee may fix.

7. A book showing the proceedings of the Committee and the members attending each meeting shall be maintained by the Secretary.

8. The Secretary shall also maintain at the main-gate of the temple a visitor's book open to the public in which any suggestions which any member of the public or any person interested in the Trust may have to make for the better administration of the Trust and any complaint which he may have against the servants or employees or managers of the Trust could be recorded. The Secretary shall lay the visitor's book for the consideration of the Committee of management at its meetings, or earlier when necessary.

9. Subject to the control and direction of the Committee, the member of the family of Mahant Gopi Nath appointed or hereafter elected on the Committee shall, for the time being, be in immediate charge of the worship and religious services to be daily conducted at the temple and shall keep a regular and accurate account of the offerings received and the expenditure incurred in connection with such worship and religious services from day to day in such manner as the Committee may prescribe, and in lieu of such services shall receive for the maintenance of himself and the other members of the family of Mahant Gopi Nath, so long as they or any of them exist and continue faithfully to discharge those duties, an allowance equal to 50 per cent. of the total income of the Trust, such allowance being liable to forfeiture or reduction for non-fulfilment, neglect or improper discharge of any of the obligations herein imposed or unwillingness of the members of the said family to undertake the same, on an application made to the principal Court of original jurisdiction by any two members of the Committee.

10. If the arrangement referred to in the preceding rule is at any time found to be unsatisfactory it will be open to the Secretary, subject to the control and direction of the Committee of management, to adopt such measures as may be considered necessary for the performance of the duties therein referred to.

11. Subject to rule 9, the entire management of the Trust shall be vested in the Committee of management who shall be empowered to make such arrangement as may be considered necessary for the keeping and examination of accounts, the realization of the rents and income of the Trust property, the collection and disposal of the daily offerings at the temple and the other dues connected therewith, the engagement, dismissal and punishment of servants and the safe custody or investment of the trust property and funds as may from time to time be considered necessary. Every matter coming up before the Committee, shall, except as hereinafter provided, be decided by a majority of votes. In the absence of the Chairman any member present at the meeting may be elected as Chairman for the time being and in the case of equality of votes the President or Chairman for the time being shall have a second or casting vote.

12. Three members shall form a quorum, but when a meeting has been adjourned for want of a quorum the adjourned meeting shall not, except as hereinafter provided, be governed by this rule.

13. If any member fails to attend the sittings of the Committee for four consecutive meetings or is absent from Lucknow for a period of more than one year he shall be deemed, if the Committee so declares, to have resigned his seat on the Committee.

14. A member of the Committee found guilty of any malfeasance, misfeasance or other improper conduct or otherwise rendered unfit by any physical ailment shall be liable to removal at the instance of any two members of the Committee or any two persons interested in the Trust by an application made to the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction.

15. On the occurrence of any vacancy in the Committee by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise, the remaining trustees, if not less than three in number, may, subject to the condition laid down in rule 4, by mutual concurrence fill up the vacancy out of the Hindu residents of Lucknow. In case of their failure or disagreement or in any other event, the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, Lucknow, may, on the application of any two persons interested in the Trust, select and appoint a person to fill up the vacancy in the manner aforesaid.

16. Till an appointment is made to fill up a vacancy, any act done by the remaining member or members shall, notwithstanding anything contained in rules 4 and 12, be as effectual and binding as if it had been done by the Committee itself.

17. The Committee shall sue and be sued in the name of the Trust through its Secretary and shall have power to do all acts which might be reasonable and proper for the realization, protection, or benefit of the trust property or for the protection of the title thereto, and for carrying out the object of the Trust, including an authority to compromise, abandon, submit to arbitration, or otherwise settle any debt, account, claim or any other thing relating to the Trust, and to execute any agreements, instruments or composition, release and other things as may in the interest of the Trust seem expedient.

18. Any application arising out of this scheme or connected with the Trust shall be made in continuance of these proceedings in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction at Lucknow, and it shall be within the competence of that Court at any time to amend and modify this scheme or any of its provisions in any manner it thinks fit either of its own motion or on an application made by not less than two persons interested in the trust and also to issue further or other directions as may appear necessary from time to time.

Ejectment—Occupancy holding, non-transferable, purchaser of, whether tenant, and liable to ejectment.

The purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding who is recorded in the Rent Roll as being in possession merely, does not acquire the status of a tenant, and is liable to ejectment. [p. 474, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Dacca, dated the 7th of April 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Manikganj, dated the 30th of April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarot Chandra Basak (with him Babus Kamani Mohan Chatterjee, Tarakeswar Pal Choudhuri, and Promatha Nath Bandhopadhyaya), for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment on the ground of the defendant having purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding. He is, therefore, in the position of a trespasser. Both Courts have found that the holding was non-transferable, and that the defendant had acquired no rights by virtue of his purchase and further that the landlord had not recognised the transferee. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's suit. But on appeal by the defendant the suit has been dismissed. Now, the defendant bought the holding at a sale held in execution of a mortgage decree and obtained possession on the 12th February 1912. The holding which is a temporarily settled estate has been held by the plaintiff since 1875 under periodical leases. The last Settlement was for 1908-1915. Before the expiry of that Settlement the plaintiff was called upon to execute a kabuliyat which was done in 1913. The Settlement thereby was for 15 years, i.e., from 1915-1930. One of the terms of the kabuliyat was that the plaintiff would respect the rights of all tenants, sub-tenants and others within the mahal. The Rent-Roll of the estate was prepared at BROJO GOPAL GOSSAIN V. RAJANI KANTA GHOSE.

1914. Then the holding in dispute is recorded as an occupancy holding in the possession of the defendant. The present suit was instituted on the 19th January 1915 at a time when he was perfectly entitled to institute the suit. The learned Judge has relied upon the Rent Rolls and has dismissed the suit. The Rent Roll was finally published during the pendency of the suit. The institution of the suit is the most effective challenge to the entry in the Rent Roll of the name of the defendant as the occupier. The mere entry does not amount to the presumption of the tenancy. Refers to Tapanidhi Raghunath Puri v. Pitambar Gajendra Mahapaty (1). They were not recorded as tenants but as possessors. The kabuliyat speaks of the existing rights as between the landlord and the defendant. There can, therefore, be no question of estoppel. The defendant was not a tenant at the time the kabuliyat was executed. The finding is in my favour that there was no recognition. Refers to section 10, Regulation VII of 1822. Under that section the proprietor appeared before the Collector and accepted settlement when the kabuliyat was executed. The cause of action accrued in 1910, when the sale took place. There was no change in the rights of the parties when the suit was instituted in 1915.

Babu Asita Ranjan Ghosh, for the Respondent.—There is only one point, whether under the Record of Rights I have got any right to the land and secondly whether I am liable to be ejected. The other questions raised are wholly concluded by findings of fact. The lower Appellate Court clearly finds that I am a tenant and not a trespasser. The record was prepared before the execution of the kabuliyat. The kabuliyat also provided that the plaintiff would be bound to recognise tenants, sub tenants and others who would be recorded in the Record of Rights. Refers to Tapanidhi Raghunath Puri v. Pitambar Gajendra Mahapaty (1), Chandramoni Mohanti v. Manmatha Nath (2), Jarip Sardar v. Jogendra Nath Chatterjee (3). I submit the entry of my name in the Record of Rights clearly indicates that I am a tenant of the mahal.

Dr. Basak, replied in brief.

(3) 5 Ind. Cas. 719; 31 O. L. J. 78; 24 C. W. N. 68.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment which was decreed by the Munsif of Manikgunj and dismissed on appeal by the Additional District Judge of Dacca. It is found by both the Courts below that the defendant is a purchaser of an occupancy holding which is non-transferable by custom and that his transfer has not been in fact recognised by the landlord. The plaintiff is the proprietor of a temporarily settled estate. She has been holding this estate since 1871 with renewals of agreement at different periods. The second term of her settlement expired in 1915; but on the 12th June 1913 the plaintiff executed a kabuliyat for a term of 15 years from 1915. In that kabuliyat there was a clause in the following terms: "I agree to recognise recorded rights of tenants, sub-tenants, Mandals and others within the mahal." In the Rent Roll the holding that forms the subject of this dispute was recorded in the following entry:— "Jote Ganda Dewan and others; possessor Rajani Kant Ghose." Rajani Kanta Ghose is the principal defendant. The lower Appellate Court has found that, in consequence of this condition in the kabuliyat and this entry in the Rent Roll, the plaintiff is bound to recognise Rajani Kant Ghose as a tenant. Had this defendant been recorded as a tenant, there is ample authority for holding that the plaintiff after executing the kabuliyat could not deny the tenancy. See the cases of Tapanidhi Raghunath Puri v. Pitambar Gajendra Mahapaty (1), Chandramoni Mohanti v. Manmatha Nath (2), and Jarip Sardar v. Jogendra Nath Chatterjee (3). But I am unable to agree with the learned Additional District Judge that the entry in the Rent Roll recorded that the defendant had the right of a tenant so as to make the clause of the kabuliyat quoted above applicable. The entry was that Rajani Kanta Ghose was in possession of the holding; but it is not recorded that he is a tenant nor is it recorded that he had any right to remain in possession. Such being the case, the plaintiff is in no way barred from bringing this suit in ejectment; and on the finding of both the Courts that the defendant is only in possession as purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding, he cannot resist the plaintiff's suit in ejectment.

The result is that this appeal is allowed the decree of the lower Appellate Courts to set aside and that of the Munsif restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, r. 1, O. IX, r. 3—Date fixed for plaintiff to appear and find out date of hearing—Failure of plaintiff to appear—Suit, whether can be dismissed for default.

Where no date has as yet been fixed for the appearance of the defendant within the meaning of Order V, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court has no power to dismiss the suit for default under Order IX, rule 3 of the Code. [p 475, col. 2.]

The failure of a plaintiff to appear on a date fixed for him to attend and find out what date has been fixed for the appearance of the defendant does not empower the Court to dismiss the suit for default. In such a case the Court should, notwithstanding the default of the plaintiff, fix a date for the appearance of the defendant and if, on the date so fixed, the plaintiff does not appear it can dismiss the suit under Order IX, rule 3. [p. 475, col. 2; p. 476, col. 1]

Petition, under section 44 of Act III of 1914, for revision of the order of the Munsif Second Class, Moga, District Ferozpor, dated the 17th August 1918.

Mr. L. O. Mehra, for the Petitioner.

Mr. O. L. Gulati, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—This is an application for revision of an order of the Munsif of Moga rejecting an application to readmit a suit purporting to have been dismissed in default under Order IX, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code. The suit was filed in the Court on the 15th June 1918, the process-fees for the summoning of the defendant being filed along with the plaint. Upon the plaint the Court endorsed an order that the case was to come up on the 27th June after partial. On the 27th June the Court recorded two orders. The first is that the plaintiff is not present, that the suit be entered in the register and that the plaintiff be waited for till the rising of the Court. The second order is that the plaintiff is absent, that he was waited for till the rising of the Court, and that the case is, therefore, sent to the record-room in default. The plaintiff, on the 25th July, applied for restoration of the case on the ground that he was prevented by illness from appearing on the 27th June. The Munsif, on the 17th August 1918, rejected this application on the ground that he did not believe that the plaintiff was prevented by illness from appearing on the day fixed.

The plaintiff has filed a petition for revision in this Court, and it is contended on his behalf that the procedure of the Munsif was wrong and that he had no power to dismiss the case in default on the 27th June. Order IV of the Civil Procedure Code shows that every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court. Rule 2 lays down that the Court shall cause the particulars of every suit to be entered in a book to be kept for the purpose and called the register of civil suits. Order V deals with the issue and service of summons. Rule 1 lays down that, when a suit has been duly instituted, a summons shall be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim on a day therein specified. Order IX deals with the consequences of the non-appearance of parties on the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer. Rule 1 lays down that the parties shall appear on the day fixed in the summons. Rule 2 lays down that the suit may be dismissed on the day so fixed where the summons has not been served in consequence of plaintiff's failure to pay the necessary costs. Rule 3 provides for dismissal in default where neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing. Now, in the present case no date was ever fixed for the appearance of the defendant within the meaning of Order V, rule 1, of the Code, and, therefore, the Court had no power to dismiss the suit in default under Order IX, rule 3. The 27th June was not a date fixed for the hearing of the case but was apparently a date fixed for the plaintiff to attend and find out what date had been fixed for the appearance of the defendant. It was quite unnecessary for plaintiff to appear on that date. What the Court should have done was to fix a date for the appearance of the defendant and if, on the date so fixed, the plaintiff did not appear, it could have dismissed the suit under Order IX.

I, therefore, allow the revision and, setting aside the order of the lower Court dismissing the suit in default, direct that it be restored to the pending file and be proceeded with in accordance with law. Costs in this Court shall abide the result.

Revision allowed.

Appeal from a decision of the Second Subordinate Judge, Saran, dated the 27th February 1918.

Messrs. Lochmi Narain Singh and Harnandan Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Md. Hasan Jan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This was a suit for rent by the respondents against the appellant and for ejectment of the appellant from the tenure on the ground that there was default in the payment of rent for three successive instalments.

The material facts are as follows: The respondents granted to the appellant a permanent mokarari lease of certain properties which are described in the lease. One of the terms of the lease was as follows: "In case of default, the maliks aforesaid, shall be at liberty to bring a suit for arrears of rent together with compensation at 25 per cent. and for cancellation of this mokarari patta and to obtain a decree therefor". The plaintiffs' case is that there has been default in the payment of rent for three successive instalments and that they have become entitled to eject the defendant from the leasehold properties.

It appears that there was a previous suit for rent by the respondent against the appellant in respect of three kists from March 1916 to January 1917. If the condition mentioned in the lease be a good condition, then, undoubtedly, the plaintiffs were entitled to re-enter on default having been made by the appellant in the payment of rent for three successive instalments. The previous suit, however, was a suit for rent and the plaintiffs did not ask in that suit for ejectment of the defendant. The present suit is for recovery of rent for March and June kists and it is quite clear that there has not been any default in the payment of rent for three kists entitling the plaintiffs to re-enter on the terms of the lease. The learned Subordinate Judge has passed a decree for ejectment against the defendant.

It was argued before us on behalf of the appellant that the term in the lease providing for cancellation of the lease is not a lawful term at all and that section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act completely protects him from ejectment. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has not given effect to this plea. The question, in my view, is not an easy one, and if it is necessary for us to decide this question we would have to consider not only section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act but also section 179. But, in the view which I take of this case, it is unnecessary for us to decide this point.

In my view there has been a complete waiver on the part of the plaintiffs of the forfeiture incurred by the defendant. It will be remembered that there was a default on the part of the defendant in the payment of rent for three successive instalments. On the terms of the lease, therefore, the defendant had incurred the forfeiture. The plaintiffs were thereupon entitled either to take advantage of the forfeiture incurred and re-enter upon the land or to overlook the forfeiture and affirm the lease; in other words, they might either affirm the lease or avoid it. The condition in the lease was for their advantage and there is no doubt whatever that that advantage is capable of being waived. In our view, on the facts of the case, it must be held that they overlooked the forfeiture incurred by the defendant. It is well established that a right to re-enter for breach of a covenant in a lease is waived by the lessor's bringing on action for rent accruing subsequently to the breach with knowledge of its existence" Cundy v. Nicholl (1). The present suit for rent after the plaintiffs became entitled to re-enter upon the land must, therefore, amount to a waiver of the forfeiture incurred by the defendant.

We must accordingly vary the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. The decree as regards the rent must stand but that portion of the decree which declares that the defendant is liable to ejectment must be discharged. As the point was not argued in the Court below, we make no order as to costs.

Ross, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which the present second appeal arises are, to all intents and purposes, undisputed and are briefly as follows. The defendant-appellant is the owner of one of the houses or bungas which surround the tank situated in the enclosure of the Golden Temple at Tarn Taran. It has been the custom in past years for halwai's shops to be carried on in these buildings on the amawas fair days which occur once a month. Labh Singh, plaintiff-respondent, took a lease of one of these buildings from the defendant-appellant for 11 months at a rent of Rs. 45 a month and paid the whole of the 11 months' rent prior to taking possession. He stated in the plaint that on the first amawas day when he went to open his shop in the building in question he was prevented from doing so by the manager of the Golden Temple and that on the second amawas day he was again prevented and fined. He, therefore, sued the defendant for Rs. 495, rent paid by him, and for Rs. 100, by way of damages. The first Court held that he was not entitled to recover anything from the defendant because he had been prevented by a third person, namely the manager of the Golden Temple, from carrying on a halwai's shop in the building leased to him. The lower Appellate Court held that, having regard to the facts, it did not appear that the plaintiff was ever put in possession of the leased property by the defendant because it was clearly the intention of the parties that the premises should be used as a halwai's shop on certain fixed days in the year and the plaintiff had not used the premises without interruption on any one of those days. It further held that as the use of the shop for the purposes for which it was leased became impossible owing to a reservoir being built in front of it by the manager of the Golden Temple, the agreement became void under section 56 of the Contract Act, and under section 65 the defendant was bound to restore the advantage which he had gained under it. On both these grounds it gave the plaintiff a decree for the amount of the rent paid by him, namely, Rs. 495.

From this decree the defendant has filed a second appeal in this Court and it is urged on his behalf that he did not in the lease undertake that the plaintiff should be allowed the use of the leased property as a halwai's shop and that he was not liable because the plaintiff had been prevented from so using it by a third person. In support of the appeal Lala Jagan Nath cited Devi Dayal v. Bainsi Ram (1) and Newby v. Sharpe (2). The first of these is distinguishable and in regard to the second it is sufficient to say that the law is not the same in England as that laid down in section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. The lower Appellate Court admits in its judgment that the plaintiff obtained the key of the shop from the former lessee and, therefore, it is quite clear that he obtained possession so far as the lessor is concerned. Moreover, from the pleadings of the parties it is quite clear that he did obtain possession but was merely restrained from using the premises as a halwai's shop by the manager of the temple.

Counsel for the respondent does not support the lower Appellate Court's view as to the applicability of section 56 of the Contract Act and, in my opinion, that section does not apply because in the present case there was no contract to do an act which had become impossible. There can, however, be no doubt that the plaintiff took a lease of the premises with the intention of carrying on a halwai's shop in them on the fair days and the defendant knew perfectly well, that that was the plaintiff's intention. The rent stipulated for was a high one and it is clear that the plaintiff would never have agreed to pay that sum had he not hoped to make a profit by opening a halwai's shop. Respondent's Counsel relies upon section 108 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, which lays down that "the lessor shall be deemed to contract with the lessee that, if the latter pays the rent reserved by the lease and performs the contracts binding on the lessee, he may hold the property during the time limited by the lease without interruption." This provision of the law was discussed in Tayawa v. Gurshidappa (3), wherein it was held that the words "without interruption" in section 108, clause (c), of the Transfer of Property Act, give a lessee in India the same rights as he would have under what is known in England as a covenant for quiet enjoyment in an unqualified form. In other words, the lessee is protected against interruption by whomsoever it is occasioned. It was held that where the interruption is caused by the paramount owner of the property, and not by a stranger, the lessor is bound to remove the interruption, and if he fails to do so, he must indemnify the lessee. Now, it has never been stated that the action of the manager of the temple in closing the halwai's shops was tortious and that he had not the power to close them. The Transfer of Property Act no doubt is not in force in the Punjab but its principles are based upon justice and equity. Under section 108 (c), as I understand it, the defendant was bound to indemnify the plaintiff for the loss caused to him by the action of the manager in forbidding the opening of the halwai's shop. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is not contrary to any Statute law and it appears to me to be in accordance with the principles of justice and equity.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109—

An order of the High Court setting aside an order of a Subordinate Court dismissing a partition suit for the plaintiff's default after a preliminary decree in the suit has been passed is a final order within the meaning of section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 481, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to Privy Council against the decision of Sir Dawson Miller, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Mullick, dated the 8th June 1920, setting aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Ranchi, dated the 5th November 1919.

ORDER.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application on behalf of the defendants seeking leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order of this Court dated the 8th June 1920. The order appealed from is an order setting aside a decision of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the plaintiff's suit for want of prosecution. The plaintiff brought a suit for partition and the suit eventually came before the High Court and, by consent of the parties, a preliminary decree was passed ordering partition of the property in question in four equal parts, the plaintiff and the other branches of the family each taking a fourth share in the property. The case was then sent down to the lower Court for the purpose of effecting the partition and when the record was received back in the Court of the Subordinate Judge he passed an order that the parties should take necessary steps by the 5th November 1919. What the necessary steps were to be taken at that time did not appear upon the face of the order but the preliminary decree had been passed whereby the rights of the various parties had been determined in certain shares and, therefore, all that remained to be done before the final decree was passed by the Subordinate Court was that the property should be divided by metes and bounds and the shares of the various claimants ascertained. There were also certain questions which had been pending before the suit went on appeal to the High Court upon the preliminary decree which had been stayed pending that appeal and which still remained to be determined by the lower Court. When the 5th November arrived, by which date it had been ordered that the parties should take the necessary steps, nobody appeared before the Court on behalf of the plaintiff and the learned Judge, purporting apparently to act under Order XVII, rule 2 or rule 3, dismissed the suit for want of prosecution. The effect of that dismissal of the suit, unless it should be set aside, was that the plaintiff was precluded from bringing a fresh action and, further, he lost his right to his one-fourth share in the property on partition. The matter then came before this Court on revision and this Court held that the learned Judge was acting without jurisdiction in dismissing the suit on the ground of the non appearance of the plaintiff or his Pleader on the 5th November 1919 and that all that had to be done upon that occasion was some interlocutory matter and not the hearing of the suit in the ordinary sense. The Court thereupon set aside, the order of the Subordinate Judge and directed that the case be restored to the file of the Subordinate Judge for hearing.

The question for determination in the present application is, whether that order made by the High Court on the 8th June 1920 is a final order within the meaning of section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure, such as would entitle the Court to grant a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. There is no question as to the value of the property, which admittedly amounts to more than Rs. 10,000. A number of cases have been cited before us on both sides in support of the arguments of the respective parties and the view I take of the order which it is sought to appeal from is that it is in fact a final order and one in respect of which we ought to grant the certificate prayed for. The order of this Court undoubtedly set aside what was in effect a final order and unless that order were set aside the result would be that the plaintiff who, before the preliminary decree had been adjudged entitled to a partition of a one-fourth share in the property, would no longer be entitled to a partition of such a share. The effect of the order of this Court was to determine that the plaintiff, notwithstanding the order which was made by the Subordinate Judge, was nevertheless still entitled to a partition of a one-fourth share in the property and to that extent it was, to my mind, a decision upon a cardinal point in the case and one which finally affected the rights of the parties. The only decision which appears to be directly in point upon a case of this nature, which has been drawn to our attention, is that of Meghrai v. Bidyabati Koer (1). That case decided that an order by which a decree of dismissal of suit for default under Order IX, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been set aside, is a final order within the meaning of section 109 of that Code. The decision in that case was delivered by Mr. Justice Mookerjee and dealt with in this manner:—

"The order of this Court sets aside the final decree of the original Court which was in favour of the appellant. Before the decree was set aside, he was in the position that the litigation against him had finally terminated. The position now is, that he has been deprived of the benefit of the final decree and the suit as against him is to be tried.

"An order which has this effect may, we think, be regarded as a final order within the meaning of section 109 of the Code."

The learned Judge then referred to the case of Rai Radha Kishen v. Collector of Jaunpore (2). That case has been relied upon by the respondents, the defendants in the suit, as an authority in their favour. In my opinion, the decision in Rai Radha Kishen's case (2) does not determine the question which has to be determined in the present case. That was a case where an application by the defendant under section

108 of the Civil Procedure Code then in force for an order setting aside the decree issued was disallowed without the Court being satisfied by any investigation as to whether or not the defendant had been prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing. The High Court on appeal reversed the order holding that the decree was an ex-parte one within the meaning of section 108 and remanded the case under section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code to be disposed of on the merits. It is to be observed in that case that their Lordships of the Privy Council treated the order of the High Court not as an order setting aside the decree but as an order setting aside the decision of the lower Court in which it had refused to accede to the application of the defendant and ordered the matter to be retried again upon a consideration of whether or not any sufficient cause had been shown for non appearance. Had it been an order restoring or setting aside a decree, the decision in that case might have been very different. Their Lordships say: "The appellant represents that by this order the High Court have set aside the decree of the 19th March 1896, and have remanded the original suit to be disposed of on the merits. The respondents disclaim for the order any such sweeping effect and hold that what is remanded is merely the application immediately before the Court, to wit the application to set aside the decree, and that it is this application which the Subordinate Judge will under the remand proceed to dispose of, by allowing the respondent to endeavour to satisfy him of the conditions specified in section 108, and then if this be done by setting aside the decree. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the respondent's is the just construction of the order of the High Court," and upon that basis they proceeded to deal with it and came to the conclusion that the order of the High Court was a purely interlocutory order and did not decide the rights of the parties which still remained to be decided by the Subordinate Judge upon hearing the application according to law. The difference between that case and the present case is that the order of this Court was an order setting aside an order dismissing the suit and not an order directing the Judge to re-hear an application to dismiss the suit. In my opinion, following the decision in Meghraj v. Bidyabati Koer (1), the proper conclusion to arrive at is that the order of this Court was a final order, and that a certificate should be granted that the case complies with the provisions of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 20, 115—
Jurisdiction—Sale of goods—Suit for damages—Place

Plaintiff residing at M. ordered certain goods from defendant who carried on business at S. Plaintiff sued defendant at M. for damages on the allegation that the goods supplied were short in quantity and inferior in quality. Defendant objected that the cause of action having arisen at S., the Court at M. had no jurisdiction to hear the suit. This objection was overruled. On revision:

Held, (1) that the cause of action arose at S. and that, therefore, the Court at M. had no jurisdiction to hear the suit:

(2) that the High Court had jurisdiction in revision to set aside an interlocutory order, and that that jurisdiction ought to be exercised in this case.

Petition, under section 44 of Act IV of 1919, for revision of the order of the Munsif, First Class, Leiah, District Muzaffargarh, dated the 15th June 1920.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for Lala Fakir Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Sewa Ram and Jadoo Rai of Leiah, District Muzaffargarh, sent a telegram to Messrs. Har Parsbad and Dalip Singh, Commission Agents, residing at Sonapat, District Rohtak, requesting them to purchase 275 maunds of black sugar. Sewa Ram and Jadoo Rai are the plaintiffs in this case. They came into Court on the allegation that the sugar sent by the defendants was short in quantity and inferior in quality. They, therefore, claimed damages from the defendants, and a suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif at Leiah. The defendants raised the question of want of jurisdiction on the allegation that the cause of action had arisen at Sonapat. The Court framed a preliminary issue on this point and overruled the objection holding that a part of the cause of action had accrued at Leiah. The defendants have come up in revision objecting to the decision of the Court below on this preliminary point.

Two questions arise for consideration, viz., (1) whether this Court ought to interfere in revision with an interlocutory order; and (2) whether, on the facts disclosed in this case, the Leiah Court had jurisdiction. It is not necessary to write a detailed judgment in this case as both the points raised are fully covered by a recent decision of this Court in Firm Dabri Shah-Thakar Ram v. Firm Ruliz Mal-Dogar Mal (1). The facts were almost similar and the learned Judge of this Court held that the place of residence of the defendant was the place where the cause of action arose. The learned Judge also held that, "although this Court does not ordinarily interfere with interlocutory orders, yet in exceptional cases it does interfere with such orders." The head-note attached to the report fully deals with all the points dealt with in the judgment and runs as follows:—

"The plaintiffs, who resided at Ludhiana, sent orders to the defendant, who resided at Darbhanga, for the purchase of a large quantity of oilcakes. The plaintiffs alleged that the goods supplied were of inferior quality and they accordingly instituted this suit for compensation for the loss at Ludhiana. The defendants pleaded that the Court in Ludhiana had no jurisdiction to try the suit. It appeared that the plaintiffs had remitted a part of the purchase-money to Darbhanga but the defendants were unwilling to despatch the goods without payment and suggested that the Railway

Receipts should be sent V. P. P. To this the plaintiffs agreed but subsequently, when it was found that the Post Office did not issue a V. P. P. for a sum in excess of Rs. 1,000, the sum payable by the plaintiffs being Rs. 7,070, they sent receipts through an agent of their own who obtained payment in Ludhiana :

"Held, that the Court at Ludhiana had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

"Salig Ram v. Ohuba Mal (2) followed. Roseck & Co. v. Mandleston (3) distinguished.

"Held, also, that where payment was, according to the contract, to be made in one place but was made in another owing to the plaintiffs' own default, advantage cannot be taken of that fact to give him a choice of jurisdiction.

"Held, further, that the High Court has power to interfere with interlocutory orders in exceptional cases, and the present case is one in which interference is demanded as, if the case proceeds in Ludhiana, there will be irreparable waste not only of time and money of the defendants but also of the time of the Punjab Courts."

The decision in Salig Ram v. Ohuba Mal (2) also lays down a similar rule. Having regard to the decisions in these two cases, I must accept this petition for revision and set aside the decision of the Court below. The Court is directed to return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court. The petitioner is entitled to his costs.

Mr. Jalgobind Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the appellant for recovery of joint possession of certain land specified in the plaint. His case was that he and the defendants first party were jointly recorded in respect of this land in the Record of Rights and that they have a joint title to this land. The land was in 1895, when the Record of Rights was finally published, in the possession of Babu Thakur under two mortgage bonds. Babu Thakur was recorded in the Record of Rights as mortgagee in possession. In 1909 the mortgagee was paid off, and, according to the allegation of the plaintiff, he and the defendants first party recovered joint possession of the property. The plaintiff's case is that, he was subsequently dispossessed and he accordingly instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises for recovery of joint possession.

The Record of Rights is undoubtedly in favour of the plaintiff, and the whole question in this case is, has the presumption afforded by the Record of Rights been rebutted by the evidence in the case. The learned Judge does say that it has been rebutted and if that finding is a legal finding then it is binding on me in second appeal.

The learned Judge in dealing with the evidence started by discarding all the oral evidence in the case. He said that it was worthless and should not be considered at all. Then he said that his decision must depend upon the documentary evidence which consisted of the Record of Rights, the two mortgage documents, and the chalan by which the mortgage-money was paid into Court. His view is that the two mortgage documents and the chalan rebutted the presumption of the correctness of the Record of Rights. Now, in my view it is impossible to hold without proof that the family was separate that those documents could possibly rebut the presumption of the correctness of the Record of Rights. It is quite true that the mortgage bonds were executed by Bansī Thakur, the ancestor of the defendants first party. But they would be executed by Bansī Thakur, if Bansī Thakur was the karta of the joint family and the family was joint. In my view, when a circumstance is relied upon as negating the presumption of the correctness of the Record of Rights, that circumstance must not only be inconsistent with the Record of Rights, but incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that the Record of Rights must be wrong. Can it be said then that there is any conflict between the mortgage bonds and the Record of Rights? The mortgage bonds were executed by Bansī Thakur, the ancestor of defendants first party, and the argument is that, in so far as the mortgage bonds show that the property belonged to Bansī Thakur, there is a clear conflict between these documents and the Record of Rights. In my judgment, Bansī Thakur was the proper person to execute the bonds on behalf of the entire joint family, and, provided it is established that, at the time when the bonds were executed, the plaintiffs and the defendants first party were all joint, there is no inconsistency whatever between the mortgage bonds and the Record of Rights. The chalan stands on no better footing. If the family were joint, and Bansī Thakur was the karta of the joint family then the chalan would undoubtedly be in the name of Bansī Thakur. That, again, is a circumstance consistent both with the case of the plaintiff and the defendants and cannot be relied on as negating the presumption of the correctness of the Record of Rights;

but, of course, if the family was separate, then the case will stand on a different footing altogether. The parties were members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family and the presumption is that they are joint, and it is necessary for the party who alleges separation to prove separation; but the case is complicated by the fact that the plaintiff in the first paragraph of the plaint admits that they were separate. And the whole question is, did this separation take place before the mortgage documents were executed, or did it take place after the mortgage documents were executed? It has been held by the Full Bench of this Court that when the plaintiff admits separation prior to the institution of the suit, the onus is still on the defendants who rely upon separation prior to the date of a certain transaction to establish that the separation did take place before the date of that transaction. Kanhu Lal v. Palu Sahu (1)

I find that it is impossible to dispose of this appeal on the materials that are before me. The circumstances that are relied upon by the learned Judge as rebutting the presumption of the correctness of the Record of Rights are inconclusive, unless there is a finding that they were in fact separate. The learned Judge does say in one portion of his judgment that the evidence of witness No. 1 for the plaintiff "supports to some extent the defendants' case that their branch of the family separated from the plaintiffs in their grand-fathers' time;" but it is as well to point out that the admission relied upon by the learned Judge, if the whole statement is taken into consideration, does not support the case of the defendant. If you are going to rely upon the admission made by a witness examined by the opposite party, you must take the whole of the admission into consideration, and, in my view, it is impossible to separate one portion from the other.

I must allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree passed by the learned District Judge, and remand the case to him for disposal.

Now, it is necessary for the learned Judge in the first place to come to a conclusion on the question when the separation between the two branches actually took place. If it did take place before the mortgage transactions in question, then, of course, the plaintiff's suit must fail. If, on the contrary, it took place since the mortgage transaction in question, then there is no inconsistency between the mortgage-bonds and the chalan on the one hand and the Record of Rights on the other, and the case must be decided on evidence.

I make no order as to the costs incurred in this Court. The costs incurred in the Courts below will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Document reciting what has been done in respect of certain property, whether compulsorily registrable—Hindu Law—Joint family—Compromise entered into by manager, whether binding on other members.

A document which does not of itself effect any partition of immoveable property, but is merely a recital of what has been done in regard to certain property does not require registration. [p. 485, cols. 1 & 2]

A deed of compromise affecting immoveable property binds not only the parties who actually sign it, but it also binds the other parties to the suit who stand by and do not object to it for a long time. [p. 485, col. 2; p. 486, col. 1]

The manager of a joint Hindu family is entitled to represent the co-parcenary in all suits and proceedings affecting its interests, to make contracts, to refer to arbitration, to compromise any claim or dispute affecting it, and generally to do all such acts as he may consider necessary or to its benefit. [p. 486, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, dated the 20th October 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Attock at Campbellpur, dated the 18th May 1919.

Lala Durga Das, for the Appellants.
Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree-table will be useful for the better understanding of the facts of the case out of which the present appeal arises:—

In 1904 Mitha Mal brought a suit against Musammal Saraswati and her brother, Shiv Ram, for a declaration that an alienation by Musammal Saraswati, widow of Maya Das, in favour of her brother of certain moveable property should not affect his reversionary rights, and for an injunction restraining Musammal Saraswati from alienating her deceased husband's property. Upon an objection taken by the defendants Narain Das, brother of Mitha Mal, who had not joined in bringing the suit, was impleaded as a defendant. Mitha Mal at that time stated that Narain Das had become a faqir and had abandoned worldly affairs. That suit was withdrawn with the leave of the Court on the 10th May 1906, and the finding is that the suit was withdrawn in consequence of an agreement between the parties dated the 17th March 1906. The present suit was brought for the possession of three houses said to have been left by Musammal Saraswati who died two months before the institution of the suit in April 1918. It is admitted, however, that only one house is in possession of the defendants and I am only concerned with that in the present appeal. The plaintiffs' suit having been dismissed by the lower Appellate Court they have filed a second appeal in this Court.

It was conceded in the lower Appellate Court, and is not denied now, that the house in dispute was gifted by Musammal Saraswati to Bawa Lachhman Das when she was ill in 1903. It is now in possession of Shiv Ram, the brother of Musammal Saraswati, who, according to his Counsel's admission in the Trial Court, purchased it in the name of his wife from the donee. A deed of sale relating to this house in favour of Musammāt Saraswati's husband is on the record and an endorsement on the back of it shows that it was transferred to Shiv Ram's wife on the 18th Bisakh Sambat 1968, corresponding to the 20th April 1911. The lower Appellate Court has found that under the agreement of the 17th March 1906 Mitha Mal acquiesced in the gift in favour of Bawa Lachhman Das and that he, therefore, cannot now claim it from anyone who has acquired it from the donee.

The first point argued before me was, whether the agreement of the 17th March 1906 was inadmissible for want of registration. I have considered this deed very carefully and I have no doubt that the lower Appellate Court has rightly held that it does not require registration because it does not of itself, within the terms of section 17 of the Registration Act, purport or operate to create or declare, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest to or in immovable property. It refers to the case at that time pending in the Court and states that the parties have come to terms. It goes on to state that Musammāt Saraswati has given possessor of two houses to Mitha Mal and that the latter will have no connection with the rest of her property so long as she lives, and that after her death he and Narain Das, his brother, will be the owners of any property which remains. In regard to the house gifted to Bawa Lachhman Das the words are: "jo makan Musammāt Saraswati mazkurah ne Bawa Lachhman Das wa Ram Das ko pun diya hua, us makan ke malik Bawa mazkurah honge aur apne pas rakhenge. Shiv Ram us makan ko kharid na karega. Agar Shiv Ram mazkur kharid karega to muzhir dawa karega." Lala Durga Das urges that this deed is in reality a deed effecting partition of immovable property and that, therefore, it requires registration as the property concerned is worth more than Rs. 100. I am unable, however, to accept this view. As to the nature of the document, it does not of itself effect any partition of immovable property, but is merely a recital of what has been done in regard to certain property. I, therefore, hold that registration of it is not compulsory and it has rightly been admitted in evidence.

The next argument of Lala Durga Das was, that Mitha Mal's acquiescence in the gift to Bawa Lachhman Das was a conditional one, the condition being that the property gifted was not to be bought by Shiv Ram. It is true that Mitha Mal, after stating his acquiescence in the gift, goes on to say that Shiv Ram will not buy the house and that if Shiv Ram does buy it, then he (Mitha Mal) will make a claim. He does not state what sort of claim he will make. In my opinion, this clause in the deed cannot be taken as qualifying his acquiescence in the gift. Mitha Mal acquiesced in the gift in consideration of the fact that possession of the rest of Musammāt Saraswati's immovable property was given to him then and there. He was not entitled to the possession of it until after her death but in consideration of getting immediate possession he acquiesced in the gift to Bawa Lachhman Das. In my opinion, his acquiescence must be considered to have been absolute and thereafter Bawa Lachhman Das could deal with the property in any way he pleased.

The remaining question is, whether Narain Das is bound by the agreement entered into by Mitha Mal alone. Now, in the previous suit Mitha Mal said that Narain Das had become a faqir. Narain Das never appeared in that case or in the present case in the Trial Court and apparently has taken no interest in the litigation. If he has become a faqir, he has abandoned worldly affairs; if he has not, then he is presumably joint with his elder brother, Mitha Mal. Mitha Mal purported to bind Narain Das by the agreement of March 1906. Narain Das, as already stated, was made a party to the previous suit, and he has never at any time come forward to object to the compromise made during the pendency of that suit. The arrangement was a family one and I think it must be taken, under the circumstances, he acquiesced in it. In the case reported as Amrin Chand v. Devi Ditta (1) it was held that "a razinama or deed of compromise affecting immovable property does not only bind the parties who actually sign it, but also binds the other parties to the suit who stand by, and do not object to it for a long time." In the Hindu Code by Gour, at page 511, the manager of a joint Hindu family is said to be entitled to represent the co-parcenary in all suits and proceedings affecting its interests, to make contracts, to refer to arbitration, to compromise any claim or dispute affecting it and generally to do all such acts as he may consider necessary or to its benefit. Similarly, in Trevelyan's Hindu Law, second Edition, at page 277, it is stated that the manager in the absence of fraud or collusion can bind the joint family estate by a compromise. In Ramdas Chabildas v. Chabildas Lallobhoy (2) it was laid down that, "in family arrangements the father represents and has power to bind his minor sons, in the absence of fraud or other circumstances sufficient in law to vitiate the transaction." It was pointed out that, "in such a case what has to be looked to is whether, having regard to the circumstances surrounding the transaction and its object, the father acted so as to bind both himself and his minor sons." Having regard to these authorities and to all the circumstances of the case, I think it must be held that Mittha Mal had full power to make the compromise both on behalf of himself and his brother, and the fact that the latter for many years never raised any objection is a ground for holding that he acquiesced in it. It is also worthy of note that the fact that Narain Das did not join in the agreement was not made a ground of attack in the present suit. There were no pleadings in regard to it and, consequently, no issue was framed on the point. It was only raised at the time of arguments. I, therefore, fully agree with the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

(1) 11 Ind. Cas. 469; 90 P. W. R. 1911,

Where a widow purports to alienate a portion of her husband's property in order to meet expenses of litigation incurred for the protection of the estate against a hostile attack, necessity is not established unless it is proved that at the time the money was actually advanced there was no money in the coffer sufficient for the protection of the estate, and it is for the creditor to establish that there were no funds in the hands of the widow sufficient for the protection of the estate against the hostile attack. ## JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—On the 16th of December 1895 Musammot Ram Nandan Koer executed a zawajshgi lease in respect of the property in dispute and three other properties in favour of Gandour Singh and Bramhdeo Narain Singh to secure a loan of Rs. 1,397-3-4. On the 20th of August 1902 she sold the property in dispute to Bramhdeo Narain Singh for the sum of Re. 1,500. On the 22nd of December 1915 this action was commenced by the plaintiff as the reversionary heir of the last male holder of the estate for setting aside the alienation made by the lady in favour of Bramhdeo Narain Singh and for certain other reliefs. The learned Subordinate Judge, in the course of a very careful judgment, considered all the evidence in the case and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the alienation set aside. In my view, the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and ought to be sustained.

The onus is undoubtedly on the creditor to establish that there was a necessity to raise the loan, but it must be remembered that this action was brought not only after the death of the reversioner immediately entitled to succeed to the estate, but actually nearly 12 years after the death of the widow. The position at the time when the action was heard was that the widow and Bramhdeo Narain were both dead and that Gandour Singh, the only person who could give evidence in favour of legal necessity, was certainly not on friendly terms with Bramhdeo Narain, the purchaser of the property. That is the position, and, therefore, the action having been brought nearly 12 years after the death of the widow, and nearly 20 years after the date of the mortgage transaction, we are bound to consider the recitals in the document in relation to the facts established in the case.

Therefore, it is, in the first place, necessary to consider the recital in the mortgage-bond (Exhibit P). The recital is as follows:—"A sum of Rs. 1,397-3-4 as decretal money on account of principal with interest and costs was found to be justly due by me to Sarjug Singh and others, decree-holders, under decree No. 45 of 1881, dated 29th May 1882 passed by the Court of first instance and under decree No. 43 of 1882, dated 17th February 1885 passed by the District appellate Court and (also) under decree No. 1011 of 1885, dated 14th May 1887, passed on appeal by the Hon'ble High Court, and I paid to the decree holders on the 15th February 1895 Rs. 400 towards it (the amount due) on taking a loan from Gandour Singh and Bramhdeo Narain Singh, residents and shareholding proprietors of Mouza Madhopur, Pergana Rati, and paid the same to the aforesaid. Now Rs. 997-3-4, principal with interest up to 16th December 1895 is due by me, the executant, as decretal money for the satisfaction of which my residential house including 10 bighas of land situate in Mouza Dharphari, Pergana Rati has been put up for sale to be held on the 16th December 1895. It is apprehended that I, the executant, will be put to loss on account of the sale of the house including 10 bighas of my land, as it is impossible for me, the executant, to pay off at present the decretal money due to the aforesaid decree-holders without executing a zarpeshgi thicca patta. I, the executant, have, therefore, of my own free will and accord in a sound state of body and mind, etc., etc." The recital in the sale-deed (Exhibit C) is as follows: "A sum of Rs. 1,397-3-4 is payable by me, the executant, to Gandour Singh and Bramhdeo Narain Singh of Madhopur Buzarg, Pergana Rati, under a registered zarpeshgi thicca patta dated the 12th December 1895 executed by me, the executant, and at present also I stand in need of Rs. 102-12-8 for meeting my necessary household expenses, etc. I, therefore, made a request to Bramhdeo Narain Singh, etc., to get back the zarpeshgi deed executed by me, on payment of Rs. 698-9-8 out of Rs. 1,397-3-4 to Gandour Singh aforesaid, to deduct the amount of Rs. 698-9-8 due to him and to pay the balance Rs. 102-12-8, in cash to me. Accordingly, the aforesaid Bramhdeo Narain Singh and others acceded to my request. Therefore, I, the executant, have of my own free will and accord, in a sound state of body and mind, etc., etc."

There can be no doubt whatever that if the recitals in these deeds are correct then if she was entitled to incur the expenses in connection with the litigation which is referred to in the zarpeshgi deed, there was a valid necessity for her to raise the money by the zarpeshgi lease. Two questions, then, have to be considered by me in dealing with the appeal; first, whether the widow was entitled to incur the expenses in connection with the litigation referred to in the zarpeshgi lease, and, secondly, did she in fact incur these expenses?

The first question that has been argued before us by Mr. Sureshi Charan Mitter on behalf of the appellant is that she was not bound to incur any expenses in connection with the litigation which is referred to in the zarpeshgi deed.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider what was the litigation in connection with which she incurred the expenses. It appears from the evidence in the record that her husband, Kamala Prasad, and the co sharers of Kamala Prasad, including the father of the plaintiff, obtained a decree for possession of certain chir lands as appertaining to the estate of Kamala Prasad and his co sharers. There was an appeal by the defendants in that action and that appeal was compromised on certain terms out of Court. The compromise was not filed in Court, but there can be no doubt, and it has been found by the Court in a subsequent litigation, that a compromise was in fact effected between the parties, by virtue of which Kamala Prasad and his co-sharers got a certain portion of the disputed land, they agreeing to give up the remaining portion of the lands to the defendants. It further appears that Kamala Prasad and his co-sharers executed the decree for possession and actually recovered possession of the entire area before the compromise was arrived at, and refused to make over possession of any portion of the land in terms of the compromise after the compromise was effected between the parties. Kamala Prasad subsequently died and his widow continued to be in possession of the property which was in dispute in that litigation. The result was that the defendants in that litigation instituted a suit against the widow of Kamala Prasad and the other co-sharer landlords for possession of the property which was adjudged to them by the compromise arrived at between the parties. All the co-sharers including the widow defended that action and, ultimately, the litigation ended unfavourably to the widow and her co-sharers and a decree for costs was passed against the widow and her co-sharers. The argument of Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitter is this. The compromise having given a portion of the land which was in dispute in that litigation to the opposite party she had no business to defend the action which was instituted by the opposite party for possession of that portion of the land. In my view this argument is unsustainable. By an act of her husband the property in dispute had become annexed to the estate which was of the husband. At the time when Kamala Prasad died the property which was in dispute in that litigation was part of the property left by Kamala Prasad and in my view it was her clear duty to defend the property against a hostile attack made on that property by the opposite party. It is quite true that it was subsequently held in that litigation that her husband had no title to the property but when the action was actually brought against her she could not possibly assume that her husband's act was unjustifiable and that he had no title whatever to the land. As a widow in possession of the property it was her duty to defend the property against any hostile attack that was made on that property. I hold, therefore, that she was within her rights in defending her title to the property against the attack made on her title by the plaintiffs in that litigation and that the decree for costs was a decree that, was binding on her not personally but as representing the estate in her hand.

The next question that has been argued before us by Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitter is that, she had sufficient funds in her possession from which she could have paid off the decretal amount. I take it to be the settled law that necessity is not established unless it is proved that, at the time the money was actually advanced, there was no money in the coffer sufficient for the protection of the estate. Dharam Chand Lal v. Bhawani Misra (1). I take it also to be the settled law that the onus is upon the creditor to establish that there was no fund in the hands of the widow sufficient for the protection of the estate against the hostile attack. But in considering the evidence in this case we must not omit to take into consideration two important facts. The first is, that this suit has been instituted many years after the transaction in question; and, secondly, on the admission of the plaintiff's own witnesses all the books of account are in the possession of the plaintiff. When the question is raised whether there was sufficient funds in the hands of the widow out of which she could have paid off the decretal amount, it is, I think, relevant to enquire why the books of account, admittedly in the possession of the plaintiff, have been suppressed. The fact found by the learned Subordinate Judge is that the total income of the estate at the time when the mortgage was executed was Rs. 5,000 a year. The widow was highly connected and we must assume that she was obliged to incur many expenses which are incurred by ladies in her station of life. Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitter's argument is that Rs. 15 a month was sufficient for her maintenance. I am unable to take that view myself. It is quite true that she had an income of Rs. 500 a month, but then, having regard to her position in life, it does not follow that there would necessarily be a saving to her after all the expenses had been met. The problem whether there was any saving at the time when the transaction was entered into could only be solved by the production of the books of account. Those books of account have not been produced by the plaintiff who could, if he had chosen, have produced them. There is nothing to indicate that there was any saving at all at the time when the transaction was entered into. The only two persons who could have given evidence on this point are dead, namely, the lady and Bramhdeo Narain Singh, one of the mortgagees. The other mortgagee, Gandour Singh, is undoubtedly alive, but it has been proved that he was not on good terms with Bramhdeo Narain Singh. In fact, there has been considerable litigation between them. It has been proved that ever since the widow came into possession of the estate, she has been involved in considerable litigation which has been going on for several generations. In these circumstances I am not prepared to differ from the learned Subordinate Judge on the question whether there was sufficient funds in her hands out of which the mortgage-deed could be paid off.

(1) 25 C. 189 (P. C.); 24 I. A. 183; 1 C. W. N. 697; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 249; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 128.

The third argument which was advanced by Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitter is that it has not been established that there was any legal necessity in respect of Rs. 102 0 0 which was appropriated by the widow. It is quite true that there is no other evidence except the recital in the document but I am not prepared to hold that the transaction must be set aside because as to a small portion of money advanced the legal necessity has not been established. I would, in this connection, refer to the following passage in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Girdhars Lall v. Kantco Lall (2), "Then there was some small portion of which the application was not accounted for. But it is not because there was a small portion which was not accounted for, that the son, probably at the instigation of the father, has a right to turn out the bona fide purchaser who gave value for the estate, and to recover possession of it with meane profits. This he is endeavouring to do after the purchaser has been in possession for a period of ten years; for the purchase was completed in 1856, and the suit was not brought until 1866, when the son says that the right of action accrued to him upon his attaining his majority. Even if there was no necessity to raise the whole purchase-money the sale would not be wholly void."

It may be that the plaintiff has another remedy in respect of Rs. 102 as to which legal necessity has not been established. But he cannot go into that question in this suit which is a suit to set aside the alienation and for recovery of possession of the property conveyed. I desire to say nothing as to the question whether the plaintiff has any other remedy in respect of Rs. 102. I hold that in this litigation he cannot ask us to set aside the alienation on the ground that legal necessity has not been established in respect of Rs. 102.

The last question that was argued was to the effect that the property was sold at a gross under-value. The only reliable evidence on this point is the khewat (Exhibit N.). That document shows that the income of this property is Rs. 116-12-0. Government revenue and cesses comes to Rs. 19 and we must deduct at least Rs. 6 for collection charges. The net income of the property will, therefore, come to Rs. 90. At 20 years' purchase, the value of the property would come to Rs. 1,800. The property was actually sold for Rs. 1,500. I am not prepared to say that the property has been sold at a gross under-value, especially when we have regard to the fact that the purchaser purchased the property with certainty of an expensive litigation.

The only other point is that the widow conveyed certain properties to an idol directly after the mortgage transaction involved in this suit, and it was suggested by Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitter that that showed that there were ample funds in the hands of the widow. I am not prepared to accede to that argument at all. The act of dedicating certain properties was the act of the widow and it may be that she did not hesitate to impoverish herself on account of something which in her eye was a meritorious act. If she exceeded her authority, the reversioners would be entitled to set aside that alienation and I understand that the reversioners have succeeded in setting aside that alienation. But the transaction in suit must be judged on its own merits and I do not think that, in judging the transaction in suit, we ought to take into consideration the circumstances attending other transactions.

On the whole, I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge has taken a correct view of the matter and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Ross, J.—I agree.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 31st March 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sargar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case sue for redemption of land which belonged to Sarfar Diwan Singh. There are five mortgages in question :—

(1) On the 18th June 1888 Diwan Singh mortgaged 332 kanals of land with possession for Rs. 1,800. Produce was to be set off against interest.

(2) On the 25th August 1888 he mortgaged 560 kanas of land with possession for Rs. 5,500. Here, too, produce was to be set off against interest and the deed further provided that if the land was not redeemed within four years, it was to be considered as sold.

(3) On the 20th June 1890 he raised a further sum of Rs. 800 on the land agreeing to pay interest on this further sum every year at the rate of Rs. 1-6 per cent. per mensem. If interest was not paid, compound interest was to be charged.

(4) On the 25th October 1890 he raised a further sum of Rs. 800. Here, again, interest and compound interest were to be charged at Rs. 1-8 per cent. per mensem.

(5) On the 1st April 1891 he mortgaged 12 kanals with possession for Rs. 37-8.

The plaintiffs, who are the representatives of Diwan Singh, now sue for redemption of all the land on payment of the principal sum, viz., Rs. 8,937. The defendants-mortgagees claim that the land can be redeemed only on payment of the principal plus interest and compound interest. The lower Court, having decided in favour of the defendants, has given a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 19,800 interest plus Rs. 8,937-8 principal plus future interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum on the sums of Rs. 800, Rs. 800 and Rs. 19,800. The plaintiffs appeal. On behalf of the defendants a preliminary objection has been raised to the effect that Ishar Singh, who is one of the plaintiffs, has sold his share in the land to certain persons by a sale deed according to which the mortgages have themselves acquired  $\frac{2}{3}$ th of Ishar Singh's share while the remaining  $\frac{1}{3}$ th has gone to one Rikhi Ram. It appears that Sher Singh who is also a reversioner of Diwan Singh and is a pro forma defendant in the case sold his  $\frac{1}{3}$ th share in 1914, and Ishar Singh brought a suit for pre-emption and obtained a decree. In order to raise money to pay this decree Ishar Singh sold his own share by the deed already mentioned,  $\frac{2}{3}$ th of his share passing to the mortgagees and  $\frac{1}{3}$ th to Rikhi Ram who is not a party to the suit. Counsel for the respondents states that Ishar Singh did not pay any pre-emption money and so his pre-emption decree has lapsed, and he now holds no share at all in the land in suit. This, however, is not admitted. Counsel on both sides, however, are agreed that the present appeal may be decided on the merits, it being left to the executing Court to determine what shares the plaintiffs still own in the land in suit and the suit being decreed for redemption of those shares only. We see no objection to this course. The mortgagees have themselves become part proprietors in the land in suit and so the plaintiffs should now be allowed to redeem whatever shares are still held by them on payment of a proportionate share of the mortgage-money.

The main question for consideration is, whether interest is a charge on the estate. If this question be decided in favour of the plaintiffs the whole appeal will be disposed of. In order to decide this question we have to examine the terms of the two deeds dated the 2nd June 1890 and the 25th October 1890. The first deed contains the following words:—"Manmusir rahin ath sau rupaya ka sud ba sharah Rs. 1-6-0 har sal muttakinan ko wasul de aia karunga. Jis kodar rakam sut baki rahega uska sud ba sharah mukarrar dunga. Man musir rahin jab zar-i-rahn sabika wa hal muttakinan ko wasul dunga arazi marhuna fakurrahn kara lunga." The terms of the second deed are to the same effect, but we note that in this deed the mortgagor agrees to pay back the sum of Rs. 800 with interest in three instalments, and the clause regarding compound interest comes at the end of the deed and after the clause providing that redemption can be made on payment of the "zar-i-rahn sabika wa hal." The decision of the question depends on whether we regard the term sar-i-rahn as meaning the principal sum for which the land was mortgaged or the whole amount due on the mortgage including interest at the time of redemption.

The first case cited on behalf of the appellants is Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (1). This was a case in which land was mortgaged for Rs 1,300. The mortgagees were put in possession and produce was to be regarded as equal to the interest on Rs. 650 while interest on the remaining Rs. 650 was to be charged at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem. This interest was to be paid annually and in default compound interest was to be charged at the same rate. No period was fixed for redemption, but the mortgagors were at liberty to redeem the land in the month of Har of any year on payment of the zar-i-marhuna. As regards the recovery of the interest payable on Rs. 650 it was further stipulated that the mortgagees would have the option either to charge compound interest or to recover the same from the mortgagors by suit. The learned Judges noted that the phrase zar-i-marhuna was used several times during the deed and in some parts of the deed the phrase clearly refers to the principal sum. They held that the land could be redeemed on payment of the principal sum only. One thing we regard as beyond all doubt and that is, that there is no difference in meaning between the two phrases sar-i-rahn and zar-i-marhuna.

Lok Chand v. Hazzar Khan (2) was also a case in which the income was to cover interest on a part of the sum for which the land had been mortgaged, while the remaining part was to carry interest at Rs. 2-1-4 per cent. Here, too, the deed provided for redemption on payment of the zar-i-marhuna, and it was held that from the use of the same expression in other parts of the deed it was clear that sar-i-marhuna simply meant the mortgage money apart from the interest.

In Ghumandi Lal v. Kanhai Lal (3) there was a clause for redemption at the end of five years on payment of the sar-i-rahn, but in that case it seems to have been admitted that interest for the five years at the end of which the land was to be redeemed was a charge on the property mortgaged, and so redemption was allowed on payment of the principal plus interest for the period of five years plus interest by way of damages for six years prior to suit.

In Jawahir Mal v. Raja Shah (4) it was held that interest was a charge on the land but the exact terms of the deed are not given in the judgment.

In Radha Kishen v. Muhamdu (5) the mortgage was originally without possession, but under the terms of the deed the mortgagee subsequently took possession in default of payment of interest. At the time of redemption he was allowed to charge interest for the period for which he had been out of possession. This is obviously a different kind of case, and, unless there is anything to the contrary, we think it clear that in such cases interest for the period during which the mortgagee had not had possession should be added to the principal sum. Sheo Chand v. Ohunna (6) is a similar case.

Bur Singh v. Soheli Singh (7) is cited on behalf of the respondents. It is there laid down that the general rule is that the mortgagee, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, is entitled to treat interest due under the mortgage as a charge on the estate. We fully agree with this dictum, but the question before us is, whether in this particular case the deeds do not themselves provide for redemption on payment of the principal only.

Wadhoo Shah v. Mian Fakir Ahmad (8) is next cited, but this was a peculiar case in which it was held that the mortgagor had been guilty of fraud and that in equity a fraudulent clause in the mortgage-deed should be treated as non-existent and interest should be allowed.

Counsel for the respondents admits that the mortgagees could have sued to recover arrears of interest. It would have been perfectly easy for the respondents to have had inserted in the deeds that the payment of interest should be a condition precedent to redemption. It would have been perfectly easy to have made the phrase of redemption run:—jab zar-i-rahn sabika wa zar-i-rahn hal asl mai sud wasul dunga fakurrah kara lunga. We have to consider the whole terms of the deed and to decide, to the best of our ability, what the parties meant by those terms. It is easy to argue that the mortgagees could not have intended to allow redemption without payment of interest and that their omission from the beginning up till now to recover interest by suit is a clear indication that they have all along regarded interest as a charge on the land. On the other hand, had the interest been intended to be a charge on the land, there was no necessity for the mortgagor to promise that he would pay interest every year. It seems to us most probable that the mortgagor never contemplated that the interest charges would not be met regularly, and we do not suppose that he ever contemplated that interest and compound interest should be added on to the mortgage charge, swelling the original amount of the debt from about Rs. 9,000 to a sum which would render redemption extremely expensive unless the land was redeemed within a short period. We are, therefore, of opinion that the phrase "sar-i-rahan sabika wa hal" in the two documents under consideration refers simply to the principal mortgage-debt and has no reference to interest. The mere fact that in the later deed the clause as to compound interest follows the clause as to redemption, in our opinion, makes no difference. It is also argued that the clause in the second deed as to payment of the money with interest by instalments shows that the interest and principal were both regarded as forming part of the mortgage-debt, but we are unable to see that the agreement to re-pay by instalments affects the interpretation of the clause as to redemption. There seems to us no difference between Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (1) and the present case except that in Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (1) there was only one mortgage, whereas in the present case the land was first mortgaged with possession for a sum, the interest on which was to be set off against profits, and a subsequent charge was afterwards created which was to bear interest.

Further arguments were addressed to us with regard to post diem interest, but, as we have held that interest is not a charge on the land at all and that the land can be redeemed simply on payment of the principal sum, nothing need be said regarding these arguments.

We accept the appeal and give the plaintiffs a decree for redemption of whatever share in the mortgaged land is still owned

Where the limitation for filing an appeal expires during the vacation of the Court, the appellant is entitled to make an application for copies on the day on which the Court re-opens after the vacation, and is entitled to add to the period of limitation the time spent in obtaining the copies, [p. 494, col. 2.]

Revision against the decision of the District Judge, Purneah, dated the 6th January 1920.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application asking us to revise and set aside the order of the District Judge of Purnea, dated the 26th April 1920. By this order the District Judge refused to review his order of the 6th January 1920 passed on the memorandum of appeal presented by the petitioner before him.

The petitioner presented an appeal on the 3rd of November 1919 from a decree passed by the Additional Munsif of Araria which was signed on the 17th September 1919. The petitioner made an application for copies of the judgment and the decree on the 16th September and was required by the office to file the requisite stamps and folios on the 18th September 1919. The note on the back of the copies shows that the requisite stamps and folios were filed on the 27th October. The copies were ready on the 31st October and were delivered to the applicant on the 1st November 1919. The 2nd of November being Sunday, the appeal was filed on the 3rd of November on a Court-fee of 8 annas, whereas the proper Court-fee required was Re. 1-8.

Along with the appeal the applicant also filed an application saying that, under section 12 of the Limitation Act, in computing the period of limitation the entire time from the 17th September to the 1st of November be excluded on the ground that the said period was occupied in obtaining copies of the judgment and the decree and also praying, in the alternative, for an extension of the period of limitation under section 5 of the Act in case his appeal be held not to have been filed in time.

On the 18th November 1919, the office of the District Judge submitted its report on the back of the first page of the memorandum of appeal, saying that (1) the Court-fee paid was insufficient, and (2) the appeal seemed to be barred by limitation unless the appellant's allegation that the requisite stamps and folios were filed on the 19th September, and not on the 27th October as noted on the back of the first sheet of the copy, be correct. Upon the note of the office the Court ordered on the 25th November: "The matter to be put up in the presence of the appellant's Pleader."

On the 1st December the Court directed the applicant to file an affidavit in support of the petition within two days. This was not done and on the 6th January the Court passed the following order :—"Affidavit not filed as directed. The appeal seems to be evidently time-barred. The appeal is, therefore, rejected." Against this order, on the 24th January, the applicant made an application under Order XLVII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure for a review. The Court rejected the application on two grounds, namely, (1) that the appeal was time barred and (2) that the Court-fee filed was insufficient.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the applicant challenges the correctness of both the aforesaid grounds. As to the first ground it is said that the petitioner made an application on the 16th September, a day before the decree was signed, and he filed folios and stamps on the 19th of September, a day after they were notified to him on the 18th September, and that, inadvertently, on account of his not being able to procure the sufficient number of folios he filed one deficit folio on the 27th October, the day on which the Court re-opened after the Puja holidays, and that consequently the delay was not caused by his laze and that he is entitled to the deduction of the entire period. In support of the allegation that he filed folios and stamps on the 19th September he relies upon the dates of sale put on most of the stamps fixed to the copies. It may be that the applicant filed them on the 19th September as alleged by him, but, admittedly, the stamps and folios filed by him were short by one folio which was filed by him on the 27th October. His explanation as to the reason for not filing all the folios on the 19th September has not been accepted by the Court below and I see no reason to differ from this view of the Court below. It must, therefore, be held that the requisite number of stamps and folios were not actually filed by the applicant before the 27th October 1919. It would have been well if, where the number of folios are filed on different dates, all these dates were noted on the back of the copy granted so as to enable the Court to find out whether the applicant was in fault or not and also to see whether the case was such in which, under section 5, extension of time should be granted to the applicant or not. Be that as it may, it will be sufficient for the purpose of this case to hold, in agreement with the Court below, that the requisite number of stamps and folios were actually filed on the 27th October 1919. The decree being dated the 17th September 1919, ordinarily the appeal should have been filed within 30 days from that date, that is, on the 17th October 1919, which was in the midst of the Puja holidays. The appeal, therefore, under section 4 of the Limitation Act, could be preferred on the re-opening day, namely, the 27th October. The applicant was entitled to make an application for copy on that day: vide Bibi Fakhrunissa v. Rambhajan Singh (1) and also the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Pandharinath Sakha Ram v. Shankar Narayan Joshi (2). His Lordship pointed out that this was the correct interpretation of the law and the invariable rule of practice and was affirmed by the judicial decisions, notably in the case of Siyadat-un-nissa v. Muhammad Mahmud (3). Having carefully considered the law on the subject, I have no hesitation in following the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and I accordingly hold that the applicant was entitled to make an application for copy on the 27th of October, the day on which the Court re-opened after the Puja holidays, and he was consequently entitled to file the deficit Court-fee on that date and that, further, by so filing his application of the 16th September was kept alive. That being so, he was entitled to an extension of time for three days, from the date of the application up to the date of the notification of the requisite stamps and folios, that is, the 17th September, 18th September and the 27th October. Thereafter, time was taken for the preparation of the copy up to the 31st of October when it was ready for delivery, that is the 28th, 29th, 30th and the 31st October. The learned District Judge allowed him the first three days, but not the latter four days. Adding, therefore, seven days (3—4) to the date on which the appeal should have been filed, the appeal filed on the 3rd of November was within time. There can be no question that he was at least entitled to six days. In that view, the appeal should have been filed on the 2nd of November which was Sunday. Therefore, again under section 4, he was entitled to file his appeal on the 3rd of November. Taking any view of the case, the appeal filed on the 3rd of November was, therefore, well within time and the Court below was wrong in rejecting it on the ground that it was time-barred.

The aforesaid finding, however, does not give any practical benefit to the applicant, inasmuch as the Court below has held that the appeal was presented on insufficient Court-fee. This was no doubt not the ground upon which the appeal was rejected on the 6th of January 1920. The objection, however, was set forth in the report of the office, dated the 18th November 1919. The applicant contends that the deficiency of the Court-fee should not debar him from having his appeal admitted and considered on merits, inasmuch as he filed the deficit Court-fee on the 19th November with an application. This is no doubt true, but there is nothing to show that the Court allowed him to pay the deficit Court-fee so as to entitle him to have the benefit of section 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is contended that the Court-fee must be deemed to have been accepted, inasmuch as the deficit Court fee was filed just the day following the report of the office and thereafter the Court did not press the objection in its orders of the 15th November 1919, 1st December 1919 and the 6th of January 1920. This is, however, not sufficient for the purpose of applying section 49, which says distinctly that the deficit Court-fee must have been allowed to be paid by the Court and when so allowed and paid, the payment will have the force and effect as if it was made in the first instance. The permission to deposit the deficit Court-fee must be given by the Court after considering the circumstances of the case and the reason for not filing the entire Court fee in the first instance. I, therefore, agree that the appeal was not presented on sufficient Court-fee and, therefore, under section 5 of the Court Fees Act, the appeal was not presented in time. The fact that the Court did not reject the appeal on that ground will not make the appeal fit and competent and remedy the statutory bar imposed upon it under section 5 of the Court Fees Act.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal, even if it be held, as already observed, to have been filed in time, was not a competent appeal and it cannot now be entertained. The application must, therefore, be rejected. In this view, it is not necessary to consider the objection of the respondent that the application to this Court is incompetent in view of the fact that the order of the Court of the 6th January 1920 rejecting the appeal amounts to an order dismissing it and was, therefore, appealable. But, as the point has been raised and the learned Vakil has seriously sought my decision thereon, I venture to give my own views.

The memorandum of appeal is rejected under Order XLI, rule 3, when it "is not drawn up in the manner prescribed hereinbefore," that is, as laid down in that Order. If the memorandum of appeal is drawn up in proper form it cannot be rejected under that rule, but that if it is barred by limitation it has to be dismissed under rule 11. The rejection of an appeal on the ground of limitation, therefore, amounts to a dismissal thereof. Such an order is no doubt appealable. The applicant was, therefore, entitled to prefer an appeal from the order of the Court, dated the 6th January 1920. He was also entitled to have the order reviewed under Order XLVII, rule 1, provided he did not file an appeal that Order, vide Order XLVII, rule 1 (A).

No appeal was filed. Therefore, his application for review was competent. The application for review was rejected and there is no appeal from an order rejecting a review, vide Order XLVII, rule 7. The applicant was, therefore, entitled to come to this Court in revision against the order passed by the learned District Judge rejecting his application for review, which involved the consideration of the order passed on the 6th of January dismissing the appeal. The application of the petitioner to this Court was, therefore, not incompetent.

But on the other grounds, already adverted to, the application is rejected and costs allowed to the opposite party. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Ex-parte decree, whether final—Pre-emption decree whether lies.

An ex parte decree is final, till it is set aside by either the first Court or the Court of Appeal.

No appeal lies against an order refusing to extend the time fixed for payment of the decretal amount under a decree for pre-emption.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 1st April 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Mianwali, dated the 8th December 1919.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Devi Dayal and Obbard, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On 5th August 1919 the respondent secured an ex parte decree to pre-empt and it was a condition of the decree that the price was to be paid into Court on or before 15th October 1919.

After the issue of the ex parte decree, an application was made to have it set aside, but it was in fact never set aside.

The decree-holder failed to satisfy the condition of the decree by 15th October, but on 5th December 1919 he applied to the Trial Court to be allowed to deposit the price of the property pre-empted. The Munsif refused, but the District Judge in appeal gave the plaintiff a further period up to 15th April 1920 within which to deposit the money in Court.

The learned Judge held that the first Court's decree was not a final decree till the application for setting aside the ex parte decree had been rejected.

In this view I am unable to concur, but hold that an ex parte decree is final, till it is set aside by either the first Court or the Court of Appeal.

Nor do I think an appeal lay to the learned Judge, for the appeal was not from the decree, but from the order refusing to extend time, from such an order no appeal is given by the Code. An appeal from the decree would have been time-barred, nor had the decree holder any grievance against the decree at the time it was granted. The District Judge's order was, therefore, without jurisdiction and the Munsif's order was correct.

I accordingly accept the appeal and set aside the District Judge's order extending the time within which the decretal condition could be satisfied.

Appellant to have his costs in this Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, applicability of—Test—"Cause of action", meaning of.

There is nothing in Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code to compel a plaintiff to include in one and the same action different causes of action even though they arise from the same transaction. [p. 497, col. 2.]

The test is this: If the plaintiff, on the allegations made in the plaint, is entitled to make a claim which he does not put forward in his suit he shall not be allowed in a subsequent suit to put forward that claim. To allow him to do that would be to permit him to split his cause of action; but if, on the allegations made in the plaint, he was not entitled to put forward a claim, there is nothing in Order II, rule 2, which prohibits him from putting forward that claim in a subsequent litigation. [p. 498, cols. 1 & 2.]

The expression 'cause of action' means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court [p. 498, col. 1.]

The expression refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour. [p. 498, col. 1.]

HARDEO SINGH v. BHAWANI SAHAI.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Ohupra, dated the 9th June 1919, modifying that of the Additional Munsif, Ohupra, dated the 24th August 1915.

Mr. Nirsu Narayan Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point which I have to decide in this appeal is, whether the provision of Order II, rule 2 of the Code bars the plaintiffs' suit. In order to appreciate the point that has been argued before me, it is necessary to state that I am in this litigation concerned with a plot of land which has been found to appertain to the ijmali lands in khewat 1/6. The village Bajraha was some time ago divided into several pattis by partition. One of the pattis, consisting of 8 pies share, is entered in khewat 1/2. The plaintiff is the sole proprietor of this patti. Another patti, consisting of 4-annas 10-pies share, is entered in khewat 1/3. In this patti the plaintiff has 3-annas 5-pies share. As I have mentioned before, the ijmali lands of both 1/2 and 1/3 are entered in khewat 1/6.

Some time in 1911 the plaintiff instituted a suit against defendant No. 5 for ejectment on the ground that defendant No. 5 had purchased a non-transferable holding. The allegations of the plaintiff in that suit were, that the disputed land was in the patti 1/2 of which he was the sole proprietor. His case was that the previous tenant had sold the occupancy holding to defendant No. 5 and that he was entitled thereupon to enter into possession of the same. The Court of first instance, as well as the lower Appellate Court, dismissed the plaintiffs' action on the ground that the plot of land in respect of which the action had been brought was situated not in patti 1/2 of which the plaintiff was the sole proprietor but in patti 1/6. The lower Courts thought that, as there were other co-sharers interested in that patti and as they were not parties to that litigation, the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief at all. The plaintiff appealed to the Calcutta High Court. The learned Judges in the Calcutta High Court thought that the plaintiff was entitled to eject the defendant in proportion to the rent which the plaintiff was, on the admission of the defendant, entitled to recover from the defendant. That litigation decided once for all that the plot of land was not situated in patti 1/2 but was situated in patti 1/6, and as the plaintiff was, on the admission of the defendant, entitled to some rent from the defendant in respect of that patti, the Calcutta High Court thought that he was entitled to eject the defendant in respect of that land.

The plaintiff accordingly succeeded to a certain extent but did not get complete relief in that litigation inasmuch as the co-sharers of patti 1/6 were not parties to that litigation.

The present suit was thereafter brought by the plaintiff for ejectment of the defendant. The plaintiff has in this litigation brought on the record as parties defendants, the co-sharers of patti 1/6 and he claims in this litigation to eject the defendant on the ground that he has taken a transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding. He was met by the defendant with the plea that Order II, rule 2, barred his suit. This contention has found favour with the Courts below, and the only question which I have to decide in this appeal is, whether the Courts below have taken a correct view of the scope and effect of Order II, rule 2, of the Code?

In my view, Order II, rule 2 has no application to this case at all. The first paragraph of the rule runs as follows:—“Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.” This rule expresses the general intention of the Legislature that a plaintiff shall not be permitted to split his cause of action in parts and bring separate suits in respect thereof. There is, however, nothing in the rule which compels a plaintiff to include in one and the same action different causes of action even though they arose from the same transaction. See Saminathan Chetty v. Palanipattu Chetty (1). That is the general intention of the Legislature, and the second paragraph of the rule, upon which the Courts below have relied, merely provides the penalty for non-compliance with the first paragraph of the rule. The question, in my view, comes to this: was the plaintiff in the previous suit entitled to the reliefs which he now claims? That depends on the meaning which we must assign to the expression "cause of action".

Now, as I understand the law, "cause of action" means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour. See Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (2).

Applying this principle to the facts of the present case, can it be argued that the plaintiff in the previous litigation could have put forward the claim which he now puts forward as a part of the cause of action which he then alleged in the plaint? In my view, he could not. His cause of action in the plaint in the previous suit was as follows:—

"(1) That he was the sole proprietor of khewat No. 1/2.

(2) That the defendant was the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding situated in plot No. 1/2."

On these allegations he asked for the ejection of the defendant from the plot of land situated, as he asserted, in khewat No. 1/2. That claim failed because it was held by the Courts that the plot of land was not situated in khewat No. 1/2 but was situated in khewat No. 1/6. Now, what is his cause of action in the present suit? He now alleges that the plot of land is situated in khewat No. 1/6 of which he and the other defendants are the proprietors, that the principal defendant is the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding, and that he, along with the other defendants, are entitled to eject the defendant from this holding. In my view, the test is this: If the plaintiff, on the allegations made in the plaint, is entitled to make a claim which he does not put forward in his suit he shall not be allowed in a subsequent suit to put forward that claim. To allow him to do that would be to permit him to split his cause of action; but if, on the allegations made in the plaint, he was not entitled to put forward a claim, there is nothing in Order II, rule 2, which prohibits him from putting forward that claim in a subsequent litigation.

In my view, on the allegations made in the plaint in the former litigation, he could not put forward the claim which he now puts forward. That being my view, I must hold that the Courts below have erred in dismissing the suit on the ground that the plaintiff's action is barred by the provision of Order II, rule 2.

I must allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees passed by the Courts below and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court with instruction that it should remand the case to the Court of first instance for decision according to law.

The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal and in the Court below. The costs incurred in the Court of first instance must abide the result and will be disposed of by that Court.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1834), s. 85 (b) 86 (d), (f), 103, 279, 322 (1)—Municipal rates in respect of holding—"Occupier" and "owner" distinction between—Owner not occupier, whether liable to pay water rate and latrine-rate.

other words, every owner is not an occupier just as every occupier is not an owner. In order to constitute rateable occupation there must be a use and enjoyment which is or is capable of being beneficial. [p. 500, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Dacca, dated the 31st of October 1916, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif, Additional Court at that place, dated the 4th of May 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen, for the Appellant.—Defendant No. 5 is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of Municipal rates in respect of a holding, by the Chairman of the Dacca Municipality. The holding which is within the jurisdiction of the Municipality belongs to all the five defendants jointly. I alone did not reside in the holding where my co-sharers resided and my defence was that I was not an occupier. The Courts below do not accept my defence and have held that my occupation of the holding is to be taken legally as constructive possession. Under the Bengal Municipal Act the Municipal rates have been divided into three classes, vis, house-rates, water-rates and latrine-rates. Section 103 of the Act deals with house rates which are leviable from the owners of the holdings. The Municipality imposed upon me a house-tax which was assessed on the basis of the annual value of the holding. I admit that I am liable for such house-tax. But I contend that I am not liable for water-rates and latrine-rates which are payable by the occupiers. Refers to sections 86, 279 and 322 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

[MOOKERJEE, ACRO. C. J.—“What is the definition of an occupier?”]

There is no definition of the word “occupier” in the Bengal Municipal Act, although it gives the definition of an “owner.” The Courts have found that I am an occupier. The test is not that of constructive possession but of actual occupation. The holding was not in my occupation. My co-sharers were in actual occupation and enjoyment of the holding. It would be too hard on me to hold me liable as an occupier which in fact I never was. My other point is that part of the claim is barred by limitation.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bose, for the plaintiff-Respondent.—The appellant's defence was that he could not be liable as he was not in possession of the holding. But the fact of his remaining away was not notified to the Chairman of the Municipality,—the plaintiff. The name of the defendant No. 5 is on the rate-payer's roll. Under the circumstances, how could the Chairman come to know whether after all these things the appellant was not in actual possession? If he was not in actual possession why did he not notify the fact to the Chairman or object to the assessment of taxes? The facts are patent enough to make his possession a constructive possession.

Some of the defendants are under the Court of Wards. Of course, we could realise by distress. Then you should consider the unanimous findings of the Courts below that the names of all the defendants appear on the Municipal register.

[MOOKERJEE, ACRO. C. J.—But not as occupier?]

Of course, it might be by mutual arrangement that some of them lived in that house, and the others elsewhere.

Babu Surendra Chandra Guha, and Babu Bepin Chandra Bose for Babu Kunja Lal Das, for the Defendants-Respondents.—A partition has been effected of the property. It is admitted that defendant No. 5 is not in occupation. The sole question, therefore, would amount to this, whether he would be liable for taxes or not, I submit he would not be liable.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen replied briefly.
JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACRO. C. J.—This is an appeal by the fifth defendant in a suit instituted by the Chairman of the Commissioners of the Dacca Municipality for recovery of arrears of Municipal rates in respect of a holding within the jurisdiction of the Municipality. There is no dispute that all the five defendants are owners of the holding. The fifth defendant, however, pleaded that he was not an occupier of the holding, which was really occupied by his co-sharers, the first four defendants. The claim is for a sum of Rupees 740.4 annas made up as follows:—

	Rs.	A.	P.
Water rate ...	210	0	0
Latrine-fee ...	110	4	0

NIBARAN CHANDRA v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO.

It is clear from section 103 of the Bengal Municipal Act, read with section 85 (b), that the house rate is leviable from all the owners. Section 273 (3), read with section 83 (d), makes the water-rate payable by the occupiers while section 322 (1), read with section 83 (f), makes the latrine-fee payable by the occupiers. The Courts below have overruled the defence of the fifth defendant on the ground that he was in constructive occupation of the holding. We are of opinion that this view cannot possibly be maintained.

The Bengal Municipal Act defines the term 'owner' but does not define the term 'occupier'. The meaning of 'occupation' in a similar connection was discussed in the case of Reg. v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee (1). It was there pointed out that occupation for purposes of assessment of rates includes actual possession as its primary element, for legal possession does not of itself constitute occupation. An example was given to illustrate the meaning of this test. The owner of a vacant house is in legal possession, but as long as he leaves it vacant, he is not rateable for it as an occupier, yet, if he furnishes it, and keeps it ready for occupation whenever he pleases to go to it, he is an occupier, though he may not reside in it one day in a year; on the other hand, a person who, without having any title, takes actual possession of a house or piece of land, whether by leave of the owner or against his will, may well be the occupier of it. [See also Mayor of Southend-on-Sea v. White (2), Yates v. Chorlton-upon-Medlock Union (3)]. The substance of the matter is that bare ownership does not constitute rateable occupation [Smith v. New Forest Union (4)]; or, in other words, every owner is not an occupier just as every occupier is not an owner; in order to constitute rateable occupation, there must be a use and enjoyment which is or is capable of being beneficial [Liverpool Corporation v. Oberey Union Assessment Committee & Withnell Overseers (5), North Manchester Overseers

v. Winstanley (6)]. In the case before us, the materials on the record show that the fifth defendant was not in occupation of the holding which was really in the occupation of his co-sharers. Under such circumstances, we are of opinion that the fifth defendant is not liable for the water-rate, and latrine fee, when neither he nor any member of his family really enjoyed the benefit of the water or the latrine.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed and the decree made by the Court below modified: the decree will be in favour of the Municipality for the sum of Rs. 420 on account of house rate against all the defendants, and there will also be a decree for the balance of the claim, namely, Rs. 320-4 annas against the first four defendants, on account of water-rate and latrine fee.

The plaintiff Municipality will pay the fifth defendant half his costs in all the Courts.

FLECKER, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application on behalf of one of the defendants, Nibaran Chandra Chatterjee, in a suit for resumption of the property known as the Barwe Raj in which the Maharaja of Chota Nagpore was the plaintiff and the principal defendants were the Raja of Barwe and his son. The petitioner was added as a defendant in that suit, because it appeared that he claimed to have derived certain forest and mineral rights in Perganra Barwe, which was the subject of the suit, from the predecessor-in interest of the principal defendant under an instrument, dated the 16th December 1913. The applicant was served with notice of the suit but he took no steps to defend it. He put in no written statement and left his interests entirely in the hands of the real defendants in the suit, namely, the Raja of Barwe and his son. The suit failed in the Court of first instance whereupon the Maharaja of Chota Nagpore appealed to the High Court and again, although the present applicant was a formal respondent in that appeal, he took no steps whatever to defend the action or to oppose the appeal, adopting the same attitude as he had done in the lower Court. This Court allowed the appeal and granted a declaration to the plaintiff, that he was entitled to resume the property in question. The effect of that decision may be, and probably will be, to affect the interests of the present applicant. The real defendants in the suit have applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and a certificate has been granted in that application and the appeal is at present pending before His Majesty in Council. The present applicant now presents this petition asking that he also may be granted a certificate so that he also may appear and argue the appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Council.

No authorities have been quoted to us which deal with such a situation and, therefore, we must deal with this case as one of first impression. Having regard to the attitude which throughout has been taken up by the present applicant, I think it must be assumed that he was content throughout to leave his interests in the hands of those who were the real defendants in the suit and who were defending the suit and who are now prosecuting the appeal to His Majesty in Council. In these circumstances, seeing that the appeal is being prosecuted by the real defendants, the present applicant's interests will be amply protected in the appeal which is now pending before His Majesty in Council and I can see no reason why the respondents should be unduly harassed by a second appeal which must, from the nature of the case, deal with exactly the same questions which will have to be determined in the appeal which is now pending. The applicant, having failed to put in any written statement or to take any part in the suit in the Court of first instance or to take any part in the appeal and having elected to leave his interests entirely in the hands of the real defendants, is not entitled, in my opinion, to turn round now and say that he is also entitled to present a separate appeal. I would reject the application with costs. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

settled in Record of Rights, finality of—Plea of title contrary to entry in Record of Rights, whether can be raised in rent suit.

Section 104 H of the Bengal Tenancy Act confers finality on the rent settled in the Record of Rights.

It is not open to a defendant in a rent-suit to urge the plea of title contrary to the entry in the Record of Rights.

Appeals against the decrees of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Pabna, dated the 1st of February 1919, reversing that of the First Munsif at Pabna, dated the 29th of April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Rajendra Ohandra Guha, for the Appellants.—The entry in the Record of Rights and the decision of the Settlement Officer cannot operate as a bar to my raising a plea of title. Section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act gives me a right to challenge the entry in the Record of Rights finally published under section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Jogendra Narayan Majumdar (with him Babu Amulya Kumar Bhattacharjee), for the Respondents.—An entry in the finally published Record of Rights, unless altered by means of a suit brought under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is conclusive. See Prasanna Kumar Adhikary v. Ruchimuddin Howladar (1). Refers also to Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sadananda Mahapatra (2). In a suit for rent based on the finally published Record of Rights, the defendant is not entitled to raise a plea of title contrary to the entry in the Record of Rights.

Babu Rajendra Ohandra Guha replied.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of two rent-suits. The plaintiffs claim rent on the Record of Rights from which it appears that the plaintiffs held as settlement-holders under Government in a khas mahal and the defendants are tenants under them.

The defence set up is that the defendants held the land by virtue of a kaimi lease granted by certain patnidars, the plaintiffs in this suit having also an interest in that patni.

The first Court held that the defendants established their plea and dismissed the suit.

(2) 46 Ind. Cas. 287; 23 C. W. N. 516.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed this decision and decreed the suite, holding that section 104 H of the Bengal Tenancy Act gave a finality to the rents settled in the Record of Rights. The defendants, we should mention, had attacked the Record of Rights by a suit under section 104 H which was dismissed. In our opinion, the view taken by the learned Judge is right and it is clearly supported by the authority of the cases of Prasanna Kumar Adhikari v. Ruchimuddin Howladar (1) and Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sadananda Mahapatra (2).

On behalf of the defendants-appellants it is contended that the entry and decision of the Settlement Officer are no bar to their raising this plea of title. Whether such a plea can still be raised in a suit properly brought for the purpose, it is not necessary to decide. On the authorities cited, it is quite clear that the plea cannot be raised in a rent suit.

We accordingly dismiss these appeals with costs in each case.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 30th November 1920.

The Hon'ble Mian Fazl-i-Hussain, K. B., for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., Bakhshi Tek Chand and Babu Kishen Dial, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A brief history of this case is as follows. The property in suit, the Civil and Military Hotel at Delhi, was the property of two brothers who in July 1913 leased it to Mrs. Smith for a period of seven years, the tenancy commencing on 1st October 1913. The tenancy expired, therefore, on 30th September 1920. An option of extension for three years was, however, given to Mrs. Smith and the real question in this case is, whether the right of exercising this option has passed to the transferee from Mrs. Smith. The case, however, has been decided on other grounds.

Mrs. Smith transferred her rights to Naurang Ahmad, the present plaintiff, in February 1915. He sub-let the property to Mrs. Harris, who has been made a defendant, for one year commencing from the 1st October 1919. Mrs. Harris in turn sub-let her remaining rights with effect from 1st April 1920 to the defendant, Mumtaz Hussain. He had then purchased the property from the original owners by a deed executed in February 1920. Mumtaz Hussain, thus, was the owner of the property and a sub-tenant under Naurang Ahmad, the present plaintiff, who sued for his eviction from the property in a suit instituted on 14th April 1920. The ground of the suit was that Mumtaz Hussain was acting adversely to the title of the plaintiff in that he was altering the nature of the premises. The plaintiff, therefore, asked for immediate possession and for an injunction that the property should be restored to its original condition and for damages. He first obtained a temporary injunction ordering Mumtaz Hussain to effect no alterations in the premises but this was set aside by this Court on 26th June. On the 4th of October 1920, as the position had changed owing to the expiry of the lease, unless the option was exercised, the plaintiff asked to be allowed to amend his claim. The main amendment was that the plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession as the lease to Mrs. Harris, which had been transferred to Mumtaz Hussain, had expired on the 30th of September. This amendment was allowed, and rightly so in our opinion, as the amendment was necessary for the purposes of determining the real question in controversy between the parties. Such amendment may, it is true, not have been in accordance with the law as it stood previously, but in the present Code of Civil Procedure, Order VI, rule 17, is framed with the object of allowing all reasonable amendments so as to secure an adjudication in the matter in dispute between the parties.

The lower Court has decreed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that Mumtaz Hussain being a tenant of the plaintiff in that he stands in the shoes of Mrs. Harris is estopped from denying his landlord's title. The lower Court has based its decision on the Privy Council judgment reported in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1) and on Ekoba Govindshet v. Dayaram Narayan (2) and Makhan Singh v. Baisakhi Ram Shah (3), in the latter two of which it is laid down that the provisions of section 116 of the Evidence Act that a tenant is estopped from denying his landlord's title only during the continuance of the tenancy is not exhaustive. This view of the law is not seriously contested by Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain but he urges that no question of the applicability of section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act arises in this case, inasmuch as the defendant Mumtaz Hussain does not and never has denied the plaintiff's title but merely urges as a defendant in the suit that plaintiff's title under the lease granted by the landlord in 1913 has determined and that plaintiff, therefore, is no longer a lessee and possesses no legal status by which he can evict the owner of the property. It is clear to us that this contention must prevail, unless the plaintiff can establish that, owing to the option clause, he is still the lessee. In such a case he would have the right to continue his possession under the terms of his lease irrespective of the provisions of section 116. The authorities cited by the lower Court and again relied on before us for the respondent are, it is true, clear authorities that a tenant who has been let into possession by his landlord cannot deny that landlord's title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. They are, however, not authorities to the effect that a tenant whose lease has determined can evict a landlord legally in possession of the property, even if that landlord has been let into possession by the quondam tenant.

We disagree, therefore, with the view of the law taken by the first Court and remand the case for trial on the merits. The costs will be costs in the cause and the Court fee on appeal will be refunded. The lower Court should take steps to dispose of this case as soon as practicable.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Fynck and Babu Bepin Chandra Bose, for the Appellants—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for establishment of the right of way from the homestead of the plaintiffs to the khal and tank of the defendants.

Before 1882 there was a way of necessity. Once there is an implied grant of easement of necessity, that grant does not come to an end. It has been found that, some time before 1882, there has been an easement. The question is that by the construction of the public road the easement has been extinguished. The learned Munsif, as well as the lower Appellate Court, hold that the right of way or easement has been extinguished. Refers to section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act. As soon as the Local Board road came into existence that right has disappeared. Before 1882 this right was enjoyed by Mahabharat as appurtenant to his homestead and when the homestead has passed to his heir, the right of way also passed to him. The construction of the Local Board road does not extinguish the right. The road came into existence in 1882. Up to 1880 there was no passage or outlet from the land. Since the existence of the public road the easement of necessity that was appurtenant to the tenement has come to an end.

That is not a correct view of the law as the lower Appellate Court holds. The right, namely, the easement enjoyed by Mahabharat by way of necessity was attached to the tenement. It is not a personal right. The right was appurtenant to the tenement granted to my clients. Refers to Holmes v. Goring (1). When the original grant was made to the previous tenant, the land belonged to the landlord then.

ABHOY CHANDRA GHOSH v. RAJ KUMAR GHOSH.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACIO, C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda in a suit for declaration of a right of way and for a perpetual injunction to restrain interference therewith. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, and that decision has been successively confirmed by the Subordinate Judge and by Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda. We are of opinion that the view which has commended itself to all the Judges concerned is correct and must be upheld.

The plaintiffs based their title on a putni lease granted to them by the defendants on the 24th October 1882. The question has been discussed in the Courts below as to whether the plaintiffs as tenants can acquire a prescriptive right of way as against the landlords-defendants. In our opinion, that question does not really arise on the facts of this case. The title of the plaintiffs is based upon the grant of 1882. Under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, the effect of that grant was to transfer to the plaintiffs the legal incidents of the property demised and such incidents included the easements annexed to the land. The point for consideration, accordingly, is, whether, at the date of the grant, there was an easement annexed to the land demised. Now, it has been found that up to 1880 the tenants then in occupation of the land had a way of necessity, but after 1880, when the Local Board established a public way, the way of necessity ceased to be necessary for the enjoyment of the holding. In these circumstances, Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda has held that, as the necessity for the way of necessity came to an end, the way also must be taken to have terminated. If this view be correct, the easement in question had terminated before the grant in favour of the plaintiffs was made. Consequently, under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, it cannot be maintained that the way now claimed was an incident of the property demised to the plaintiffs. We have thus to consider, whether it can be affirmed as a proposition of law that when the necessity for an easement of necessity terminates, the easement also terminates. We are of opinion that the answer must be in the affirmative.

An easement of necessity is an easement which, under particular circumstances, the law creates by virtue of the doctrine of implied grant to meet the necessity of a particular case. It is an easement which is not merely necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the dominant tenement, but one without which that tenement cannot be used at all. Such an easement lasts only so long as the necessity exists, for a grant arising out of the implication of necessity cannot be carried farther than the necessity of the case requires. Reference may, in this connection, be made to the decision in Holmes v. Goring (1), which is an authority for the proposition that an easement limited by the necessity which creates it, ceases if, at any subsequent period, the party entitled can approach the place to which it led by passing over his own land. The appellant, however, has argued that the correctness of this decision has been doubted in subsequent cases, and has invited us to hold that the view just mentioned is not well-founded on principle. We are unable to accept this contention as well founded.

In Proctor v. Hodgson (2) Baron Parke referred to the decision in Holmes v. Goring (1) in the following terms: "The extent of the authority of Holmes v. Goring (1) is that, admitting a grant in general terms, it may be construed to be a grant of a right of way as from time to time may be necessary. I should have thought it meant as much a grant for ever, as if expressly inserted in a deed, and it struck me at that time that the Court was wrong: but that is not the question now." Baron Alderson added: "Probably, if this case be taken to a Court of Error, Holmes v. Goring (1) will be reviewed." These observations of Baron Parke were cited by Blackburn, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court in Pearson v. Spencer (3), in the following terms: "We certainly do not feel inclined to extend the authority of Holmes v. Goring (1) so far as to hold that the person into whose possession the servient tenement comes, may from time to time vary the direction of the way of necessity, at his pleasure, so long as he substitutes a convenient way." This does not show that Mr. Justice Blackburn was inclined to question the correctness of the view that a way of necessity terminates when the necessity itself comes to an end. This is clear from the following observation: "We think we must hold that the way of necessity, once created, must remain the same way as long as it continues at all." This indicates that a way of necessity may come to an end. This is also clear from the observation of Erle, C. J., in the Exchequer Chamber, Pearson v. Spencer (4): "A way of necessity, strictly so called, ends with the necessity for it and the direction in which the plaintiffs says the way ought to go would so end." This view, in our opinion, is well-founded on reason, and shows that Holmes v. Goring (1) has been doubted upon a point which does not touch the question in controversy before us [Deacon v. South Eastern Ry. Co. (5)]. We hold, accordingly, that the view taken by Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda is correct and his decision must be affirmed.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. K. Mukerji for Notan Das, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal by Mr. Salig Ram, Pleader, a judgment-debtor in execution proceedings, from the order of the lower Courts allowing Notan Das to execute against him a payment-order passed in liquidation proceedings under section 150 of the Indian Companies Act, VI of 1882. Salig Ram was a share-holder in the Indian Exchange Bank, Limited, which went into liquidation. On the 8th of August 1918 the Official Liquidator issued a notice to the contributories under which he agreed to accept from them Rs. 25 per share if payment was made by them into the Bank of Bengal by a certain date. Salig Ram is said to have been one of the persons who did not make the payment due from him by the fixed date and on the 7th of September 1918 the Judge of the Liquidation Court signed a payment-order for Rs. 1,000 against him under section 150 of the Companies Act.

Notan Das is the transferee of the assets of the Company which was under liquidation and he seeks to execute this payment-order as if it were a decree and the Courts below have allowed him to do so. One of the grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court was that the assets of the Company under liquidation having been sold to Notan Das on the 30th August 1918 any payment order passed in favour of the Official Liquidator after that date was a nullity and, therefore, the Court had no jurisdiction to execute it.

The decision of the Privy Council in the case of Khierajmal v. Daim (1) is authority for the proposition that decrees which amount to a nullity may be disregarded without any proceeding to set them aside. The case is reported as Khierajmal v. Daim (1) and was followed in Hanuman Prasad v. Muhammad Ishaq (2). It is, therefore, clear that if the payment-order is a nullity it may be disregarded by a Court whose assistance is sought for its execution. In Black on Judgments, which is referred to in Gurdeo Singh v. Ohandrika Singh (3), it is laid down, in section 215, that: "A Court cannot adjudicate upon a subject-matter, which does not fall within its province as defined or limited by law. In order to the validity of a judgment, the Court must have jurisdiction of the persons, of the subject-matter, and of the particular question which it assumes to decide. It cannot act upon persons who are not legally before it, upon one who is not a party to the suit, and so on."

Now, it is contended before me that the duty of a Court in liquidation proceedings is to realise the assets of the Company and to discharge its liabilities so far as possible. Now, the debt of Salig Ram to the Company was discharged so far as the Liquidator was concerned when it was sold to Lala Notan Das, and it is urged that it is no part of the duty of the Court to help Lala Notan Das to realise the debt due to him from Salig Ram. I think that there is great force in this argument and, indeed, Mr. Mukerji on behalf of the respondent admits that once a debt has been sold to a third person the Court cannot make a payment-order in regard to it under section 150 of the Companies Act, 1882. He has cited Tharya Ram v. Popat Ram (4), but in that case the assignment was made after the payment-order had been drawn up. Mr. Mukerji urges, however, that the payment-order was really of the 30th August 1918 and was made prior to the sale to Lala Notan Das which took place on the same day but at a subsequent time. He refers to an order of the Judge of that date which states that the Official Liquidator reports that certain contributories have taken advantage of the remission of 15 per cent. allowed for prompt payment and goes on as follows:—"I have directed that payment-orders be prepared against defaulting contributories." In accordance with this order the payment-order was drawn up and was signed by the Judge on the 7th of September as already stated. The Judge did not, on the 30th August, make payment-orders against any particular persons. The list of contributories had to be scrutinized and it had to be ascertained who were the defaulters, and this apparently accounts for the slight delay that occurred in drawing up the payment-orders. The sale of the assets took place by auction on the 30th of August 1918 and on that day the purchaser made a part payment, namely, Rs. 6,000, and the sale was, therefore, complete under section 78 of the Contract Act. I, therefore, hold that the payment order of the 7th September, which was subsequent to the sale, was ultra vires and, was a nullity and that it is not binding upon Salig Ram, appellant.

I accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the orders of the lower Courts, dismiss the application of Lala Notan Das for execution of his so-called decree, and direct that he do pay appellant's costs throughout.

—Registered sub-lease in perpetuity by raiyat, whether admissible in evidence—Estoppel, applicability of doctrine of.

A sub-lease by a raiyat granted and registered in contravention of the provisions of section 85 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is inadmissible in evidence.

A raiyat is not precluded from questioning the validity of a sub-lease, purporting to be a lease in perpetuity, by reason of the doctrine of estoppel where there was no misrepresentation by him as to the extent of his interest or as to his status as raiyat. In such a case the doctrine of estoppel has no application.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Bakarganj, dated the 13th of July 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, Fifth Court, at Barisal, dated the 24th of May 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Asitaram Chatterjee, for the Appellant.—Although the lease is in contravention of the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is binding as between the lessor and the lessee. See Gonesh Mondol v. Thanda Namasundrani (1). My lease is a permanent one. It cannot, therefore, be terminated by notice. The case in Chanli Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (2) was the case of a lease from year to year. The lease was thus terminable by notice to quit. There was thus no question either of the applicability of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or of estoppel. It is only the landlord who can question the lease. See Manik Borai v. Bani Charan Mandal (3). The lease is, therefore, binding on the raiyat because the grantor cannot be permitted to derogate from the grant. Refers to *Madan Chandra Kapali v. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought to eject an under raiyat after notice. The findings of fact arrived at by the Court of first appeal are as follows. Plaintiff is a raiyat. He granted to the defendant a lease which purported to be a lease in perpetuity. He brings this suit in ejectment after service of a sufficient notice to quit under the provisions of section 49 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On the authority of, amongst other cases, the case of Jarip Khan v. Durfa Bewa (10) and the case of Gonsh Mandal v. Thanda Namasundrani (1) it must be held that the lease in question, having been granted and registered in contravention of the provisions of section 85 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is inadmissible in evidence. It is contended before us that the plaintiff a raiyat is precluded from questioning the validity of this lease by reason of the doctrine of estoppel; but here the finding of fact is that there was no misrepresentation by the plaintiff as to the extent of his interest or as to his status as raiyat. The doctrine of estoppel, therefore, has no application.

The appellants' Pleader next seeks to rely upon the proof of his client's possession. No doubt, that possession, apart from the lease, would be sufficient to prove his tenancy. However, that is not sufficient to prove his permanent lease. Moreover, by the service of the notice to quit the tenancy has terminated.

It follows that the defendant must submit to the decree made against him for possession. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The two original plaintiffs in this case were two sisters of the last male holder. They obtained possession of his land and, owing to an unauthorised order of the revenue officials which they have unwisely thought fit to obey, they have instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises against collaterals in the 9th degree that they are entitled to retain possession of their brother's land. The first Court held that they had failed to prove that they were entitled by custom to their brother's land. The lower Appellate Court, considering the judgment of the first Court to be very cursory and that custom was not prima facie in favour of the claim of very remote collaterals to exclude sisters, re-framed the issues and remanded the case for a further enquiry. It directed that the whole question of custom should be left as open as possible and it did not think that mere failure on one side or the other to prove its case would necessarily conclude the question. After remand the learned District Judge considered that there was a distinct presumption that by the custom of the main agricultural tribes in the Punjab sisters never inherit. It, therefore, thought that the onus lay upon the sisters and, after considering numerous judgments of the High Court and the evidence in the case, it came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had entirely failed to prove their title to inheritance, although the land was not ancestral. The plaintiff's suit was, therefore, dismissed and they have preferred a second appeal on a certificate of the District Judge.

The main ground argued in the appeal is that, although the parties are admittedly governed by custom in matters of inheritance, there is no ascertained rule of custom applying to the present case and that, therefore, the lower Appellate Court should have fallen back upon the personal law of the parties. We have no difficulty in agreeing with the contention of Counsel that no custom has been ascertained as to the rights of sisters of a last male-holder as against collaterals of the 9th degree in the case of acquired property. The evidence in the case produced by both parties was contemptible and neither the appellants nor the respondents have placed any reliance upon it. Counsel for the respondents, however, relies upon an entry in the riwaj-i-am and also on the general rule of custom as laid down in Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, section 24. The tribe of the parties is apparently included among the Jats of the district and the entry in the riwaj-i-am relied upon after giving the replies of some special tribes lays down that among other tribes, among whom Jats are included, a sister or her sons can never inherit. We do not consider that this entry in the riwaj-i-am can give us much help in the decision of this case. The learned District Judge himself admits that this riwaj-i-am has often been called in question and its value discounted. We also consider that it is a safe rule to accept, unless there is a provision to the contrary, that the rules laid down in the riwaj-i-am refer to ancestral and not acquired property. In

ABHOY CHARAN DUTTA v. MONORANJAN RAI.

Rai Kaur v. Talok Singh (1) Sir Donald Johnstone, Chief Judge, held that the rules laid down in the riwar-i-am must usually be taken to apply only to ancestral property and the same opinion is expressed in Budhi Parkash v. Chander Bhan (2). As for the general rules laid down in paragraph 24 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, it is open to the same criticism, namely, that it is based mainly on authorities regarding ancestral property and on the generally accepted principles of agnatic succession which do not apply in the case of acquired property. There is, it is true, one reported decision cited by the learned author in which sisters were excluded by collaterals of the 10th degree in the case of acquired property. This is a case of the Lahore District and is based on the special custom thought to be prevailing there. [The judgment in question is printed as Barnamon v. Santa Singh (3)]. There are also other decisions of the same district, namely, Utter Kour v. Atma Singh (4) and Ali Mohammad v. Siraj-ud-din (5). In the latter case the land was ancestral and in the former it appears to have been so. There are also other decisions affecting various tribes of the Punjab, many of which have been noticed by the lower Appellate Court. We do not consider that any general rule can be deduced from these judgments. We hold, therefore, that no special custom was proved in the present case, and that there is no general rule so widely accepted among the agricultural tribes of the Punjab that would justify us in coming to any definite conclusion based on custom. We agree, therefore, with Counsel for the appellants that, although the plaintiffs themselves relied in their plaint on Customary Law, the Court should have fallen back upon the personal law of the parties for the decision of this case. This is clearly provided for in section 5 of the Punjab Laws Act. This principle has been widely followed by the Chief Court even though the plaintiff has based his case upon custom [see Sardar Bibi v. Sayed Ali Shah (6), Khanan v. Jatti (7) and Khuda Bakhsh v. Fattah Khan (8)]. Moreover, in the present case, although the plaintiffs themselves came into Court basing their claim upon custom, and although they failed to prove any specific custom in their favour, the defendants-respondents can have no complaint against our decision that the question in issue must be decided by Muhammadan Law as the issues were so widely framed by the lower Appellate Court that they had every opportunity to tender all the possible evidence in their favour.

For the above reasons, we accept the appeal and decree the plaintiffs' case with costs in all the Courts.

Babu Sures Chandra Talukdar, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.—The plaintiffs purchased the tenure in execution of a mortgage decree. The same tenure was purchased by the defendants in execution of a rent decree. The defendants further took steps under section 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, to annul the encumbrance which was the interest of the plaintiffs. I beg to submit that the rent-decree obtained by the defendants operates as a decree for money and so my clients ought to recover possession on declaration of title. I do not venture to dispute that if the rent-decree really operates as a rent-decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act my clients have no case. In the suit for rent by the landlords in which they obtained a decree they did not make the widows of Meherulla parties to the suit and so the decree cannot be regarded as a decree for rent because the entire tenure was not represented in that suit. Refers to Girish Chandra Guho v. Khagendra Nath (1).

Babu Biraj Mohan Marumdar, for the Deputy Registrar, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The subject-matter of the litigation is a tenure which was purchased by the plaintiffs in execution of a mortgage decree. The identical tenure was purchased in execution of a rent-decree by the defendants who took steps in accordance with section 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, to annul the interest of the plaintiffs as an incumbrance. The substantial questions in controversy between the parties is, whether the rent-decree operated as a decree for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act or only as a decree for money. It is not disputed that, if it operated as a rent-decree, the plaintiffs cannot possibly succeed in this suit.

The Courts below have found the circumstances under which the rent-decree was passed. The tenure belonged in equal halves to one Abdul and to three brothers Meherulla, Arjannulla and Sonanulla. On the death of Meherulla, his share devolved on his two widows, his mother and the two surviving brothers. Similarly, on the death of Arjannullah, his share devolved on his widow, his mother and his surviving brother. Finally, on the death of Sonanullah, his share devolved on his mother, his widow and his sons. The widows of Meherullah re-married after the death of their husband and went to live in the houses of their second husbands. The tenure remained in the actual occupation of the other persons just mentioned, and their names were entered in the books of the landlord as those of the tenants in possession. Default was thereafter made in the payment of rent, with the result that the landlord sued the recorded tenants and obtained a decree against them. It is now argued that, as the two widows of Meherulla were not joined as parties to the suit, the decree could not be treated as a decree for rent, inasmuch as the entire tenure was not represented in that litigation. In support of this contention, reliance is placed upon the case of Girish Chandra Guho v. Khagendra Nath (1). But that case is clearly distinguishable. There, upon the death of the tenant, his representatives had taken steps to pay the prescribed fee under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Notwithstanding this, the landlord sued some of the representatives of the original tenant: the excuse he offered was that he did not receive the fee and that the notice issued by the Collector did not reach him. This Court held that the representatives of the tenant had performed their duty and had complied with the requirements of the law, when they deposited the fees with the Collector. Upon payment of such fee, their title as tenants became perfected, with the result that the landlord, if he desired to pass the entire tenure at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, was bound at his peril to join all the representatives of the original tenant. In the case before us, the representatives of the tenant did not follow the provisions of the law and did not deposit the fee prescribed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. Two of them abandoned the tenure and went to live with their second husbands. The other tenants remained in possession and had their names recorded in the books of the landlord as tenants in actual occupation. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the tenure was fully represented in the suit, and the decree which was obtained by the landlord against the recorded tenants operated as a decree for rent. This conclusion is supported by the decisions in Nitayi Eehari Saha v. Hari Govinda Saha (2), Jogut Tara Dasya v. Doulati Beua (3), Gagan Sheikh v. Abajin Khatun (4). It follows that the view taken by the District Judge is correct and his decree must be affirmed.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed without costs, as the costs of the infant respondents have already been paid.

PARMANAND—PLAINTIFF—

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (v) (x)—Suit for possession of land on payment of balance of consideration—Court-fee payable.

Plaintiff alleged that defendant had sold certain land to him and had received part of the sale consideration. Plaintiff now sued for possession of the land and also prayed that defendant be ordered to execute a deed of sale and have it registered on receipt of the balance of the price:

Held, that the suit was one for possession of land, the prayer as to the execution of the sale-deed being merely ancillary, and that Court-fees were payable in accordance with clause (v) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act.

Second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 26th March 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 21st February 1920.

Lala Amar Nath Bhatia, for the Appellants.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case alleges that the defendants orally sold some land to him for Rs. 4,250, received Rs. 100 out of the price, and agreed to execute a deed of sale, and he asks in his plaint that he may be given possession of the land and that the defendants may be ordered to execute a deed of sale and have it registered on receiving the balance of the price.

He treated the suit as one for possession of land and paid Court-fees on ten times the revenue. The Munsif held that the suit was one not only for possession, but also for specific performance of a contract to sell the land, and ordered the plaintiff to pay Court-fees on Rs. 4,250, and as the deficiency was not made good he rejected the plaint.

On appeal, the District Judge held that the suit had been properly valued by the plaintiff as one falling under section 7 (v) of the Court Fees Act, and he set aside the first Court's order and remanded the case.

The defendants have filed a second appeal in this Court.

The decision of the learned District Judge is clearly correct. When the plaintiff distinctly alleges that a sale had taken place the suit cannot possibly be regarded as one for specific performance of a contract to sell.

The suit is one for possession of the land alleged to have been sold, and the additional prayer that the defendants may be ordered to execute a sale-deed is an ancillary relief.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 59—Joint tenancy and tenancy-in-common, distinction between—Survivorship, principle of, applicability of.

There is a distinction between a joint tenancy and a tenancy-in-common, the test being whether definite shares have been specified.

It is only in the case of a joint occupancy tenancy that the principle of survivorship applies.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 6th April 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 8th January 1920.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellants.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case are the landlords who sue for possession of land of which Budhu was the occupancy tenant. After Budhu's death his widow, Musammât Kirpo, held the land as tenant. She is now dead and the landlords sue for possession, alleging that the tenancy is extinct. Jai Dial and Hako, cousins of Budhu, resist the claim, alleging that the land was occupied by the common ancestor and also that they are entitled to succeed by survivorship, the tenancy being joint. Both the lower Courts held that it is not proved that the common ancestor occupied the land, and though the finding on this point has been challenged in the grounds of appeal to this Court nothing has been said in arguments. As regards the defendants' claim that the tenancy was a joint one, the first Court held that this contention was correct and dismissed the suit. The learned District Judge on appeal noted that Musammât Kirpo had been cultivating separate land from the defendants for some years past and also that she had alienated a small portion of the land in favour of one Hira Singh. Therefore, in spite of the fact that the parties are shown as joint tenants in the revenue papers, he held that there had been a partition of the tenancy and he decreed the suit in plaintiff's favour.

Hako and Jai Dial appeal to this Court as also does Hira Singh, to whom a small portion of the land was gifted by Musammât Kirpo. The only point which has been argued before me is the question whether the tenancy was a joint one; and for the appellants reliance is placed on two Revenue rulings Agar Singh v. Dhana (1) and Ohanda Singh v. Jivan Singh (2). In both of these rulings the learned Financial Commissioners have declined to draw any distinction between a joint tenancy and a tenancy in common, laying down as the sole test the question of a partition having taken place. On the other hand, there are the decisions of this Court, Mohru v. Mutsaddi (3) and Khan Singh v. Hardit Singh (4), which clearly hold that there is a distinction between a joint tenancy and a tenancy in common, and lay down as the test whether definite shares are specified. Now, in the present case although the revenue records show the parties as joint tenants, their shares have all along been specified and, therefore, even supposing that there has been no actual partition, it is a case of a tenancy-in-common and not a joint tenancy. The distinction between the two kinds of tenancies is, I consider, a real one and, in my opinion, it is only in the case of a joint tenancy that the doctrine of survivorship applies. I need not state my reasons at length as they have been fully set forth in the two judgments of this Court already referred to. Following these rulings, I hold that the principle of survivorship does not apply in the present case which is a case of a tenancy in common and not a joint tenancy.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The material facts are these. The plaintiff advanced money to a joint family, of which the defendants in these two suits were members, some time before 1305 Fasli. In 1311 Fasli, that is, long after the debt had become barred by time, there was a settlement of accounts between the parties. On the date of settlement, namely, the 8th of Jeth 1318 Fasli, a total sum of Rs. 3,525 3 was found to be due by the members of the defendants' joint family jointly. This debt was split up into three equal parts of Rs. 1,220-12-6 each and the managing members of each of the three branches of the joint family acknowledged their several liability for that sum in the following terms: "Account of Babu Damodar Prasad Singh and Babu Palak Deo Narayan Singh, sons and heirs of Babu Jug Deo Narayan Singh, deceased, residents and part proprietors of Mouzah Saikhopur, appertaining to Mahal Karnauti, Perganra Saraisa, District Muzafferpur, for 1318. Debit side: Rs. 1,220-12-6 due up to 8th Jeth 1318 F. S (signature with stamp affixed) signed Damodar Prasad Singh and Palak Deo Narayan Singh accounting up to 8th Jeth 1318 Fasli, a sum of Rs. 1,220-12-6 has fallen due from us to the Kothi which is right and correct, by the pen of Damodar Prasad Singh dated 16th Bhado 1318, F. S". The acknowledgments given by the other branches of the family represented by Gobind Prasad Singh, and Lachmi Prasad Singh, respectively, were in similar terms. These two suits were brought by the plaintiffs against Damodar Prasad Singh and Gobind Prasad Singh and a sum of Rs. 2,093-10-0 was claimed in each. The suits were dismissed by both the Courts below on the ground that the claims were barred by time.

The first question arising in these appeals is, whether the acknowledgment recited above is "promise to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits," within the meaning of section 25 (3) of the Indian Contract Act. The English Law makes no distinction in this respect between an acknowledgment or promise which is sufficient to extend time in the case of a debt which is not yet barred, and an acknowledgment or promise which is sufficient to create a new contract where the debt had already become barred by lapse of time. "The renewal of liability may be made before or after the debt is barred by the Statute. And it is material to the construction of the acknowledgment or promise whether the debt is barred or not at the time of making it: in the former case, the debtor is in a position to couple any promise he makes with a condition; in the latter, he has no right to impose terms, and must be presumed to have no such intention, for the action is then brought upon his original liability." (Leake on Contracts, 6th Edition page 724). The decision of the Judicial Committee in Maniram Seth v Seth Rupchand (1), which was a decision in a case falling under section 19 of the Limitation Act, a section in which the word used is "acknowledgment", does not directly apply to the construction of section 25 of the Indian Contract Act. In India, a distinction has always been made between the acknowledgment which is sufficient for the purposes of section 19 of the Limitation Act and the promise which is required by section 25 of the Indian Contract Act. An acknowledgment, no doubt, implies a promise to pay; but in order to create a new contract (and this is what section 25 of the Contract Act requires) it is necessary that the promise to pay should be expressed. Acknowledgments similar to those in the present cases have frequently been construed by the Indian Courts and have always been held to be insufficient to create a new contract: Ramji v. Dharma (2), Ohowksi Himutlal Harivulubhdas v. Ohowksi Achrutlal Harivulubhdas (3), Ranchhod-das Nathubhai v. Jeychamt Khushalchand (4), Gobind Das v. Sariau Das (5), Dukhi Sahu v. Mahomed Eikhu (6), Debi Prosad v. Ram Ghulam Sahu (7). It is, therefore, impossible to hold that the acknowledgment given in this case, so far as it is merely an acknowledgment of a time-barred debt, is sufficient evidence of a new contract to bring the case within section 25 of the Contract Act. But besides the acknowledgment of a time barred debt there is another element in the present case. Before the account was settled on the 8th of Jeth 1318 Fasli, all the members of the family were jointly liable for the entire debt of Rs. 3,662-5-3. On the day of settlement a new contract was entered into by which a several liability for one-third of the debt was assigned to each of the three branches of the family in substitution for the previously existing joint liability for the total sum. This limitation of liability is in itself good consideration which will support a new contract apart altogether from the provisions of section 25 of the Contract Act, and, for the purposes of this new contract, the acknowledgment of indebtedness given in writing containing an implied promise to meet that indebtedness is, in my opinion, sufficient evidence of a contract on which the present suits can be based.

Two other points raised were of minor importance. It is contended that there is in this case an account stated within the meaning of Article 64 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. Such an account stated, however, implies cross demands and it is the mutual surrender of these cross-demands that creates the new contract when an account is stated between the parties. In the absence of any cross demands, as in the present case, there is nothing to take the settlement of account out of the ordinary rule.

It was also contended that the correspondence between the parties is sufficient proof of a new contract, this is a matter of evidence and in second appeal this Court is not entitled to go into this question.

I would allow the appeals, set aside the judgments and decrees passed and made by the Courts below and give the plaintiffs a decree in each of the suits for the sums claimed against the defendants who signed the account of the 24th Assin 1316, that is to say, in Suit No. 232 of 1916, against both the defendants, and in Suit No. 231 of 1916 against defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Claim proceedings—Objections dismissed for default—Decree fully satisfied—Declaratory suit, whether maintainable.

Two out of four representatives of a judgment-debtor filed objections to the sale of a house in execution of the decree. These objections were dismissed for default and the decree having been fully satisfied the file was consigned to the record-room. Subsequently, all the representatives of the judgment-debtor brought a suit for a declaration that the house belonged to them and was not liable to sale in execution of the decree:

Held, that section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code was no bar to the suit inasmuch as,—

- (a) the decree having been fully satisfied the execution Court had become functus officio.
- (b) the objections had been filed only by two out of the four plaintiffs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 1st March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Ferozepore, dated the 13th November 1919.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the representatives of Imam Din, against whom the defendant had a decree. The defendant had a house attached and sold in execution of the decree. Two of the plaintiffs, namely, Nizam ud din and Nur Muhammad, filed objections, but on the 6th December 1917 those were dismissed for default, on the 7th January 1918 the sale was confirmed and on the 22nd January 1918 the file was sent to the record room, the decree having been fully satisfied. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit on the 25th February 1919 asking for a declaration that the house was theirs and was not liable to sale in execution of the decree. The Munsif dismissed the suit as barred both by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and by Article 11 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. The District Judge agreed with the Munsif as to the suit being barred by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and dismissed the appeal without going into the question of limitation. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court.

It is contended on the appellants' behalf that as the respondent's decree had been fully satisfied the executing Court was functus officio, and, consequently, section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code is no bar to the suit. This contention is correct. It is urged for the respondent that the plaintiffs could have appealed against the order of the 6th December 1917 dismissing their objections and, not having done so, cannot bring a regular suit. But the objections were dismissed only for default, and there could have been no appeal from the order of dismissal so far as the merits of the objections were concerned. There was no determination of the question arising between the parties under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. Moreover, it was only two of the plaintiffs who had filed objections. The dismissal of those objections could in no case affect the rights of the other two plaintiffs, Allabditia and Ramzan, and when the decree had been fully satisfied their only remedy was to file a suit.

I hold, therefore, that section 47 is not a bar to the suit. It is not necessary for me to go into the question of limitation, as the District Judge has not yet decided it.

I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge, and remand the case to him under Order XLI, rule 23, for fresh disposal of the appeal before him. Court-fee on the appeal in this Court to be refunded. Other costs will be costs in the case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), O. XLV, r. 4—Consolidation of appeals—"Same judgment," meaning of—Suits decided by same judgment in Trial Court, but by different judgments in High Court, whether can be consolidated.

The word "judgment" in rule 4 of Order XLV of the Civil Procedure Code, refers to the judgment appealed against, that is, the judgment of the High Court and not the judgment of the Trial Court. [p. 518, col. 1]

The proposition that, because certain suits were originally in the Court of first instance decided in one judgment, therefore, whatever may have happened to them subsequently and whether decided eventually in the High Court by the same judgment or by a number of judgments, there should, in such cases, be power to consolidate for the purpose of appeal to His Majesty in Council is to give a meaning to Order XLV, rule 4, which it was never intended to bear. The requirement of the rule is that the judgment which their Lordships of the Privy Council have to consider and from which an appeal is brought should be the same judgment in the consolidated appeals and not that they should have in the same case or in the same appeal to consider the effect of several separate judgments of the High Court. [p. 518, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of Coutts and Sultan Ahmad, JJ., affirming a decision of the District Judge, Patna.

Mr. G. D. Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Hasnain, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in 14 appeals which were decided by this Court. These cases in which the appeals arose were tried together with a number of other cases amounting to 49 in all before the Subordinate Judge of Patna. In one of those cases the present appellants, or those whom they now represent, were the plaintiffs and in the other cases there were a number of plaintiffs and the present appellants were the defendants or some of the defendants in each of those suits. With regard to the case in which the appellants were the plaintiffs that alone of the suits amounted to a sum of over Rs. 10,000. All the suits were tried together and were disposed of by the same judgment before the learned Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs' case failed. That of all the other parties who were plaintiffs in the other suits succeeded. The result was that in the plaintiffs' suit an appeal came direct to this Court and that appeal affirmed the decision of the Court below. In the other suits, in some of which there was also an appeal, these appeals went to the District Judge and from his decision affirming that of the Court below an appeal was presented in certain of the cases to this Court. The High Court affirmed the decision of the District Judge. The result was that the present appellants failed both in the suit in which they were plaintiffs and in the suits in which they were defendants each of these suits being claims for certain portions of Diara lands. In the suit in which the present applicants were plaintiffs and which amounted to over Rs. 10,000 they have applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. There is no question about the valuation in that suit. In the other 14 cases in which they were defendants they have also applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. None of these suits amounts in value to Rs. 10,000 or anything near it, and the value as found in the lower Court of the whole of these 14 cases amounts to only Rs. 7,290. For the purposes of pecuniary valuation we are asked to exercise our powers under Order XLV, rule 4 and to consolidate the 14 suits in which the petitioners were defendants with the other suit in which they were plaintiffs and, if this can be done, there can be no question that the pecuniary valuation of the consolidated appeal will be sufficient to justify us in granting a certificate. Unfortunately, however, for the petitioners the appeal in which they were plaintiffs was not decided by the same judgment as the appeals in which they were defendants and which they now seek to have consolidated with the other appeal. They contend, however, that as these cases were decided in the first Court by the same judgment that, therefore, they come under the provisions of Order XLV, rule 4. That rule provides that, for purposes of pecuniary valuation, suits involving substantially the same question for determination and decided by the same judgment may be consolidated, but suits decided by separate judgments shall not be consolidated notwithstanding that they involve substantially the same question for determination. Reading that rule I do not think that there can be any question but that the word "judgment" there used refers to the judgment appealed against, that is, the judgment which is being considered throughout Order XLV, and to suggest that, because the suits were originally in the Court of first instance decided in one judgment, therefore, whatever may have happened to them subsequently and whether decided eventually in the High Court by the same judgment or by a number of judgments, there should, in such cases, be power to consolidate for the purpose of appeal to His Majesty in Council is, in my opinion, to give a meaning to Order XLV, rule 4, which it was never intended to bear. The important thing is that the judgment which their Lordships have to consider and from which an appeal is brought should be the same judgment in the consolidated appeals and not that they should have in the same case or in the same appeal to consider the effect of several separate judgments of the High Court.

It is next contended that, in spite of rule 4, we still have inherent powers to consolidate but where the consolidation is merely for the purposes of pecuniary valuation the rule expressly lays down that suits decided by separate judgment shall not be consolidated. I know of no case, nor has any been brought our notice, where suits decided by separate judgments have been consolidated, nor can it I think be said that such cases come within the provisions of the rule. Therefore, in my opinion, this application for consolidation must be rejected.

The next matter which arises is this: Although in the plaint and in the memorandum of appeal to this Court and to the lower Appellate Court the suits were valued at a sum below Rs. 10,000, nevertheless, the appellants contend that they can shew, if an enquiry is granted under Order XLV, rule 5, that the real value of the property in these 14 appeals when ascertained will amount to a sum of over Rs. 10,000 and they have put in a petition which has been verified stating that the value of the property is something like Rs. 150 per bigha, and, taken at this valuation, will amount to Rs. 16,000 or Rs. 17,000. Were we satisfied that there was any substance in this petition we should be justified in sending the case down to the Judge of the Trial Court to ascertain what the real value is notwithstanding the fact that the petitioners themselves have placed the value in their memorandum of appeal at a much lower figure than Rs. 10,000, but it turns out that this very question of the valuation of the property was one which was gone into as one of the issues in the case and was determined by a preliminary enquiry before the other issues in the case were gone into, and both the parties gave evidence as to the value of the property with the result that a decision was come to and the total value of the property in these 14 cases was assessed by the lower Court at a sum of Rs. 7,290. There has been no appeal on that matter and the parties have taken that valuation as accurate for the purposes of this case and Court-fees have been paid thereon. It seems to us that it would be useless in such a case to send the matter down to the lower Court to re-value the property when the property has already been valued after an enquiry by a competent tribunal and in the presence of the parties and, although it may not be necessary to decide whether what has happened amounts to res judicata, still we are not satisfied that the petitioners have shown sufficient grounds to induce the Court to allow the matter of valuation to be reopened. In these circumstances, we think, that the petition in these appeals upon both the grounds mentioned should be rejected. The respondents are entitled to the costs of these applications. We think that they are only entitled to one set of costs and we assess the hearing fee at 5 gold n ohurs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 8th March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif First Class, Amritsar, dated the 5th August 1919.

Mr. Lal Chand Mehra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The history of this case is as follows:—By deed, dated the 17th July 1905, land belonging to Sundar Singh and his two younger brothers, Asa Singh and Teja Singh, was mortgaged to the defendant, Sundar Singh executing the deed himself and his mother executing the deed on behalf of her two younger sons, Asa Singh and Teja Singh. The land was mortgaged for Rs. 300. Asa Singh and Teja Singh brought a suit, and by a decree, dated the 3rd November 1915, recovered their shares of the land. Kehr Singh then brought a suit against Sundar Singh urging that the whole of the mortgage debt, namely, Rs. 300, should be regarded as a lien on Sundar Singh's one third share in the land. This suit was dismissed and an appeal to the District Judge was also dismissed. In this suit Sundar Singh pleaded that he was a minor when the mortgage deed was executed and it was found that he was at the time only 14 or 15 years of age. Sundar Singh now sues Kehr Singh for recovery of his one-third of the land and has obtained a decree, against which Kehr Singh has lodged a second appeal. Sundar Singh, meanwhile, has died and is now represented by his brothers.

The first ground of appeal is that the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was barred by time. This ground, however, has not been argued before me, so I need say nothing about it.

The next point argued is, that the plaintiff was not a minor at the time when the mortgage-deed was executed but the decision in the former suit renders this question res judicata. Then, it is urged that if the plaintiff was a minor at the time when the mortgage-deed was executed, he misrepresented his age and thereby deceived the defendant. I can only say that I agree with the District Judge that if, as has been held, the plaintiff was only 14 or 15 years of age at the time of the mortgage, the defendant must have been aware of his minority.

Then, it is urged that since the alienation was effected in July 1905 and this suit was not brought till August 1917, the suit is time barred. There is, however, a finding of the District Judge that the defendant never got possession until 1906 and this is a finding of fact. This suit, therefore, brought in 1917, must be regarded as within limitation.

Then, it is urged that the plaintiff is estopped by reason of acquiescence, but no acquiescence has been pointed out beyond delay in suing and this alone cannot be regarded as proof of acquiescence.

Lastly, it is urged that the mortgagee is entitled to a refund of the mortgage money and reliance is placed on a judgment of a single Judge of this Court reported as 7 P. W. R. 198 [Sardara v. Kaura Ram (1)]. This judgment, no doubt, lays down that where a minor comes into Court to challenge an alienation and recover his land, he must, before recovery, restore to the alienee all the benefit which he has derived from the alienation, on the equitable ground that he who seeks equity must do equity. In the first place, I remark that the Punjab Weekly Reporter is not an authorised publication; and, in the next, I refer to the Privy Council ruling, Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (2). There it is held that section 64 of the Contract Act relates only to a contract between competent parties and is not applicable to a case where one of the parties to a contract is a minor who is incompetent to enter into a contract. As regards equity, the same ruling approves of the dictum of Lord Justice Romer in the case of Thurstan v. Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society (3), which runs as follows:—"The short answer is that a Court of equity cannot say that it is equitable to compel a person to pay any moneys in respect of a transaction which, as against that person, the Legislature has declared to be void." Counsel for the appellant refers me to Balak Ram v. Dadu (4). That, however, is a case where the vendee was deceived by the plaintiff as to his age and so section 41 of the Specific Relief Act was applied. In the present case, however, the finding is that the mortgagee was not really deceived. And in Vaikuntarama Pillai v. Athimoolam Oheltiar (5) it is pointed out that the only ground, on which equity interferes to make a person of full age return money which he obtained during minority, is fraud. Had the defendant been deceived as to the plaintiff's age and acted bona fide, that no doubt would have amounted to fraud and the plaintiff would have to return the money, but as it is found that the defendant was not really deceived, he cannot get back his money.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 9th October 1916, reversing that of the Munsif First Class, Kangra, dated the 19th November 1915.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to a suit by one Lehnun for a declaration against a sale of land by Photo, the plaintiff and the vendor being the grandsons of one Sepahi. The Court of first instance decreed the suit which was, however, dismissed on appeal by the District Judge who held that the property in suit was not shown to be ancestral.

This was, of course, a finding of fact, but the argument of the District Judge was not very clear and it was alleged in the grounds of appeal that he had overlooked an important entry in the Record of Rights of the Settlement of 1868.

We have now examined that and the other documents on the record for ourselves. It appears that the village of Jasaur was founded by Nikku, (the father of Sepahi) who acquired an area of 6 ghumaos only. The village is in the Kangra District and that, apparently, was the area which he broke up. He was succeeded by two sons, Sepahi and Gigu, whose shares in his acquisition would, therefore, be three ghumaos each. The same Settlement Record shows that Gigu had in 1868 already acquired another 2 ghumaos and the holdings of the descendants of Sepahi have since been very greatly increased.

The area now in suit is 14 kanals, 13 marlas. The vendor obtained it as the heir of Musammatt Nagru, the widow of his first cousin, Jangi, whose mortgage he redeemed. If Jangi had been in possession only of land derived from Sepahi his total area should not have exceeded three-quarters of a ghumaon, but in the Settlement Record of 1891-92 he was shown as holding over 2 ghumaos. Similarly, Photo, whose holding in that year should also have been three-quarters of a ghumaon, was in possession of more than 3 ghumaos; and Gurditta, the great grandson of Gigu, who should have held only 5 ghumaos, even if Gigu's own acquisition is included, was holding over 10½ ghumaos.

It is no doubt a fact that some of the property in suit was ancestral but it is equally certain that all of it is not, and it is impossible to determine which of it is. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the District Judge was right in holding that the principle laid down in Atar Singh v. Thakur Singh (1) was applicable to the circumstances of this case and that the suit was properly dismissed.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Trees, property in—"Timber," meaning of—Bamboo trees, whether timber,

In the absence of a custom to the contrary, the property in trees or in that which is likely to become timber, is in the landlord, and the property in bushes in the tenant, [p. 521, col. 2.]

By the term "timber" is meant properly such trees only as are fit to be used in building and repairing houses. Bamboo trees fall, therefore, under the category of timber. [p. 521, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 22nd June 1918.

Messrs. Purnendu Narayan Sinha and Murari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—These appeals raise a question between landlord and tenants as to the right to the compensation for trees on land acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act. The Collector awarded half the value of the trees to the tenant and half to the landlord. The District Judge held that the tenant was entitled to the whole. The landlord appeals. The trees are 10 sisoo trees, 1 barhar, 1 mango and 29 bamboos.

The law is well known. "The property in trees or in that which is likely to become timber, is in the landlord, and the property in bushes in the tenant" (Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, 19th Edition, page 736). The District Judge seems to hold that, because the landlord set up a custom by which he is entitled to only half of the value of the trees and failed to prove it, the tenant is entitled to the whole although he also has failed to prove such a custom. This decision is wrong. If no custom is proved, the case must be governed by the general law modified by any admission which the landlord makes in favour of the tenant. The result is that the landlord is entitled to half the compensation for timber and the tenant to half.

A question is then raised as to bamboos. The tenants claim the entire compensation for bamboos on the ground that they are not timber. "By the term 'timber' is meant properly such trees only as are fit to be used in building and repairing houses. Many descriptions of trees which are not generally considered as timber are so in some places by custom of the country, being there used for the purposes of building"

MEHR CHAND v. LABHU RAM.

(Ibid page, 735). Applying this test it seems to me that whatever the botanical classification of bamboos may be, they are timber inasmuch as they are used, by the custom of the country, in the building and repairing of houses; and must, therefore, fall under the present rule.

It was faintly suggested that the respondents, as tenants at fixed rates, are entitled to the whole compensation. It is unnecessary in this case to determine what the rights of tenants at fixed rates are because there is no evidence that the respondents have that status.

Finally, it was urged that the tenants are entitled to compensation by reason of their loss of the fruits of the trees. This is not a matter between the parties to these appeals.

The result is that the appeals are decreed with costs and the decree of the District Judge is modified by awarding the landlord half of the compensation for the trees (including bamboos).

DAS, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102, O XXI, s. 23—Remand, order of, whether final order—Appeal to Privy Council, whether permissible.

An order of remand is ordinarily not capable of being the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council, being interlocutory and not final within the meaning of section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code. It can only be regarded as a final order and capable of appeal, if it has the effect of finally deciding some cardinal point in the suit. [p. 523, col. 2.]

An order of remand which merely decides that a suit is maintainable in the form in which it is brought, is not a final order. [p. 523, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 110, Civil Procedure Code, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment, passed on 19th January 1920, by Broadway and Martineau, JJ., in Civil Appeal No. 1007 of 1915, reported as 55 Ind. Cas. 32.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for Mehr Chand, and Lala Balwant Rai, for the other Petitioners.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for Labhu Ram, Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application under section 110, Civil Procedure Code, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The suit was instituted by Lala Labhu Ram asking for a declaration to the effect that he was the sole owner of the property in suit free from incumbrances and was in possession thereof as such owner. The present petitioner, Lala Ram Saran Das, objected that the suit was not maintainable as framed. He alleged that he himself was in possession of the whole property and contended that Lala Labhu Ram should bring a suit for possession and not for a mere declaration. The Trial Court decided that Lala Ram Saran Das's contention should prevail and dismissed the suit.

Against this order of dismissal Lala Labhu Ram preferred an appeal to this Court which was decided on the 19th of January 1920. It was held that, inasmuch as Lala Labhu Ram had been in possession of some portion of the property and was a co sharer with one Nathu in those portions of the property which were in Nathu's actual possession, the suit as framed was competent. The case was accordingly remanded to the Trial Court for decision on the merits and of the other issues arising on the pleadings.

Lala Ram Saran Das now asks for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against this order of remand. On behalf of Lala Labhu Ram Mr. Moti Sagar contended that, inasmuch as the order sought to be appealed against was not a final order within the meaning of section 109 (a), leave should not be granted. He also contended that the case was not one such as contemplated by section 109 (c).

Mr. Sheo Narain, for Lala Ram Saran Das, while admitting that an order of remand by itself was not a final order such as is contemplated by section 109 (a), contended that, inasmuch as it has been held by this Court that Lala Labha Ram was in possession of a part of the property, the case was one in which a certificate should be granted. He also contended that the case fell within the purview of section 109 (c). He drew our attention to Saiyid Muzhar Hossein v. Musammât Bodha Bibi (1), Dirgpal Singh v. Pahladi Lal (2) and Hyder Mehdi v. Badshah Khanam (3).

The decision in Saiyid Muzhar Hossein v. Musammât Bodha Bibi (1) does not appear to assist Mr. Sheo Narain, for there it was held that, although the order sought to be appealed against purported to be made under section 562, Civil Procedure Code, that section was not applicable and that section 565 appeared to be more appropriate. In that case—the Appellate Court had reversed once for all, the decision of the first Court upon an issue as to the making and validity of the Will which issue governed the whole case. In the present case the decision on the question of the competency of the suit as framed by no means disposes of the whole suit.

In Dirgpal Singh v. Pahladi Lal (2) leave to appeal was granted under section 109 (c), it being distinctly held that the order, as an order of remand, was not a final order entitling an appeal to His Majesty in Council. That case, too, is clearly distinguishable.

In the case reported as Hyder Mehdi v. Badshah Khanam (3) it was held that a decision on a plea of limitation should be regarded as a final order within the meaning, of section 109, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as that decision went to the foundation of the case.

In our opinion an order of remand is not ordinarily capable of being the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council, being interlocutory and not final within the meaning of the section. It could only be regarded as a final order and capable of appeal if it had the effect of finally deciding some cardinal point in the suit.

(3) 49 Ind. Cas. 520; 21 O. C. 336; 6 O. L. J. 70.

In this view we are supported by Rai Radha Kishan v. Collector of Jaunpur (4), as well as by the authorities cited by Mr. Sheo Narain.

The order in the present case decides nothing which can be regarded as a cardinal point in the suit. As an order of remand pure and simple, it is of an interlocutory nature and, therefore, not liable to appeal. So far as the applicability of clause (c) of section 109, Civil Procedure Code, is concerned, we are unable to see any ground for granting a certificate, and we, therefore, dismiss this petition with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council

presented on behalf of the defendant. The plaintiff sued upon a mortgage-bond dated the 24th July 1902 claiming principal and interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per month. At the date when the plaint was filed the total amount of principal and interest came to Rs. 8,622. That was on the 29th July 1915. Judgment was delivered on the 7th September 1917 and, had the plaintiff succeeded in the suit, the amount then found due at the date of the decree would have been over Rs. 10,000. The claim, however, failed, whereupon the plaintiff appealed to the High Court and his appeal was successful and the High Court awarded him a sum of over Rs. 10,000 for principal and interest up to the date of the decree of the High Court. The only question is whether, in the circumstances stated, the case falls within section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was not Rs. 10,000 or upwards. I am unable to accept this view. I think that the proper construction to be placed upon that section, in so far as it relates to the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit, must be taken to be the amount or value which the plaintiff either obtained or, had he been successful, would have obtained in his suit at the date when the decree was passed. That principle was adopted by this Court in the case of Mahabir Prasad Singh v. Anup Narain Singh (1). I see no reason to depart from the principle there laid down which followed the practice in the Calcutta High Court, and would order that the usual certificate issue in this case.

The minor sons of a Hindu father are bound by a bona fide compromise of a doubtful claim entered into by their father as manager of the joint family. [p. 525, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 27th November 1916.

Mr. Oertel, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. L. Puri and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The pedigree table of the parties is as follows:—

The facts are fully given in the judgment of the lower Court and need not be repeated at length. The plaintiffs sued for a declaration to the effect that the deed of compromise of the 28th July 1913 entered into between the defendants in the case of Har Narain v. Kanshi Ram and Dwarka Das was an alienation of the land of a joint Hindu family without consideration and necessity and was null and void as against him. The lower Court has found that the plaintiff was born in March 1914, some eight months after the compromise was entered into, and that the compromise is binding on the plaintiff as it was entered into bona fide for the benefit of the joint family. It, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

We do not propose in this judgment to deal with all the arguments which have been addressed to us, because we consider that the plaintiff's case has rightly been dismissed on the ground that the minor was bound by the agreement entered into in good faith by Kanshi Ram and Dwarka Das for the benefit of the joint family. With reference to the dispute between Har Narain on one side and Kanshi Ram and Dwarka Das on the other, in the case compromised on the 28th of July 1913 as regards Hukam Chand's property which he had willed away in favour of Har Narain, the Court below has found that Hukam Chand did execute a Will in favour of Har Narain, but that he subsequently executed another Will in favour of Kanshi Ram and Dwarka Das which, however, he revoked, thereby reviving the original Will in favour of Har Narain. It also found that the second Will in favour of Kanshi Ram and Dwarka Das had not been revived by a post-card said to have been written by Hukam Chand on the 5th of January 1912. Now, we do not see any necessity for deciding whether Har Narain's suit, which he brought on the 29th of August 1912, would have succeeded on the merits or not. It is clear that there was a good deal to be said on both sides, and when the compromise was entered into in July 1913 we have no doubt that Kanshi Ram and Dwarka Das entered into it in the bona fide belief that they were acting for the benefit of the family.

In the case reported as Venkatagiri Nayani Varu v. Subbaroyalu Nayani (1) it was held that the minor sons of a Hindu father are bound by a bona fide compromise of a doubtful claim entered into by their father as manager of the joint family. The case reported as Bosherhar Nath v. Devi Pershad (2), cited by the lower Court, is also in point. Following these authorities, we hold that the plaintiff is bound by the compromise and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

The execution of a fresh mortgage, in renewal of an original mortgage, has not the effect of extinguishing that mortgage, but the money due under it is a part of the consideration for the second mortgage, and the presumption is that the rights of the parties under the first mortgage continue under the second mortgage. [p. 525, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 242 of 1916, decided on the 20th August 1917.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. Bose and G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has occupied considerable time in argument, but the result may be stated briefly.

The lower Appellate Court has not gone into the merits of the case generally but has dismissed the plaintiff's suit solely on the ground that the plaintiff cannot fall back on his prior mortgage of 1903. I am unable to follow the reasoning by which the lower Courts have held that the parties to the mortgage of 1907 did not intend to keep alive the mortgage of 1903. The case cited by the Court of first instance is a case in which the first mortgage was paid off not by the original mortgagor but by some body else. The learned Counsel for the respondent has not been able to show me any case in which, where a mortgagor has executed a fresh mortgage in renewal of the original mortgage, it has been held that the intention of the parties was to extinguish the original mortgage. It is a fact that a fresh mortgage gives the mortgagee better remedies than he had under the first mortgage, but the money due under the first mortgage was a part of the consideration for the second mortgage, and the presumption appears to be not that the parties intended to do away with the first mortgage but, on the contrary, intended that the rights under the first mortgage should continue under the second mortgage. Mere renewal of a mortgage cannot operate to extinguish it.

The lower Appellate Court has also refused to allow the amendments of the plaint asked for in the 6th and 7th grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. This request was to amend the plaint so as to make an alternative prayer for possession irrespective of whether there was any redemption necessary or not. It appears to me that this request for amendment was perfectly unnecessary. The plaintiff in his plaint based his right to possession of the lands in suit on the fact that he had foreclosed the original mortgagor. He also claimed to redeem any subsisting mortgage that there might be. A right to redemption does not in every case cover a right to possession, and in this case the prayer of the plaintiff must be taken to be for possession subject to the liability to redeem the defendant, if the defendant has any claim to be redeemed.

It appears to me that the plaintiff's claim has been dismissed on purely artificial grounds and that the rights of the parties have not been gone into or ascertained by the lower Appellate Court. With reference to these remarks, the appeal is remanded for further trial. A refund certificate will issue. Other costs will be costs in the suit. It is desirable, in order to avoid its possibility of a further remand, that the lower Appellate Court should go fully into the case, and not dispose of it only on some preliminary point.

Among Harrals of the Shahpur District male proprietors have an unrestricted power of alienation.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Shahpur, at Sargodha, dated the 23rd May 1916, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Shahpur, at Sargodha, dated the 17th March 1916.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhny, for Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Devi Doyal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case in which Kado, a sonless Haral of the village of Gallapur in the Shahpur District, sold some land to a son of one of his brothers. The said son was the husband of the vendor's daughter. The alienation has been contested by the sons of another brother of the alienor, and two brothers of the alienee are pro forma defendants.

The suit has been dismissed by both the Courts below on the ground that the alienor had an unrestricted right of alienation, but the District Judge granted a certificate on which the present second appeal was admitted.

Counsel for the appellants relies largely on certain judgments delivered by Mr. Ellis as District Judge of Shahpur in 1914. From these it would appear that, in his view, a distinction should be drawn between Rajput and other Mohammedan tribes as regards their right of alienation, that of the Rajputs being restricted and that of the other tribes being unrestricted. Counsel for the appellants is, however, unable to tell us where the authority for this distinction is to be found, and it is not derivable from Wilson's Code of Tribal Custom in the Shahpur District which was published in 1896 and was not revised at the last Settlement, because it was recognised that the compilation had been very carefully prepared.

Harrals may be taken to be a Rajput tribe and they are so described in Ibbetson's Census Report and in Rose's Glossary of Punjab Tribes, though in Jhang there is a tradition which makes them a branch of the Ahir tribe and in Montgomery they are classed as Jats. They are, nevertheless, included by Wilson among those tribes which in his preface he describes as the "Miscellaneous Musalman Tribes" of the district, viz., all the Musalman tribes except Awans, Gondals, Ranjhas and Khokhars.

ATTAR SINGH v. GHULAM MUHAMMAD.

Among them, moreover, are other tribes such as Janjuhas and Tiwanas, whose Rajput origin is not questioned.

According to the Code of Tribal Custom, a proprietor of any of the Miscellaneous Musalman tribes can make a gift of immoveable property even to a non relative. This is a very strong piece of evidence, vide Beg v. Allah Ditta (1), in support of a custom of unrestricted alienation and there are a number of other facts which point in the same direction. The village is bhaya-chara and was founded by persons belonging to no less than five different tribes. Since that time, persons belonging to numerous other tribes have acquired land in the village, the composition of which is now very heterogenous and, though there have been numerous previous alienations, none of them have ever been contested.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 54—Attachment—Formalities, failure to comply with, effect of—Appeal, second—Intent to defraud or defeat creditors, whether question of fact.

The omission to affix a copy of an attachment order on a conspicuous part of the Court-house or to post it in the office of the Collector or to affix on some conspicuous part of the land concerned, is a fatal defect which invalidates an attachment of land. [P. 527, col. 4; p. 534, col. 1.]

A finding that a transfer was not intended to defraud or delay the creditors of the transferor is a finding of fact. [p. 528, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 13th February 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Jhelum, dated the 7th April 1919.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. D. Bhalla, for Mr. Obbard, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present appeal arises Attar Singh, plaintiff-appellant, sued for a declaration to the effect that 31 kanals of land sold by Musammat Mahtab Bibi to Ghulam Muhammad and Ghulam Mahay-ud-din on the 20th November 1916 was liable to attachment in execution of his decree dated the 23rd December 1915. A prohibitory order for attachment of 16 kanals out of the land sold issued from the executing Court and there is evidence to show that it was served on Musammat Mahtab Bibi on the 15th May 1916. The learned District Judge has, however, held that there was no valid attachment under Order XXI, rule 54, Civil Procedure Code, and also that it is not established that the transfer to Ghulam Muhammad and Ghulam Mahay-ud-din was made with intent to defraud the plaintiff or to defeat or delay his claims within the meaning of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaintiff has now filed a second appeal in this Court.

The report of the process-server on the prohibitory order issued to Musammat Mahtab Bibi is to the effect that she refused to affix her thumb-impression upon the order and that, therefore, a copy of it was affixed on the door of her house. There is no report showing that the formalities mentioned in rule 54 (2) of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, were complied with, and the District Judge found, as a fact, that there was no publication of the order by beat of drum, nor was there any copy affixed on the land or the Court house, or sent to the office of the Collector. This is a question of fact which cannot be controverted in second appeal. The learned District Judge has referred to Nur Ahmal v. Prof. Ali (1) and Ibra Singh v. Junda (2) in which it was held that the omission to affix a copy of the attachment order on a conspicuous part of the Court-house, or to post it in the office of the Collector or to affix it on some conspicuous part of the land attached was a fatal defect which invalidates an attachment of land. Dr. Nand Lal, on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, admits that he has no authority to the contrary. I, therefore, agree with the learned District Judge that there was no valid attachment of the property prior to the sale to Ghulam Muhammad and Ghulam Muhy-ud-din.

The finding of the learned District Judge that there was no intention to defraud, defeat or delay the plaintiff's claim is a finding of fact. Dr. Nand Lal contends that the District Judge omitted to consider an important piece of evidence, viz., that Ghulam Muhammad, one of the vendees, attested the service of notice on Musammam Mahtab Bibi. This fact is not specifically referred to in the judgment of the learned District Judge though it is referred to in the judgment of the Trial Court, but I see no reason to suppose that he did not read that judgment and did not consider the evidence. It is unnecessary for an Appellate Court to refer to each and every piece of evidence on the record nor do Counsel when arguing a case before the Court always refer to the whole of the evidence. I see no reason to suppose that the District Judge has overlooked any of the evidence and I, therefore, cannot consider that his finding on this question is vitiated.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 164 of 1919.

February 11, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das and

versus

DWARKA NATH SADHU AND OTHERS
RESPONDENTS.

Procedure—Issues, trial of, piece-meal—Interlocutory order—Revision—High Court, power of, to interfere.

As the trial of a case piecemeal is a serious evil to the parties and might involve heavy costs in second appeal or any other hearing, the High Court will interfere with an interlocutory order directing the trial of certain of the issues in a case before proceeding to the trial of the others.

Petition for revision against the order of the Sub Judge, Jamtare, District Santhal Pargannas.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs sued to obtain a decree declaratory of their title to the sub-soil of certain land and for a declaration that the defendants had no right to the minerals therein and for an injunction. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title and further pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. The Court framed 16 issues, both on facts and law. The plaintiffs produced evidence in respect of the issues the onus of which was upon them, and reserved their evidence on the remaining issues; the defendants then produced their evidence on the conclusion of which they asked the Court to try certain issues first and to postpone the determination of the remainder, to this course the plaintiffs objected. The Court overruled the objection and, on the ground that the issues which the defendants wanted to be tried first, were issues of law, fixed a date for the hearing of arguments on both sides, allowing the plaintiffs an opportunity of adducing rebutting evidence on these issues. Against this order the plaintiffs moved the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, for an order directing the Court to try all the issues together according to law.

Messrs. Lalmohan Ganguly, Purnendu Narain Sinha, and Netaji Chandra Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Nares Chandra Sinha and Sisir Kumar Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—I am of opinion that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge proposing to decide Issues Nos. 2, 3 and 12 first is not a proper order and ought to be set aside.

A question of this nature came up before the Calcutta High Court in the case of Yatindra Nath Choudhury v. Hari Charan Choudhury (1). It was pointed out by his Lordship Mr. Justice Mookerji that it was desirable that the Subordinate Courts should decide all the issues in a case, otherwise there was a serious evil to the parties litigants as it might involve heavy costs in second appeals or any other hearing. We set Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 23—Nuisance, whether continuing wrong.

The causing of a nuisance is a continuous wrong independent of contract and a fresh period of limitation begins to run at every moment during which the wrong continues.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 24th March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Delhi, dated the 20th August 1919.

Sheikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. H. Oertel, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge has remanded this case under Order XLI, rule 23, and the first ground of complaint is that this was illegal, as he did not accept the appeal on a preliminary point.

The remand should, of course, have been under Order XLI, rule 25, but the dispute can here, I think, be decided on the merits.

The plaintiffs asked for an injunction against defendants on the ground that for the past four years they had discharged latrine water and faecal matter through a hole in their wall and that their action constituted a public nuisance, from which the plaintiffs, their next door neighbours suffered special damage.

GHANSHYAM CHAUDHURY v. BASDEB JHA.

The District Judge has found that the drain in question does constitute a serious nuisance, which prejudices the public generally and most especially the plaintiffs, because they, by the accident of their domicile, are continuously exposed to the ill-effects of the nuisance.

But the District Judge has remanded the case in order to afford defendants an opportunity of proving that by prescription they have acquired a right to commit this nuisance without let or hindrance. The defendants appeal and urge that the suit should have been dismissed on the findings and the plaintiffs in cross-objections urge that the suit should have been decreed. In my opinion the cross-objections should succeed. Here we have no question of easement, the right to use the drain is not in dispute, but the right to use it in such a way as to cause a nuisance is challenged.

Now, the causing of a nuisance is a continuous wrong independent of contract and a fresh period of limitation begins to run at every moment during which the wrong continues. (Section 23, Limitation Act). Consequently, the plaintiffs are not debarred from the relief claimed, even if the defendants have been poisoning the circumambient for the past 100 years.

I, therefore, decree the relief prayed by plaintiffs with costs throughout. This appeal is dismissed and the cross-objections are accepted.

GHANSHYAM CHAUDURY v. BASDEV JHA.

An execution sale which is bad on the ground of irregularity and fraud and is liable to be set aside under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code is voidable and not void, and an application to set aside such a sale must be made within thirty days of the sale. [p. 530, col. 2.]

On the other hand, an execution sale which takes place in contravention of the provisions of section 158 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is void, and a suit for a declaration that such a sale is illegal and inoperative is governed by Article 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 530, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Durrhanga, dated the 5th August 1919, reversing a decision of the Officiating Munsif, Samastipur, First Court, dated the 28th March 1919.

Mr. P. N. Sinha, for Messrs. Fakhruddin, and Shiveshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Baikuntha Nath Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the appellants for setting aside an ex parte rent-decree obtained by some of the respondents against them, and the sale held in Execution Case No. 228 of 1917 in pursuance of the rent-decree. The plaintiffs alleged in the 16th paragraph of the plaint: "That no notice under section 158 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act having been issued on the said execution case, the sale is illegal and inoperative." In the 14th paragraph of the plaint, the plaintiffs stated as follows:—"That although the plaintiffs are all along in possession of the disputed property, yet the auction-sale, fraudulent delivery of possession and the resistance on the part of defendants first party are calculated to prejudice the plaintiffs' interest."

The Court of first instance dealt elaborately with all the evidence that was adduced in the case and came to the conclusion that the decree was a good decree, but that the sale held in execution of the decree was void inasmuch as the Court before proceeding to sell the holding failed to give notice of the application for execution to the other co-sharers. According to the Court of first instance there was a clear contravention of the provision of section 158 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the sale was accordingly void.

There was an appeal to the lower Appellate Court. Before that Court it was not disputed that the Court did not give notice of the application for execution to the other co-sharers as it was bound to give under section 158 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was also conceded that the decree was a good decree. The only question which the lower Appellate Court had to decide was, whether the Munsif was right in declaring that the sale held in pursuance of the rent decree was void and inoperative in law. The learned Judge took the view that the suit, in the circumstances of the case, must be regarded as an application under Order XXI, rule 90, and as the suit regarded as an application was not brought within 30 days, he allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

In my opinion the view taken by the learned Judge is wholly wrong and cannot be supported. Order XXI, rule 90, applies where an application is made to set aside a sale on the ground of irregularity or fraud. The plaintiffs did allege that the sale ought to be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud, but that case entirely failed and the Court below was not in the slightest degree embarrassed by that portion of the case made by the plaintiffs. There was the other portion of the plaintiff's case, namely, that the sale was void and inoperative, inasmuch as the Court did not give notice of the application for execution to the other co-sharers. That portion of the suit could not possibly be regarded as coming within the scope of Order XXI, rule 90. Where the sale has to be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud, the sale is voidable; but where the sale has taken place in contravention of the provision of section 158 (b), the sale is not voidable but void. This distinction has not been recognized by the learned Judge in the Court below.

It has been argued before me by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondents that this is entirely a new case. He draws my attention to the argument advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs in the Court below that the case fell within Article 181 of the Limitation Act. It may be that the question was not properly argued in the Court below; but I have to see whether, on the allegations made in the plaint and on the issues framed by the Court of first instance, the lower Appellate Court was right in dismissing the plaintiffs' action. The plaintiffs undoubtedly alleged in the 16th paragraph of the plaint that the sale was illegal and inoperative inasmuch as the Court did not give notice of the application for execution to the other co-sharers. They further alleged that the steps taken by the purchasers of the property were calculated to prejudice their interest. Although the plaintiffs did not ask for a declaration that the sale was bad and inoperative in law, the Court was, on the allegations made in the plaint, entitled to pass a declaratory decree under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. There was every necessary allegation in the plaint to entitle the Court to pass a declaratory decree. The plaintiffs were undoubtedly entitled to a right as to the property if the case made in the plaint was true and the defendants were undoubtedly interested to deny the title of the plaintiffs to the property. Therefore, if the allegations made in the plaint were well founded, the Court was entitled to make a declaration that the sale was void and inoperative in law and was not binding on the plaintiffs. In my view, if the necessary allegations are there in the plaint and if those allegations are substantiated, the Court may give the appropriate relief although the plaintiffs have not asked for that relief. The question of appropriate relief is a question entirely for the Court, and it is wholly irrelevant that the plaintiffs have not asked for it in the plaint. In any case, the Court of first instance framed an issue on the allegations made in the 16th paragraph of the plaint and took evidence and decided that issue in favour of the plaintiffs. There is no question of prejudice at all, inasmuch as all the parties knew what the Court had to decide on that issue. The case went to the lower Appellate Court and it could not be urged that the defendants were taken by surprise. In my view, the lower Appellate Court erred in thinking that the case fell within the purview of Order XXI, rule 90 of the Code. In my view, the suit was a suit of a declaratory nature and must be regarded on the allegations made in the plaint as a suit under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. That being so, 6 years' rule applies under Article 120 of the Limitation Act, and the plaintiffs' suit, was undoubtedly within time.

I must allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance.

As the point which has been argued before me by Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha on behalf of the appellants was not put forward before the lower Appellate Court, I must refuse to give them any costs of this appeal.

The plaintiffs are entitled to the costs incurred in the Court of first instance, but they must pay the costs to the defendants incurred in the lower Appellate Court

Appeal allowed.

Common land—Co-owners—Exclusive user by one co-owner—Rights of other co-owners.

When a joint owner of land, without obtaining the permission of his co-owners, builds upon such land, such buildings should not be demolished at the instance of such co-owners unless they prove that the action of their joint owner in building upon joint land has caused them a material and substantial injury such as cannot be remedied by partition of the joint land. [p. 533, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Shadi Lal, Chief Justice, dated the 7th June 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 2220 of 1919 :—

"This appeal and the Cross-Appeal No. 2374 of 1919 arise out of one action, and may conveniently be disposed of by one judgment. The dispute between the parties relates to a plot of land about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  bighas in area situate within the abadi of the village of Danewala in the Ferozepore District. The defendants Nos. 1 to 14, who are occupancy tenants in the village and carpenters by profession, have occupied this plot of land, and the plaintiffs, who are proprietors of the village to the extent of  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd, seek to evict them and want a mandatory injunction directing them to demolish the buildings constructed thereon. The defendants Nos. 18 to 21 also own  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the village, and the learned District Judge finds upon the evidence adduced by the parties that these defendants 'did in fact settle defendants Nos. 1 to 14 on this land'. He, however, holds that the area of the land occupied is too large; and has consequently marked off two plots on the plan prepared by the local commissioner, shown them as A. B. C. D. and E. F. G. H. respectively, and allotted them to defendants Nos. 1 to 14 and directed them to vacate the remaining area in their possession. It is to be observed that these two smaller areas include 'all the kothas or sheds on the area in dispute' and amount to  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the total area occupied by them.

"Both the parties have appealed to this Court, and after hearing the learned Counsel in support of their respective contentions I am not prepared to dissent from the conclusion reached by the learned District Judge. It is to be observed that the decision was practically accepted by both the parties as a reasonable compromise; and that the only point on which the compromise failed, was that the plaintiffs insisted that the area taken out of the possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 14 should be considered as common land belonging to all the village proprietors except defendants Nos. 18 to 21. This contention, if acceded to, would lead to a partition of a portion of the common land, in support of which no authority has been cited. It sometimes happens that a co-sharer constructs a building on a portion of the common land or settles a non proprietor thereon, but that act does not justify a partial partition of the common property.

"So far as the appeal preferred by the plaintiffs is concerned, it must fail on the short ground that they have not shown that the area allotted by the District Judge to defendants Nos. 1 to 14 as the representatives of the consenting proprietors exceeds the share to be allotted to the latter when a partition takes place. Plaintiffs have failed to show that they have suffered such material and substantial injury as would not be remedied on a partition of the joint land, and, in the circumstances, I am not prepared to interfere with the discretion of the District Judge in refusing to grant a mandatory injunction for the demolition of the buildings.

"Coming now to the appeal preferred by the occupancy tenants, I am of opinion that the learned Judge has done substantial justice. The area from which they are evicted, contains no kothas or sheds, and it is only fair that they should not occupy more than the share belonging to the consenting proprietors. The total area occupied by them is undoubtedly large, and considering that on account of its proximity to a tank it is required by other proprietors of the village, I consider that the representatives of  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the proprietary body should not be allowed to appropriate the whole of this area.

"For the aforesaid reasons I dismiss both the appeals and direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court."

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Sardar Sewa Ram Singh, for the Appellants.

Sardar Kharak Singh, for Narain Singh, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of the learned Chief Justice sitting singly. The suit, out of which the appeal arises related to a plot of land measuring about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  bighas forming part of a much larger area of common land belonging to the proprietors of the village Danewala. The plaintiffs own a  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in the village in which the common land is situate. Accordingly, they have a  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in the common land also. The defendants Nos. 18 to 21 also have a similar share in the village and in the common land. These defendants dealt with a portion of the land exclusively by settling the defendants Nos. 1 to 14 on it. The latter constructed certain buildings apparently without the consent of the other co-sharers, but without any interference on their part. Thereupon, the plaintiffs instituted a suit for a mandatory injunction praying for the demolition of the buildings and the restoration of the common land to its original condition. The Trial Court decreed the suit, granted a mandatory injunction and directed the defendants to remove the materials. The District Judge in appeal modified the decree of the first Court by dismissing the suit relating to a portion of the land in dispute

and maintained the decree relating to a portion of it. He marked off on the plan two areas as A. B. C. D. and E. F. G. H. on which the buildings stood, and allowed the defendants Nos. 1 to 14 to remain in possession thereof and ordered them to give up the remaining portion as to which the decree of the first Court was maintained. Both the parties were dissatisfied with the decree of the District Judge and two appeals were preferred to this Court: one by the plaintiffs and other by defendants Nos. 1 to 14. Both of them have been dismissed by the learned Chief Justice and the plaintiffs have preferred this appeal under the Letters Patent. The following material findings of fact have been recorded by the learned District Judge, namely, (1) that the defendants Nos. 1 to 14 were settled on the land by the defendants Nos. 18 to 21; (2) that the plaintiffs had not shown that the building had caused such material and substantial injury as could not be remedied in a suit for partition of the joint land. The learned Chief Justice held that, on the facts found, he was not prepared to interfere with the discretion exercised by the learned District Judge in refusing to grant a mandatory injunction to the plaintiffs directing the demolition of the buildings. As a pure question of legal right the plaintiffs no doubt would be entitled to enforce their claim, but the relief claimed is an equitable relief and the Courts in equity are not bound to grant it in all circumstances. This rule of equity has been adopted and recognised in many reported cases in this country. In the case of Paras Ram v. Sherjit (1) Mr. Justice Mahmood of the Allahabad High Court laid down the following rule:—

"That when a joint owner of land without obtaining the permission of his co-owners builds upon such lands such buildings should not be demolished at the instance of such co-owners unless they prove that the action of their joint owner in building upon joint land has caused them a material and substantial injury such as cannot be remedied by partition of the joint land."

In the case of Joy Ohunder Rukhit

v. Bipro Ohurn Rukhit (2) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that even in cases where joint land had been dealt with in an exclusive manner by one joint owner in spite of the protest of his co-owners, before a Court will make an order directing that a portion of the joint property alleged to have been dealt with by one of the co-owners without the consent of the others, should be restored to its former condition, a plaintiff must show that he has sustained by the act he complains of, some injury which materially affects his position. In the present case the defendants Nos. 18 to 21, as observed before, have exclusively dealt with a portion of the joint land by settling thereon the defendants Nos. 1 to 14 as tenants. According to the finding of the learned District Judge, the area occupied by the building does not exceed the  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of the defendants Nos. 18 to 21 in the land, and the plaintiffs have not shown that they have suffered such material and substantial injury as cannot be remedied in a suit for partition of joint land. The rule of equity referred to above is also stated in explanation 3 under paragraph 225 of Rattigan's Customary Law, where, among other cases, Paras Ram v. Sherjit (1) is specifically mentioned.

In our opinion, the view taken by the learned Chief Justice is fully supported by authorities and this appeal must be dismissed. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

TEJ BALI SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Impartible estate, nature of—Succession to such estates, rule of.

The fact that a Raj is impartible does not make it separate or self-acquired property. It may in fact be self-acquired or it may be family property of a joint undivided family. If the latter, succession will be regulated according to the rule which obtains in an undivided joint family, so far as the selection of the person entitled to succeed is concerned, i. e., he will be designated by survivorship, although then, according to the custom of impartibility, he will hold the Raj without the others sharing it. [p. 540, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court (Richards, C. J., and Rafique, J.), dated May 30th, 1916, reported as 38 Ind. Cas. 849, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur.

FACTS of the case, so far as left unstated in their Lordships' judgment will be found in the report of the earlier proceedings at 38 All. 590 ; 38 Ind. Cas. 849.

On this appeal.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O. (with him Mr. Dube), for the Appellants, submitted that though the property in suit may originally have been an impartible Raj, yet as the effect of a re grant it became the self-acquired property of Ran Bahadur Shah and was no longer impartible. If, however, it were held to be impartible, the High Court's decision in favour of plaintiff was based on the view that there was co-parcenary in an impartible estate, and the Board had decided that there was not.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—They say that if the property be joint and impartible, Tejbali as representing the eldest son is solely entitled.]

I say that unless it is both joint and impartible we succeed, and that its being impartible is inconsistent with its being joint.

In an impartible estate there is no co-parcenary and no taking by survivorship : and the rule of succession is that of the ordinary Hindu Law except as modified by custom.

The Board has held that there is no co-parcenary in an impartible estate :

Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pittapur [The Second Pittapur case] (1) and cases there cited. Since then the question of a claim by survivorship has been before the Board in the Bettiah Raj case [Rajkumar Bishen Prakash v. Maharani Janaki Kuer, judgment delivered on February 13th, 1920, unreported] and it was distinctly laid down that any person who claims to succeed to an impartible Raj by right of survivorship must fail. These two decisions of the Board lay down that the devolution of an impartible Raj cannot be determined by survivorship. The correct view is that, except in so far as varied by custom, the succession to an impartible Raj follows the rule of succession to partible property : the ordinary rule is that the eldest member and not the member of the eldest branch succeeds.

In the Tipperah case [Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beerchunder Thakur] (2) the Board laid down that there was no co-parcenary and no survivorship in an impartible Raj.

[SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—That was under the Dayabhaga, where you trace to the last male holder.]

The Board say the rules of survivorship cannot apply, so it must be the rule of inheritance, whatever that may be, whether Dayabhaga or Mitakshara.

The rule of inheritance to an impartible estate is laid down in Parbati Kunwar v. Chandarpal Kunwar (3). The ordinary law is that on the death of the holder of an impartible Raj the widow takes ; that on her death the decree excludes the line.

Respondent has alleged a custom of succession entitling him to succeed. There is no general rule of lineal primogeniture governing succession to impartible estates.

Rajah Rup Singh v. Rani Baisni (4).

There is no sufficient evidence of any such custom here. The Subordinate Judge has a finding, though far from a clear one, in was argued by Mayne, and it was never contended that Sartaj Kuari's case (18) did not go the length I have stated, but only that it did not apply to Madras.

In Kachi Kaliyana v. Rengappa [The Udayarpalayan case] (5) Sartaj Kuari's case (18) case was not cited to the Board, and it was decided on the assumption that the property was co-parcenary property.

In Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Kajah of Pittapur (1) a strong Board held that they were bound by previous decisions that there can be no co-parcenary in an impartible estate. How can a man take by survivorship when he is not a co-parcener?

In the Bettiah Raj case the precise point here was decided, viz., that in an impartible estate there cannot be succession by survivorship. The Judges were Viscount Cave, Lord Moulton and Mr. Ameer Ali.

When we have a series of decisions of the Board from Sartaj Kuari downwards, it would be lamentable that we should go behind the decisions to examine the reasons. At present the impartible Raj has all the incidents of separate property, and the rule of inheritance should apply: in the first place, any particular custom of the family: failing that, the ordinary law. Respondent here has not proved any particular custom of lineal primogeniture, and by the ordinary law of inheritance appellants have prior rights.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DUNEDIN.—The question arises as to the succession to the Zemindary of Agori Barhar. The estate is of great value, and the question raised is one of wide importance.

The estate fell vacant by the death of Rani Kunwari, the widow of the last male holder, Raja Kesho Saran Shab. She died in 1913, having possessed the estate since the death of her husband in 1871, but it was conceded that her possession was not due to any title arising out of separation of self-acquisition.

This couple left no children, and to trace the succession you have to go up for five generations to find an ancestor common to Raja Kesho Saran Shab, the last male holder, and the two claimants who are adversaries in the appeal. This common ancestor, Raja Sudist Narain Shab, had three sons, from the eldest of whom Raja Kesho Saran was descended. There is no one left in this line.

The descendants of the second son are also extinct.

The plaintiff is the great-great-great-grandson of the third son. The defendants are his uncles, being younger brothers of his father. It will thus be seen that the plaintiff is the direct senior. A lineal descendant of the common ancestor, the person who, by the law of primogeniture as applied in England, would succeed. But the uncles are one degree nearer to the common ancestor than he is. The question is, which is entitled to succeed, the plaintiff or the uncles defendants jointly? The uncles on the death of the widow managed to seize the property, which accounts for their being defendants in the suit.

The family in question was an ancient family, holding sway as independent Rajahs. They were dispossessed by a neighbouring Rajah in the eighteenth century, but having helped the English, they were re-instated by Warren Hastings. Their Lordships are satisfied that the re-instatement, which was finally carried out at a subsequent period, restored the family possessions to what they had always been in ancient times, viz., an impartible Raj or Zemindary, and that the Zemindary now is ancestral property and not self-acquired. They do not think it necessary to add anything to what was said by the Subordinate Judge and by the Court of Appeal in arriving at these conclusions.

Now, if the property now in question were not an impartible Zemindary, the question would be easy of solution. It has admittedly to be determined in accordance with the Mitakshara Law. It would all depend on whether the property in question were held joint or not. And both the Courts below have held that this family still exists as a joint family, and that there has been nothing equivalent to partition—with which finding their Lordships agree. The whole point, therefore, turns on the fact that this is an impartible Zemindary, and it is necessary to examine the decisions which deal with them, and are very numerous. They will be taken in their chronological order.

The first case is the Shilagunga case (10) decided in 183, judgment delivered by

ord Justice Turner. In that case the contest was between the representatives of a widow and those of nephews of the last holder, named Gowery Vallabha Taver. The Zemindary in question was admitted to be impartible. The claims in the case were stated by Lord Justice Turner as follows:—

"(1) Were Gowery Vallabha Taver and his brother Oja Taver (the father of the nephews) undivided in estate, or had a partition taken place between them?

"(2) If they were undivided, was the Zemindary the self-acquired and separate property of Gowery Vallabha Taver? and if so,

"(3) what is the course of succession according to the Hindu Law of the South of India, of such an acquisition where the family is in other respects an undivided family?"

They answered the first question by saying that the estate was undivided.

They answered the second question in the affirmative.

That being so, they held that the widow was entitled to succeed.

In the course of the judgment, the following quotation is to be noted (p. 528):—

"The Zemindary is admitted to be in the nature of a principality—impartible and capable of enjoyment by only one member of the family at a time. But whatever suggestions of a special custom of descent may...have been made, the rule of succession...is now admitted to be that of the general Hindu Law prevalent in that part of India (i. e., the Mitakshara), with such qualifications only as flow from the impartible character of the subject. Hence if the Zemindar, at the time of his death and his nephews were members of an undivided Hindu family, and the Zemindary, though impartible, was part of the common family property, one of the nephews was entitled to succeed to it on the death of his uncle. If, on the other hand, the Zemindar at the time of his death was separate in estate from his brother's family, the Zemindary ought to have passed to one of his widows, and, failing his widows, to a daughter or descendant of a daughter preferably to his nephews."

It will be noted that the actual judgment went on the ground of its being self-acquired property, but the passages above quoted certainly lay down that, so long as a Zemindary was family property, although impartible, the selection of the next holder would be determined by taking the senior member judged by survivorship.

The Tipperah case (2). This was a contest between two claimants for the Raj of Tipperah. It was held that there was a custom of allowing each Rajah to appoint his successor, and one of the claimants, being held to be duly appointed, was preferred. But in discussing what would happen if that appointment was not made out, with a view to determining the conflicting claims of the full and the half blood, Lord Chelmsford says as follows (page 540, bottom). After saying that the presumption in any Hindu family is for joint property, he goes on:—

"Still, when a Raj is enjoyed and inherited by one sole member of a family, it would be to introduce into the law by judicial construction a fiction involving also a contradiction to call this separate ownership, though coming by inheritance, at once sole and joint ownership, and so to constitute a joint ownership without the common incidents of co-parcenership. The truth is the title to the Throne and the Royal Lands is as in this case one and the same title; survivorship cannot obtain in such a possession from its very nature, and there can be no community of interest; for claims to an estate in lands and to rights in others over it, as to maintenance, for instance, are distinct and inconsistent claims. As there can be no such survivorship, title by survivorship, where it varies from the ordinary title of heirship, cannot, in the absence of custom, furnish the rule to ascertain the heir to a property which is solely owned and enjoyed and which passes by inheritance to a sole heir."

He then goes on to cite the Shivagunga case (10) with approval as to what it says about the law of inheritance being religion, duty, and superior efficacy of sacrifice; but he seems not to have noticed that the pronouncement quoted above is in the teeth of what was said in the Shivagunga case (10), and being in general terms might be so interpreted. The fact is, though curiously it seems to have escaped notice on many occasions, that the Tipperah case (2) was under the Dayabhaga Law, not the Mitakshara. The Dayabhaga differs from the Mitakshara in several particulars, and there is no succession by survivorship.

Raja Suraneni Venkata Gopala Narasimha Row Bahadur v. Rajah Suraneni Lakshmi Venkama Row (13). The Zamindari in this case was held to be partible, so that the decision does not affect the question, but Sir J. Colville comments upon a misapprehension of the Shivagunga case (10):—

"The Shivagunga case (10) was this: The family was shown to be undivided, but the impartible Zamindari was shown conclusively to have been the separate acquisition of the person whose succession was the subject of dispute. The ruling of this Court was that in that case the Zamindari should follow the course of succession as to separate property, although the family was undivided; but if that Zamindari had been shown to have been an ancestral Zamindari, as in this case, the judgment of the Board would, no doubt, have been the other way. Their Lordships think it necessary to make this observation in order to avoid future misconception as to what was decided here in the Shivagunga case (10)."

That case, therefore, followed the diota in Shivagunga case (10) as against the diota in the Tipperah case (2).

Stree Rajah Yanumula Venkayimh v. Stree Rajah Yanumula Boochia Vankontora (11). In this case the decision does not touch the question, but again Sir J. Colville comments on the Shivagunga case (10) and repeats what he said in the former case that the judgment would have been the other way if the property had not been self-acquired. He adds, at p. 333:—

"It is, therefore, clear that the mere impartibility of the estate is not sufficient to make the succession to it follow the course of succession of separate estate. And their Lordships apprehend that if they were to hold that it did so they would affect the titles to many estates held and enjoyed as impartible in different parts of India."

in the Court of Appeal, points out, at p. 324, the conflict between the Shivagunga (10) and Tipperah cases (2) and, quoting the last-mentioned case of Rajah Suraneni Venkata Gopala Narasimha Rao Bahadur v. Rajah Suraneni Lakshmi Venkama Row (13) follows it and Shivagunga case (10) in preference to the Tipperah case (2).

Sivagnana Tevar v. Periasami (15). The Zamindari was held to be self acquired, and the decision is, therefore, not in point; but, speaking of an estate that was ancestral, Sir J. Colville says (p. 70, middle):—

"He would, therefore, necessarily be joint in that estate, so far as was consistent with its impartible character, with his two younger brothers, the latter taking such rights and interests in respect of maintenance and possible rights of succession as belong to the junior members of a joint Hindu family in the case of a Raj or other impartible estate descendible to a single heir."

Doorga Persad Singh v. Doorga Konwari (16). The decision here turned upon res judicata. But in the course of his judgment Sir Barnes Peacock said (p. 159, bottom):—

"The impartibility of the property does not destroy its nature as joint family property or render it the separate estate of the last holder, so as to destroy the right of another member of the joint family to succeed to it upon his death, in preference to those who would be his heirs if the property were separate."

And he bases this pronouncement upon the Shivagunga (10) and Periasami cases (15).

Naraganti Achammegar v. Venkatachalapati (17). This case decided that an impartible Palaiyagam, in the event of death, passes by survivorship. At page 266 the law is thus stated:—

"Where property is held in co-parcenary by a joint Hindu family, there are ordinarily three rights vested in co-parceners—the right of joint enjoyment, the right to call for partition, and the right of survivorship. Where impartible property is the subject of such ownership, the right of joint enjoyment, and the right of partition as the right of an undivided co-parcener, are, from the nature of the property, incapable of existence. But there being nothing in the nature of the property inconsistent with the right of survivorship, it may be presumed that right remains."

BAIJNATH PRASAD SINGH v. TEJ BALI SINGH.

There follows more to the same effect, and attention is called to the incompatibility of the Shivagunga (10) and Tipperah cases (2) and Shivagunga case (10) is followed.

This is the first decision precisely in point. It is also to be noted, because it is the case quoted with approval by Lord Macnaghten in 32 L. A. as will be subsequently mentioned.

Raja Rup Singh v. Rani Baisni (4). This was a case between a widow and the nearest male heir. This decision is exactly what it has been said above, the Shivagunga case (10) would have been if the property had not been self-acquired. Here it was ancestral and the male was preferred.

Sir Barnes Peacock, delivering a judgment by a Court of which Lord Blackburn was a member, approved (page 154) of Sir R. Couch's judgment in Maharani Hiranath v. Ram Narayan Singh (14) above cited.

Up to this point, with the single exception of the Tipperah case (2), which, as stated, was not under Mitakshara Law the law is all one way and seems to affirm these propositions:—

(1) The fact that a Raj is impartible does not make it separate or self-acquired property.

(2) A Raj, though impartible, may in fact be self-acquired or it may be family property of a joint undivided family.

(3) If it is the latter, succession will be regulated according to the rule which obtains in an undivided joint family, so far as the selection of the person entitled to succeed is concerned, i.e., the person will be designated by survivorship, although then, according to the custom of impartibility, he will hold the Raj without the others sharing it.

There now comes a case which introduces a different line of thought.

Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (17). In this case a deed of gift had been made of thirteen villages of the Rajah to his younger and, it may be supposed, favourite Rani. The suit was raised at the instance of the older Rani as guardian of her son, to set aside the deed. The Zamindari was impartible, and the case, therefore, raised the point as to whether the holder of an impartible

Raj could alienate when there are no purposes of necessity.

The High Court of the North-Western Provinces, affirming the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, held that he could not.

They cited the cases above quoted and drew the deduction that, inasmuch as the right of single enjoyment was not incompatible with a restriction on alienation, and as such restriction was part of the general law of the joint family, that result followed. In particular, they said:—

"It must be conceded that the complete rights of ordinary co-parcenership in the other members of the family, to the extent of joint enjoyment and the capacity to demand partition, are merged in, or perhaps, to use a more correct term, subordinated to the title of the individual member to the incumbency of the estate, but the contingency of survivorship remains along with the right to maintenance in a sufficiently substantial form to preserve for them a kind of dormant co-ownership."

The Board reversed, the judgment being delivered by Sir R. Couch. The point of the judgment is that the title to prevent alienation rests upon the present co-ownership of the person who wishes to restrain.

"The property in the paternal or ancestral estate acquired by birth under the Mitakshara Law is, in their Lordships' opinion, so connected with the right to a partition that it does not exist where there is no right to it.....By the custom or usage, the eldest son succeeds to the whole estate on the death of the father, as he would if the property were held in severalty. It is difficult to reconcile this mode of succession with the rights of a joint family, and to hold that there is a joint ownership which is a restraint upon alienation. It is not so difficult where the holder of the estate has no son, and it is necessary to decide who is to succeed."

It will now be best to abandon, for the moment, the chronological order of all cases and to trace the developments directly attributable to this judgment.

Rama Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards [The First Tiltpur case] (21). This case decided two points:—

(1) That the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (17) which was a case of direct inter vivos gift, covered by analogy the case of alienation by Will.

(2) That the law as laid down in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (18) which was a case from the North-Western Provinces, also applied in Madras, notwithstanding the older Madras decisions, Madras being under the Mitakshara Law.

No general remarks are made which need be quoted. The Zamindari in question was the Zamindari of Pittapur.

Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pittapur [The Second Pittapur case] (1). This was a suit for maintenance. It was sued by the son of the adopted son of the Rajah, who had left the whole Zamindari by Will to a son born after the adoption of the plaintiff's father. The plaintiff denied that the defendant was in truth a son, but said he was a supposititious child.

Accordingly, on his own theory, he was preferring a claim for maintenance against property in the hands of a third party. The Board held that such a claim could only be based on the ground of co-parcenary and that as by the Sartaj Kuari's case (18) co-parcenary was decided not to exist in an impartible Raj, the claim, not being based on relationship, must fail.

The matter is tersely put by Sankaran Nair, J., in the Court of Appeal:—

"The plaintiff does not advance any claim based on relationship. He refuses to admit any relationship.....As there was no community of interest, the property is not burdened with his claim in the hands of a donee."

It is upon these two cases that the appellants in this case base their argument.

The appellants' Counsel argues that the selection of his clients by the rules of ordinary succession to self-acquired, or non-ancestral property is the logical and inevitable conclusion to be reached from the decision in the Sartaj Kuari's case (18) that in an impartible Raj no co-parcenary exists—a decision which he says was logically extended to settle the question of maintenance in The Second Pittapur case (1), and should be equally logically extended to succession.

Now, the first observation that must be made is that Sir R. Couch in Sartaj Kuari's case (18) did not intend that his judgment should have any such effect. This is quite clear from the latter part of it. All the older cases, including his own judgment in the case in 9 Bengal Law Reports, had been quoted. How does he deal with the cases? He says:—

"The Judges of the High Court have quoted in support of their view passages from several judgments of this Committee. In all of them the question was as to the succession to the property on the death of the Rajah or Zamindar, and it was held that, for the purpose of determining who was entitled to succeed, the estate must be considered as the joint property of the family."

And he then goes on with the discussion, on the assumption that the cases have thereby been distinguished so that nothing now being done could overrule them.

The matter, however, does not rest here. For, after the decision in the Sartaj Kuari's case (18), other succession cases did arise which shall now be quoted chronologically—remembering that the date of the Sartaj Kuari's case (18) is 1888.

Jogendro Bhupati v. Nityanand Man Sing (22). This was a competition between a legitimate and an illegitimate son, but in the beginning of the judgment (Sartaj Kuari's case (18) having been cited inter alias), Sir R. Couch says (p. 131):—

"Now, it may be well first to dispose of a point arising out of the fact that this is an impartible Raj, which it is admitted to be. According to the decision in the Shivagunga case (10) which, as their Lordships understand, is not now disputed, the fact of the Raj being impartible does not affect the rule of succession. In considering who is to succeed on the death of the Rajah, the rules which govern the succession to a partible estate are to be looked at, and, therefore, the question in the case is, what would be the right of succession supposing instead of being an impartible estate it were a partible one?"

This passage is absolutely conclusive as to Sir R. Couch's view. The other parties to the judgment were Lord Watson and Sir Barnes Peacock.

(22) 17 I. A. 128 at p. 131; 18 C. 151 (P. C.); 5 Ind. P. C. J. 596; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 101.

BAIJNATH PRASAD SINGH v. TEJ BALI SINGH.

Sri Raja Lakshmi Devi Garu v. Sri Raja Surya Narayana Dhatrazu Bahadur Garu (23). The question was as to whether partition had in fact taken place. But Lord Davey said:—

"It will, however, be found that as between the appellant and the respondent the question whether the Zemindary is partible or not is of no importance. Even if impartible, it may still be part of the common family property and descendible as such...The real question, therefore, is whether it has ceased to be part of the joint property of the family of first Zemindar."

Ram Nundun Singh v. Janki Koor (9). This was a case as to the Bettiah Raj—the same Raj as was the subject of a recent decision to be afterwards referred to.

The actual decision does not touch the point, because it rests on a finding that the Raj was in the hands of an heir who had been reinstated by grant from the East India Company to a self-acquired property.

But a question incidentally arose as to what was the state of affairs in the old family before the forfeiture, and Lord Davey in dealing with this says:—

"It appears that the Raja Kishin Singh was joint in estate with his brother, and, therefore, was entitled to succeed him in family property by survivorship."

Kuchi Kaliyana v. Rengappa [The Udayar-palayan case] (5). The leading question was whether the estate was partible or impartible. It was decided to be impartible. Lord Macnaghten says:

"There were two other questions raised in the appeals which may be mentioned for the purpose of putting them aside. It was objected by the appellant in the first five appeals that, assuming the estate to be impartible, still he was entitled as the preferable heir....The first of these two questions is concluded by authority. It is settled in accordance with a ruling of this Board that when impartible property passes by survivorship from one line to another, it devolves, not on the co-parcener nearest in blood, but on the nearest co-parcener of the senior line—a position held by the principal respondent."

And then he quotes the case in 4 Madras L. R. It was said that he here made a mistake—the case in 4 M. L. R. not being a decision of the Board. But, although if the sentence be read in one way that may be so, he was even then right in fact, for in the case of Muttuvaduganadha Tevar v. Periasami Tevar (12), Lord Hobhouse, delivering judgment in the Privy Council, had said (p. 137) that their Lordships agreed "on both points" with the presiding Judge of the High Court. Now, one of the points was the question of deciding succession in an impartible estate, and as to that the presiding Judge has approved (p. 132) of the decision in Narayanti Achammagaru v. Venkatachalapati (17).

Lastly, Parbati Kunwar v. Ohandarajal Kunwar (3), where Lord Collins (p. 136) quotes with approval a judgment of the Appeal Court of Madras:—

"The first principle is that a rule of decision in regard to succession to impartible property is to be found in the Mitakshara Law applicable to partible property, subject to such modifications as naturally flow from the character of the property as an impartible estate. The second principle is, that the only modification which impartibility suggests in regard to the right of succession is the existence of a special rule for the selection of a single heir when there are several heirs of the same class who would be entitled to succeed to the property if it were partible under the general Hindu Law. . . . We have, first, to ascertain the class...and we have, next, to select the single heir, applying the special rule."

And he then went on to cite Sir R. Couch in the passage already cited in Muttuvaduganadha Tevar v. Periasami Tevar (12).

It will be apparent from this long series of authorities that there are, under the Mitakshara Law, only two possible lines of devolution and that the only test to be applied is, Was there community or was there separation? The argument of the appellants would involve there being two tests, (1) Was the property joint or separate? and (2) If it was joint, was it an impartible Raj? If this were right, there would have been no enquiry in the (23) 24 I. A. 118; 20 M. 256 (P. C.); 7 Sar. P. C. J. 185; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 182.

BAIJNATH PRASAD SINGH v. TEJ BALI SINGH.

Shivagunga case (10) whether the Raj was self-acquired property or not. It would have been enough to take the admission that it was an impartible Raj. The appellants' argument, therefore, is entirely based on what was said in the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (18) and the second Pittapur case (1) which followed it.

Now, if the whole subject were open, it would probably have been better if the words "co-parcenary" and "co-parceners" had not been used. It is one of the inevitable inconveniences of translating an eastern language into the technical law terms of a foreign system of the West. It is quite true that in Colebrooke's Translation of the Mitakshara, the term co-parcener appears, e. g., sections 4 (1) and 9 (1), but assuredly the thing called co-parcenary is not identical with co-parcenary as understood in English law. A very simple instance will show this. Take the ordinary case of a member of a joint family under the Mitakshara law, and what happens if he dies. His right accretes to the other members by survivorship, but if a co-parcener dies his or her right does not accrete to the other co-parceners, but goes to his or her own heirs. It is, therefore, necessary not to fasten the attention on the word "co-parcenary," but rather to enquire what actually was decided in the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (18). Now what was decided was that in an impartible Raj there was no restriction on the power of alienation by the member of the family who was on the Gaddi and was in possession, in respect that there was no such right of co-ownership in the other members as to give them a title to prevent such alienation. The right of the other members that was being considered was a presently existing right. The chance which each member might have of a succession emerging in his favour was obviously outside the sphere of enquiry.

Turning next to The Second Pittapur case (1), it must be always remembered that the claim for maintenance as put forward was made, not against the head of the family of which the claimant was a member, but against the donee, who on the claimant's own allegation was a stranger to the family. It obviously could not, therefore, succeed unless it was of the nature of a real right. Now, it could only be of the nature of a real right, no proceedings having taken place before the estate got into the hands of the donee, if the maker of the claim had before that event been a person who was in some way an actual co-owner of the estate and any observations which go to the question of maintenance apart from the question of real right may be treated as obiter dicta. The decision, therefore, was the logical outcome of the decision in the Sartaj Kuari's case (18), but again the question of succession was outside the scope of enquiry.

No doubt, it would have been possible to decide the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (18) differently if the theory had been accepted that impartibility being a creature of custom though incompatible with the right of partition, yet left the general law of the inalienability by the head of the family for other than necessary causes without the consent of the other members as it was. This is recognised by Sir R. Couch when, in delivering the judgment of the Board, he says:—

"The question of how far the general law of the Mitakshara is superseded and whether the right of the son to control the father is beyond the custom is one of some difficulty."

Even, however, if their Lordships thought the decision in Sartaj Kuari's case (18) wrong—an opinion which they do not pronounce—the case had stood too long to be now touched. But the judgment expressly affirmed the general proposition which had been laid down in the Tipperah case (2):—

"When a custom is found to exist it supersedes the general law, which however, still regulates all beyond the custom."

This is the key note of the position. The question of how to select the head of the family in a joint family is part of the general law. That the custom of impartibility does not touch it is shown by the long list of authorities above cited and there is, in their Lordships' view, no necessary logical deduction from the decision in Sartaj Kuari (18) and The Second Pittapur cases (1) which forces them to an opposite conclusion.

It is true that in a very recent and unreported case as to the succession to the DURGA BHARTHI v. NAGESHWAR NATH.

Bettish Raj a different result was indicated. One of their Lordships was a party to that judgment, and their Lordships have consulted the other members of the Board who decided that case. Their Lordships are satisfied that in that case the appellant who was wrong on the merits, practically invited a decision upon the off-hand view that the Sartij Kuari (18) and The Second Pittapur cases (1) concluded the question, and this view was accepted without argument and without citation of the authorities. In these circumstances, their Lordships, while not doubting the soundness of the decision, do not hold themselves bound by the reasons given.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that, this Zemindary, being the ancestral property of the joint family, though impartible, the successor falls to be designated according to the ordinary rule of the Mitakshara Law and that the respondent, being the person who in a joint family would, being the eldest of the senior branch, be the head of the family, is the person designated in this impartible Raj to occupy the Gaddi. The decision appealed against was right. They will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are in fact the same as those in First Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1918 which was argued on the same date, and we may refer to the judgment in that case for a fuller statement of facts than is given here. The suit was one brought by the plaintiff appellant, Durga Bharti, a Mahant, belonging to a celibate order having its shrine at Parela in Basti District, to set aside an alienation made by Dasrath Bharti, deceased, and for a declaration that a mortgage-decree passed in favour of the defendants for sale of the suit property is not binding on him. On the death of the previous Mahant Sheo Dayal Bharti, there was a dispute between Durga Bharti and Dasrath Bharti as to the succession. This dispute resulted in a compromise by which each party was awarded a share in the property, but it was agreed that neither party should choose a disciple to succeed him during the lifetime of the other and that, on the death of one of them, the survivor should be entitled to the whole and should have the right to appoint a successor. It was also agreed that each party should be liable for his own debts and that the share in possession of the other party should not be liable for them. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance and a compromise was entered into in connection with an appeal filed by Durga Bharti in this Court and was made a part of this Court's decree. The mortgage now in suit was made by Dasrath Bharti during the pendency of the appeal, and it was made, as the Courts below have found, in order to obtain funds to defend his title in appeal. One of the defences put forward to the present suit was that the properties in dispute were not trust properties at all, but were private properties of Dasrath Bharthi, which he had power to alienate. This issue has been found in favour of the appellant, but his suit has been dismissed on the ground that the loan was taken for a purpose for which Dasrath Bharthi as trustee was entitled to encumber the trust properties. The sole issue in this appeal is, whether this finding is correct.

The lower Courts have found that there was a valid necessity for borrowing the money, namely, the defence of Dasrath Bharthi's title as Mahant which was challenged in the appeal, and that the lender advanced money after satisfying himself as to the existence of the necessity. These are findings of facts which cannot be challenged in second appeal except on some legal ground. The appellant's contention is that the defendant was bound to show either that the money was actually applied for the purpose for which it was borrowed or that the lender made enquiries from third parties as to the existence of the necessity. The law, however, does not require this. The cases relied on by the appellant all relate to alienations made either by a Hindu widow or by the manager of a Hindu joint family. Assuming that the same principles are applicable to the case of a trustee, it has been laid down in clear terms by the Privy Council that the lender is not bound to see to the application of the money. In the words of the Privy Council itself: "It must be shown either that there was legal necessity for the alienation, or at least that the grantee was led on reasonable grounds to believe that there was" [Amarnath Sah v. Achan Kuar (1)]. Here the creditor has established both the existence of a valid necessity, and that, before advancing the money, he satisfied himself by enquiry from the debtor as to the nature of the necessity which existed. He has, therefore, sufficiently complied with the law.

The appellant has, however, advanced a second line of argument on this issue. He admits that, if Dasrath Bharthi's title had been attacked by an outsider, its defence was a legitimate charge on the trust property. He urges that the question here merely was whether Durga Bharthi or Dasrath Bharthi should be trustee and that this was merely a private matter between the two men by which a trust was in no way affected. This argument we cannot accept. The ousting of a legal trustee by a person wrongfully claiming to be such is clearly an injury to the trust. The trustee is not only entitled but bound to defend such an action and is entitled in case of necessity to be reimbursed out of the trust property for the expenses incurred in doing so. The mortgage only affected the part of the share which fell into the possession of Dasrath Bharthi, and which was liable in the terms of the compromise for all debts incurred by him. The decision of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, correct and we maintain it.

The appeal and the cross-objections are both dismissed with costs.

The plain meaning of section 16 of the Central Provinces Land Alienation Act is that a sale shall not be held in execution of a decree or order if that decree or order is passed or made after a certain date, but that it can be held if the decree or order is prior to that date, whether the application for execution is prior or subsequent to that date. The word "made" used in the section qualifies the words "decree or order" and not the word "execution." [p. 546, col. 2.]

INDAL BAPU V. MOHAMMAD ALI.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal we are concerned with the following portions of Central Provinces Act, II of 1916, the Land Alienation Act:—

"1. (1) This Act may be called the Central Provinces Land Alienation Act, 1916.

"(2) It shall extend only to such areas of the Central Provinces as the Chief Commissioner may, from time to time, notify in this behalf in the Gazette.

"(3) It shall come into force on such day as the Chief Commissioner may, by notification, direct."

"16 (1) No land belonging to a member of an aboriginal tribe shall be sold in execution of any decree or order of any Civil or Revenue Court made after the commencement of this Act, nor shall a receiver be appointed to manage such land under section 51 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908."

The Chief Commissioner directed by notification that the Act should come into force on the 15th of April 1917 and on the 20th of April 1918 he further directed that its provisions should extend to the Gondia and Sakoli Tahsils of the Bhandara District, and that Raj Gonds, Gonds and Pardhans in those areas should be deemed members of aboriginal tribes.

The appellant here is a Raj Gond and a landholder residing in the Gondia Tahsil. The respondent obtained a money-decree against him on the 21st of March 1918. Application for execution of this decree by attachment and sale of his village of Nawatola was made on the 26th of August 1918, and the attachment was made and the case transferred to the Collector. During the proceedings it was pleaded on behalf of the judgment debtor that his village was not liable to sale because the decree was obtained after the Land Alienation Act came into force, that is to say, after the 15th of April 1917, when it came into force generally in the Central Provinces. This obviously impossible contention was apparently much pressed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and in appeal in that of the District Judge, but was rejected in both Courts after a great deal of discussion. Its reductio ad absurdum is simple, for, if it were sound, section 16 (1) of the Act would apply to the whole of the Central Provinces, without any notification of its extension to specified areas; in flat defiance of section 1 (2) quoted above.

In second appeal this contention is abandoned and an entirely new position is taken up. This is, that section 16 (1) prohibits the sale of land on an application for execution made after the Act comes into force, that is, that the word "made" qualifies the word "execution" and not the words "decree or order". To speak of the making of an application for execution as making an execution is, perhaps, not absolutely impossible, but I have certainly never met any instance of it and the learned Pleader for the appellant was unable to quote one. On the other hand, a decree is commonly said to be made, and an order still more commonly. The very plain meaning of the words of the section is that a sale shall not be held in execution of a decree or order if that decree or order is passed or made after a certain date, but that it can be held if the decree or order is prior to that date whether the application for execution is prior or subsequent to that date.

The learned Pleader for the appellant cited the rulings in Koilash Ohunder Roy v. Jodu Nath Roy (1) and Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna (2) as supporting his contention by analogy. They refer respectively to section 148 (n) and section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. The former took away the right to execute a decree for arrears of rent from an assignee of the decree which section 232 (now Order XXI, rule 16) of the Civil Procedure Code gave him. The section similarly repealed in regard to decrees for rent sections 271 to 283 (both inclusive), which are now Order XXI, rule 58 of the Civil Procedure Code, which gave a third party a right to have his claim to the tenancy investigated in the execution proceedings. In the former case, the assignment of the decree and, in the latter, the decree had been made before the Tenancy Act of 1885 came into force, but in both cases it was held that the provisions of the Act applied. In both cases the Court "applied the settled rule of construction ordinarily acted upon in the absence of any statutory rule inconsistent with it, and that rule is, that retrospective effect is not ordinarily given to an enactment so as to affect substantive rights, but that provisions affecting mere procedure are applied to pending proceedings." And, as was pointed out in Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (3), vested rights which cannot be retrospectively affected by enactments are not confined to substantive rights but extend equally to remedial rights or rights of action. J. C., said in Kala Tihari v. Narayan (4): "As a general rule mere alterations in forms of procedure are retrospective in effect and apply to pending proceedings but where a change in procedure is complicated with a change of existing rights the rule could not, I think, be held to apply."

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Election—Evidence, whether can be allowed to vary recorded voting paper showing election to be void—Number of votes recorded exceeding maximum, effect of.

No evidence should be allowed to vary the recorded voting paper which, on the face of it, shows an election to be invalid and void.

The principle that when the number of votes recorded exceeds the maximum that can be given an election must be invalid and void, is a perfectly sound one, and one that cannot be controverted in the case of any elective body, especially when there are no rules providing for any such contingencies.

Application of review from the following decision of Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Mullick, dated the 21st December 1915, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 127 of 1915, against the decision of the District Judge, Khulna, dated the 20th August 1915, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 12th July 1915.

Babus Jadu Nath Kanailal and Sasisekhor Bose, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bagram, Counsel and Babu Ram Charan Mitter, for the Magistrate and Commissioner.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Dwijendra Nath Mookerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that the learned Judge in the Court of Appeal below was perfectly justified in holding on the facts which we cannot go behind that the election was invalid and null and void, and that the Commissioner was justified in taking the action he did. We do not think that any evidence should have been allowed to vary the recorded voting paper which, on the face of it, shows the election to be invalid and void.

The principle that when the number of votes recorded exceeds the maximum that can be given the election must be invalid and void seems to us a perfectly sound one, and one that cannot be controverted in the case of any elective body, especially where there are no rules, as in this particular case, providing for any such contingencies. That being so, the appeal must be dismissed with separate costs to the two sets of respondents who have appeared. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs for each set.

[An application was made to the Court for review of the foregoing judgment, and the Judges who had passed the judgment having ceased to be attached to the Court, the application came before Sir Lancelot Sanderson, Kt., C. J., and Justice Sir John Woodroffe, Kt., and Justice Sir Autosh Mookerjee, Kt., on 28th March 1916.]

JUDGMENT.—In this case we think that no rule ought to be granted, and that this application ought to be rejected. We think that the judgment of the Court below was right.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

Thakur SITLA BAKHSH SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

Thakur SITAL SINGH AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 8, 14, 15, 22—
"Person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act," meaning of—Bequest to anyone but the immediate next heir, effect of—Limitations in cl. 11 of s. 22, effect of.

Under the Oudh Estates Act of 1869, a bequest to anyone other than the immediate next heir breaks the line of succession, ousts the special limitations provided by the Statute, and makes the property subject to the ordinary law of succession. [p. 551, col. 1.]

When section 22 of the Act applies, clause 11 provides special limitations, and does not simply remit the succession to the unqualified ordinary law of the religion and tribe of the last taluqdar: and in cases coming under List No. 3 (specified in section 8) the rule of primogeniture will still operate. [p. 551, col. 2.]

Consolidated appeals from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated September 15, 1916, reported as 40 Ind. Cas. 469, varying a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki.

FACTS.—The question for determination in this appeal was, whether the succession to the estate concerned was governed by the rule of primogeniture or by the ordinary provisions of Hindu Law.

The facts are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The Trial Judge held that succession was governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture and that the present appellant was entitled to the whole estate: but the Judicial Commissioners (Kanhaiya Lal and Kendall) modified this by finding that the ordinary Hindu Law applied, and that respondent, as equidistant reversioner with appellant, was entitled to one-half of the estate.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., (with him Mr. Hyam, for Mr. Dube), for the Appellant, submitted that the rule of primogeniture was still applicable. He narrated the history of the Act and referred to Sykes' Compendium of Oudh Taluqdari Law, pages 385, 386, 391. The actual sanad was not forthcoming, but both parties were agreed that it was in the form printed at page 386 of Sykes. He contended that Dilraj Kunwar did not take under the Will, but under the Act; that the bequest to her was contingent on another which lapsed and that there was an intestacy, and that she only had a woman's estate of inheritance. If, however, it were held that she took under the bequest by Sher Bahadur Singh, he submitted that section 14 of the Act applied as she was a person who would have succeeded under the Act.

Mr. Dunne, K. C., for the Respondents.—This is an entirely new case, never before raised. She comes under section 15. In the Judicial Commissioner's Court it was admitted she was not a person who would have succeeded to the estate under the Act.

Any admission to that effect was an admission by a Pleader on a matter of law, and is not binding.

The Amending Act of 1910 operates retrospectively. Section 14 of that Act remodels section 22 of the old Act. Whoever succeeds now comes under the new Act. A bequest to a person in the line of succession does not take the case out of the Act. Dilraj Kunwar was such a person, vide sub-sections (9) and (10) of section 14 of the Amending Act.

If Dilraj Kunwar be held to take an absolute estate under the Will, the succession is regulated by clause 11 of section 22: it is to be according to the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe of the taluqdar are subject. The meaning of the phrase "ordinary law" was discussed by the Board in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ramee Janki Koer (1). Another case relating to the same talug is Jagdish Bahadur v. Sheo Pertab Singh (2), which lays down that the estate may descend as an impartible estate even though the ordinary law applies. The ordinary law here includes the rule of primogeniture. Mr. Dunne, K. O. (with him Mr. Amien Jackson), for the Respondents.—It is now alleged that Dilraj Kunwar came in on an intestacy under the "ordinary law" by virtue of section 22 (11). But she could not have come in if there were a law of lineal primogeniture at all. I contend that she came in under the Will, that section 15 of the Act applies, and that, therefore, the succession is the same as though she had bought and is governed by the ordinary Hindu Law. Their case in the Trial Court was that the mother came in under the Will; but was swept back into the Act by the Amending Act.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—The succession opened out when she died in 1906—before the Amending Act was passed].

The cases to which reference has been made as to the construction of section 22 (11) are List No. 2 cases. Under that list you have a class with a custom of impartibility: but in List No. 3 this is not so: it depends upon the sanad.

The whole meaning of 5 Indian Appeals 1 [Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (1)] is that the sanad is superseded by the Act. If the law to be applied is the ordinary law plus the sanad, I say Dilraj Kunwar fell under section 15 of the Act: if it is the ordinary law without the sanad, we both take under the Mitakshara.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O., replied.—My case is that the mother falls within section 14 of the Act and the succession to her is governed by section 22 (11). The object of Government throughout has been to prevent partition, and the sanads and Acts should be construed favourably to that object. The estate is impartible and, as between the rival claimants, we are entitled to succeed.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PHILLIMORE.—This appeal turns upon the construction of the Oudh Estates Act, 1 of 1869, an Act the construction of which has been frequently before this Board. It arises in the following circumstances:—

One Sher Bahadur Singh was the holder of a taluka entered in the 1st and 3rd Lists enumerated in section 8 of that Act. He died on the 10th June 1899 having made a Will, dated the 1st December 1895. The Will contained a bequest of the taluka in favour of his wife, who, however, died in his lifetime, then of his mother, Dilraj Kunwar and then of his daughter.

There might be points of difficulty as to the construction and efficacy of the bequests, but their Lordships agree with the Courts in India that, in the events which actually happened, Dilraj Kunwar obtained an absolute estate under the terms of her son's Will. She entered into possession and died on the 12th July 1906. Thereupon, the present disputes arose.

The appellant claimed to be the proper successor under the rule of lineal primogeniture, as sixth in descent from the common ancestor. His original opponent, Kirat Singh, asserted that the appellant was seventh in descent, while he was sixth, and also disputed the seniority of the appellant's line.

Both parties set forth their claims in suits against Sher Bahadur Singh's daughter, whom they treated as a trespasser. It was determined early in the proceedings that the daughter had no title, and that the dispute really was between the appellant and Kirat Singh; that Kirat Singh was wrong in his contention that the appellant was seventh in descent; that both parties were in the same degree; and that the appellant was in the senior line, and would be entitled if the rule of male lineal primogeniture applied.

During the course of the litigation, Kirat Singh died, and thereupon his brothers, Sital Singh and Debi Singh, appeared as respondents. The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the appellant against Sital Singh and Debi Singh in their capacity of representatives of their dead brother.

Sital Singh and Debi Singh appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and put forward a case in their own right, contending that the estate had, by virtue of section 15 of the Oudh Estates Act, been taken out of the line of succession established by the Act, and that, consequently, the ordinary rule of inheritance according to the Mitakshara Law applied, and that they as equal in degree with the appellant were entitled to share with him in the inheritance. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner allowed this amended claim to be preferred, and decided in favour of the two brothers of Kirat Singh that the estate passed according to the ordinary Mitakshara Law, and that, therefore, the appellant was only entitled to half the property, the other half going to the two brothers. Debi Singh has sold his share to his brother, who is the contesting respondent in this appeal.

If, therefore, the rule of male lineal primogeniture applies, the appellant is entitled to the whole property. On the other hand, if the inheritance is to follow the rule of the Mitakshara, the contesting respondent in his own right and that of his brothers is, as the Court of the Judicial Commissioner decided, entitled to share with the appellant, each taking half.

The material provisions of the Oudh Estates Act are the following: Section 8 provides for the formation of six lists, of which the first three are important for the consideration of this case. They are as follows:—

First—A list of all persons who are to be considered talugdars within the meaning of this Act.

Second.—A list of the talugdars whose estates, according to the custom of the family of and before the thirteenth day of February, 1856, ordinarily devolved upon a single heir.

Third.—A list of the talugdars, not included in the second of such lists, to whom sanads or grants have been or may be given or made by the British Government up to the date fixed for the closing of such lists, declaring that the succession to the estates comprised in such sanads or grants shall thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture.

This taluga comes into the first and third lists, while most of the decisions to which reference has been made in the argument have regard to talugas coming into the first and second lists.

Section 22 provides for the succession to all intestate talugdars whose names shall be inserted in the second or third lists. There are ten clauses providing for descent to named heirs, and then comes the eleventh clause, which is as follows:—

“Or in default of any such descendant, then to such persons as would have been entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe of such talugdar or grantee, heir or legatee are subject.”

Every talugdar is, however, competent to dispose of his property under certain conditions, either by deed or Will; and if any such deed or bequest breaks the line of succession the taluga ceases to be regulated by the special provisions of the Act and becomes subject to the ordinary laws of inheritance. If, however, the transfer or bequest is to the next heir in succession, such transfer or bequest does not break the limitations. Under the Amending Act, Act III of 1910, it is not necessary, in order to save the limitations, that the transfer or bequest should be to the immediate next heir; but this Act having been passed since the succession in dispute opened, has no bearing upon the present case, notwithstanding that in certain respects it is made retrospective. The sections in the original Act which provide for the alternative contingency are in terms as follows:—

“XIV. If . . . any talugdar or grantee, or his heir or legatee, shall hereafter transfer or bequeath the whole or any portion of his estate . . . to a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of this Act to the estate or a portion thereof if the transferor or testator had died without having made the transfer or intestate, the transferee or legatee and his heirs and legatees shall have the same rights and powers in regard to the property to which he or they may have become entitled under or by virtue of such transfer or bequest, and shall hold the same subject to the same conditions and to the same rules of succession as the transferor or testator.

"XV. If . . . any taluqdar or grantee, or his heir or legatee shall hereafter transfer or bequeath to any person not being a taluqdar or grantee the whole or any portion of his estate, and such person would not have succeeded according to the provisions of this Act to the estate, or to a portion thereof, if the transferor or testator had died without having made the transfer and intestate, the transfer of and succession to the property so transferred or bequeathed shall be regulated by the rules which would have governed the transfer of and succession to such property if the transferee or legatee had bought the same from a person not being a taluqdar or grantee."

The appellant says that he is the successor to the whole taluqa, because the principle of male lineal primogeniture applies, even though recourse is had, as it must be in this case, to clause 11 of section 22, and because, according to his contention, the bequest to Dilraj Kunwar was not one which falls under section 15 and breaks the limitations, but a bequest to the next heir under section 14.

The respondent has two grounds of defence. First, he says, that when clause 11 is reached special limitations disappear, and the succession under this clause is according to the ordinary law and no longer according to the law of primogeniture. Secondly, he says, that if clause 11 still provides special limitations, then Dilraj Kunwar was not next heir to her son, and the bequest to her was not a bequest to the next heir, but broke the line of succession, and, therefore, made the property thenceforward subject to the ordinary law of succession, that is, according to the Mitakshara.

Their Lordships will proceed to consider together both grounds of defence adopted by the respondent. If clause 11 should be treated as providing special limitations, then, though the descent is to be according to the ordinary law of the religion and tribe, yet this ordinary law operates only so far as it is not inconsistent with the overriding consideration that the succession is to be governed by the rule of primogeniture, which implies also impartibility.

The cases upon the construction of the Oudh Estates Act which have been brought to their Lordships' notice are the following:—

Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (1), decided in 1877, is a case where the taluqa was entered in the second list, but where there had been a sanad of earlier date than the Act of 1869 granted to a widow lady, by which the estate was to descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture. Their Lordships held that the taluqa having been placed in List No. 2, which merely requires that the property should devolve upon a single heir, and the original grantee being a woman, the Act superseded the sanad; and the estate descended to her daughter as heir according to the Mitakshara Law, no special custom being proved.

Similarly, in Achal Ram v. Udai Partab Addiya Dat Singh (3) decided in 1883, also a case of a taluqa in the second list, their Lordships held that the estate did not descend according to the rules of primogeniture, and that the plaintiff, who did not prove that he was nearer in degree than some other relations, had not made out his title.

Diwan Ram Bijai Bahadur Singh v. Rai Jagatpal Singh (4) decided in 1890, is a third case of a taluqa in List No. 2, and one in which, nearer heirs having failed, the descent was regulated by clause 11 of section 22. The principle of impartibility gave the estate to the elder brother, unless he was excluded by the general Hindu Law as being insane, which, in the event, their Lordships found he was not.

In this case the decision that the estate remained impartible though the succession was under clause 11 seems to show that clause 11 does provide special limitations, and does not simply remit the succession to the unqualified ordinary law of the religion and tribe.

Bhai Narindar Bahadur Singh v. Achal Ram (5), decided in 1893, is a case relating to the same taluqa as that which came under consideration in Achal Ram v. Udai Partab Addiya Dat Singh (3). The purport of the decision now being cited is that when the case comes under List No. 2, there being no rule of primogeniture, degree prevails over line in the ascertainment of the heir, but where the degree is equal the line prevails. The case follows the previous decisions, but has been specially relied upon, because of certain observations made in the course of the judgment. They are as follows:—

"Counsel has suggested that in a case of distribution ordered by the 11th sub-section of the 22nd section of the Act of 1839, the family custom is not to be taken into account. Their Lordships consider that the effect of the 11th sub-section is simply to refer the parties to the law which would govern the descent of the property when the special provisions of the Act are exhausted. That law clearly takes in the family custom, and that law will in this case carry the estate to the one single heir, and that single heir must be pronounced to be Jubraj in preference to the plaintiff."

The expressions in this passage are not precisely the same as those used in other judgments of the Board. But the result and also the mode of reasoning are the same. The passage should not be taken by itself, but in conjunction with an earlier passage in the judgment: "the effect of that (being placed in List No. 2) is that the estate is labelled as one which according to the custom of the family descends to a single heir, but not necessarily by the rule of lineal primogeniture." When, therefore, their Lordships say that the law takes in the family custom, they mean that the law takes in the limitations provided in List No. 2. With this explanation there is no difficulty about the case. It falls into line with the others, and confirms the view that the limitations under sub-section or clause 11 are still limitations under the Act, and not mere returns to the ordinary law.

Jagdish Bahadur v. Sheo Pertab Singh (2), decided in 1901, relates to the same taluka as in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranes Janki Koer (1). The Board decided that if the descent to a taluka is to be traced under clause 11 to a person entitled under the ordinary law of the religion and tribe, it is still subject to the provisions of the Act and descends as an impartible estate; and, after considering an alleged custom under which the later born son of a senior wife was supposed to have a prior claim over an earlier son of a junior wife, and finding that as a custom this was not proved, the Board proceeded to enquire what was the ordinary Hindu Law on the subject, and held that, according to the ordinary Hindu Law, the elder born, without reference to the position of his mother, succeeded.

Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Bai Jagatpal Singh (6), decided in 1904, again a case under List No. 2, is a decision upon the construction of section 14. It was held in this case that it was not enough to keep the estate within the settlement that the legatee was a possible heir in the line of succession, but he must be the person or one of the persons to whom the estate would have immediately descended in accordance with section 22.

This decision is said to have led to the passing of the Amending Act of 1910. The particular succession was regulated by clause 6 of section 22, and, this being so, the case has no special bearing on the present one.

Incidentally, in this case it was decided that a legatee who succeeded before the passing of the Act was not a legatee within the meaning of that word in the Act of 1839.

The family was the same family as that concerned in the case in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranes Janki Koer (1), but it was a separate taluka, or rather a separate part of the taluka, that came in question.

Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (9), decided in 1905, came afterwards again before this Board on a further question as to the determination of what property formed part of the taluka and what property of the predecessor from whom the succession was traced, was separate property [Rajindra Bahadur Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (10)]. On the occasion reported in 32 I. A., it was held again that a legatee of a taluka who succeeded before the passing of the Act of 1839 was not a legatee within its meaning, and that the succession to him was not covered by section 22, but by the particular sanad, and that, this being the case, the sanad and not the Act was to govern, and the particular sanad in that case requiring that the estate should descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, having in fact equivalent limitations to those expressed in List No. 3 of the Act, the brother of the last holder must be preferred to his widow. This seems to their Lordships a strong authority in favour of the respondents in the present case, the limitations being in fact the same, though by virtue of a different instrument, in the one case the sanad, in the other the Act. The limitations to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, exclude the widow, and, equally, if not a fortiori, would exclude the mother. It would follow that the bequest in the present case to Dilraj Kunwar was a bequest to a person cut of the line of succession, and brought the case within section 15 of the Act, rendering the estate in future descendable according to the ordinary Hindu Law, unless a particular custom of the religion or tribe should be proved.

Debi Baksh Singh v. Ohandrabhan Singh (7), decided in 1910, was a case of taluka which fell under List No. 5, which is as follows:—

"A list of the grantees to whom sanads or grants may have been or may be given or made by the British Government up to the date fixed for the closing of such list, declaring that the succession to the estates comprised in such sanads or grants shall thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture."

It will be observed that the limitations are the same as those under List No. 3. The decision, therefore, should bear closely upon the present case. The plaintiff was in the senior line, but of a degree more distant from the common ancestor than the defendant. As the succession was to a remote predecessor, it fell under clause 11. The Board insisted upon the rule of impartibility. The contention of the appellant in support of his claim to succeed under the ordinary law as nearest in degree rested mainly upon a citation of a passage in the judgment in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Zoor (1), in which it was supposed that their Lordships had rejected all reference to the sanad. But in that case there was an inconsistency between the sanad, which was granted before the Act, and which made the descent to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture and the provisions of the Act, which entered the particular estate in List No. 2, and made it merely descendable upon a single heir. In the case now under consideration, as in all the other cases, the limitations in the sanad and the limitations in the Statute were the same. It matters not which is looked at. Accordingly, their Lordships held that clause 11 gives a rule of descent which is still within the Statute, and, therefore, a descent in the particular case according to the rule of primogeniture giving a preference to the line over the degree in the ordinary way.

Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (8), decided in 1916, concerned a taluka held by a Muhammadan family, all the other cases which have been cited having been Hindu talukas. There was no contention as to the descent of the taluka, which it was admitted between the parties devolved according to the rule of primogeniture. The question in dispute was as to the separate and private property of the last holder of the taluka. According to ordinary Muhammadan Law, this property would have been divisible between the two sons, but the elder son said that by the family custom it devolved upon him, because it followed the descent of the taluka. Now, it happened that the taluka was entered in List No. 2, in which the descent is to a single heir, but there is no rule as to primogeniture. Still, if there is a descent to a single heir, as the taluka is impartible, the elder will inherit as if there were the rule of primogeniture. It was suggested that the taluka was entered in List No. 2 by mistake, and that it should have been entered in List No. 3; but their Lordships could not accept that contention. They held, however, that if it was in List No. 2 there was a presumption that it was in that list because there had been an earlier family custom which would apply to all property whether belonging to the taluka or separate from it. It is to be observed that if there was a custom that the property should descend to a single heir, it would have the same effect in the particular case as if there was a custom that it should descend according to the rule of primogeniture. This being so, their Lordships held that the entry in the list, whether

VENKATA REDDI v. MUTHU PAMBULU NAICK.

List No. 2 or List No. 3, was good evidence that there was a family custom which would make the property, in the particular case, devolve upon the elder son.

Their Lordships believe that they have now gone through all the decisions of the Board, which were cited in argument, and the result is, that, while there are several decisions on cases coming under List No. 2 to the effect that it is enough to provide a single heir, and that when the succession is regulated by section 11 this single heir is the nearest in the succession, and may be male or female, there is no decision to this effect when the case comes under List No. 3, where the rule is that of primogeniture. But there are two decisions—that in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rvi Jugalpal Singh (6) where the succession was regulated by the sanad; and that in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (7) which came under List No. 5—which show that the rule of male lineal primogeniture applies after the special successions provided by clauses 1—10 are exhausted, and where clause 11 is invoked.

Therefore, the second ground of defence adopted by the respondent succeeds. It would appear to follow from the cases cited, from 17, 28 and 37 I. A., and from the reasoning which has been adopted in this judgment, that the first ground of defence would not have succeeded; but it is enough that, treating clause 11 as regulating the succession, Dilraj Kunwar was not, as mother of the previous holder, the proper successor according to the Act; and that the Will bequeathing the property to her, took the property out of the limitations of the Act, and rendered it under section 15 subject to the ordinary Hindu Law, according to which the appellant and respondent as representing two lines of agnates would divide the property.

There was a further suggestion that as Dilraj Kunwar, if she succeeded by inheritance, would only have succeeded to a Hindu woman's estate, which is a limited one without power of bequest, and with only certain powers of transfer inter vivos, while the effect of the Will had been to give her an absolute estate, the Will would have broken the line even if she had been the next heir. But it is unnecessary to consider this point. Upon the whole, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal fails, and should be dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 63—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Mortgage—Creation of charge—Proof of attestation—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 5—Discretion of Court, when to be exercised.

In order to prove the creation of a valid charge by a mortgage-deed which, under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, requires to be attested by two witnesses, the evidence of one of the attesting witnesses is, under section 68 of the Evidence Act, sufficient to prove the execution of the mortgage and the document may be accepted by the Court as prima facie sufficiently proved to be a valid mortgage, but this prima facie proof may be rebutted by proof on the other side that the other witness or witnesses who has or have apparently attested the document did not really see its execution. [p. 557, col. 2.]

The discretion under rule 5, Order VIII of the Civil Procedure Code, should usually be exercised by the Court of first instance in those cases where it suspects on prima facie grounds that an admission was made collusively or in order to evade a rule of public policy. Where an allegation of fact in a plaint is not denied specifically or by necessary implication it must be deemed to have been admitted, and in such a case an Appellate Court would be using its discretion wrongly in requiring proof of that allegation. preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Sattur, in Original Suit No. 254 of 1916.

Messrs. N. R. K. Tatachari and P. R. Srinivasan, for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court erred in allowing a new point to be raised for the first time, about the validity of the mortgage-document as creating a charge on property. The point was not raised either expressly or by implication in the written statement of the defendants. The validity of the document must be deemed to have been admitted. No doubt the Court has a discretion to require proof even when there has been an admission under Order VIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code. That discretion would properly be exercised by the Court of first instance. Here, any way, the lower Appellate Court did not give an opportunity to the plaintiffs to tender such proof.

Then, the only controlling sections with regard to mode of proof of a mortgage are sections 68 and 69 of the Evidence Act. Under section 69 proof by one attester is held sufficient. There is no requirement that the attesting witness who is tendered to prove the document should also prove that the other attestors to the document saw the executant sign.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, which was enacted ten years after the Evidence Act, lays down that a mortgage-document should be attested by at least two witnesses. Though the section does not deal with the quantum or mode of proof the language of the section implies that, to enforce the charge created by it, the two attestors should be called to prove execution or at any rate one attester should prove attestation by the other.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs Nos. 1, 4 and 5 are the appellants mentioned in the memorandum of second appeal preferred to this Court. As it appeared that the third plaintiff's name was left out by an oversight of the appellants' learned Vakil, we allowed the memorandum of second appeal to be amended by adding the third plaintiff's name also as an appellant.

The suit was brought upon a hypothecation-bond executed by the first defendant in August 1912. Four items of property were hypothecated, out of which Item No. 2 was afterwards sold by the first defendant to the second defendant. The second defendant then hypothecated it to the third defendant. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 remained ex parte both in the Court of first instance and in the lower Appellate Court. The first defendant in his written statement described the plaint bond as "the suit mortgage-debt-bond." The plaintiffs in their plaint claimed a charge on the properties and sued for sale on the basis of that charge. If the first defendant had intended to plead that the document did not create a charge owing to its alleged invalidity as a mortgage, he ought to have raised that plea expressly in his written statement. Under Order VIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code "every allegation of fact in the plaint if not denied specifically or by necessary implication or stated to be not admitted in the pleadings of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted except as against a person who is under a disability." The allegation of fact in the plaint that the mortgage-bond gave the plaintiffs a right to bring the properties to sale as creating a charge on the property not having been denied specifically or by necessary implication must be deemed to have been admitted by the first defendant. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, used its discretion wrongly in requiring proof or rather in taking the validity of the document as a mortgage as not proved on the evidence on record even as against the first defendant. Of course, under the proviso to Order VIII, rule 5, "the Court may, in its discretion, require any facts so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission." But that discretion should usually be exercised by the Court of first instance and would be exercised properly in cases where the Court of first instance suspects, on prima facie grounds that the admission was made collusively or in order to evade a rule of public policy. However, I shall, for the purposes of the decision of this case, even assume that the first defendant did not admit the validity of the document as a mortgage.

As regards defendants Nos. 2 and 3 they were ex parte (as I have said) in both the Courts below and had not appealed against the decree of the Court of first instance directing Item No. 2 also (that property in which alone they were interested) to be sold for the mortgage-amount and I think that the lower Appellate Court again used its discretion (under Order XLI, rule 33) in a wrong manner in interfering with the District Munsif's decree so far as it affected the ex parte defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on a mere technical ground. However, I shall again assume that its discretion in this matter also was not exercised improperly. Even then it seems to me that the lower Appellate Court should have given the plaintiffs an opportunity to fill up the alleged gaps in the evidence which were not at all considered material by the first Court and should, in the language of the proviso to Order VIII, rule 5, have "required evidence" of the facts which it considered not proved before finding them against the present appellants. But it is unnecessary to deal with this point also further.

The only remaining short question is, whether the mortgage-deed has been proved to create a valid charge (having regard to section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act) on the evidence actually adduced in this case and not disbelieved by the lower Appellate Court. Section 59 requires that a mortgage securing a principal amount which is Rs. 100 or upwards should be created by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses. It has been now settled that an "attested" document means a document whose execution by the executant has been actually seen by the apparent attester. See Shamu Patil v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (3).

The next point for consideration is, "how is a document which purported to be attested by two witnesses to be proved, in order that it may be accepted by the Court to be a valid mortgage-document, such a document being required by law to be attested by two witnesses?" For this purpose, we have to look into the Evidence Act, where sections 63 and 69 contain provision as to the mode of proof of "a document which is required by law to be attested," a mortgage-document for Rs. 100 or upwards being such a document. Section 68 says: "If a document is required by law to be attested it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution if there be an attesting witness alive and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence." I think the implication from the language of the section is that, if one attesting witness has been called (if there be an attesting witness alive, etc.) then the document can be accepted by the Court (of course, if it believes his evidence) as evidencing a mortgage-transaction as the necessary evidence insisted upon by section 68, Evidence Act, of a document required by law to be attested has been given. In other words, the document can, on that evidence, be treated by the Court as having created the charge on immoveable property which it purports to create. Section 68 requires only that one attesting witness (if alive) should be called for the purpose of proving execution subject, of course, to the condition that that witness is subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that either two attesting witnesses should be called when two are alive and that, even assuming that one only need be called, he should, at least, be made to prove that another (or the other) attesting witness besides himself also saw the execution. Hence, it held that the plaint document was not properly proved as a mortgage document as one only of the attesting witnesses was called and he merely proved its execution by the first defendant and the attestation by himself (that witness) and he was not asked about any other attester having seen the execution. (I might add here that the lower Appellate Court in its very technical handling of the case even refused to allow an application for review filed by the plaintiffs).

Mr. Sesha Aiyangar for the respondent third defendant (the first defendant who contested the suit in the two lower Courts remaining ex parte here and the 3rd defendant who was ex parte in the Courts below now taking advantage of the lower Appellate Court's decision to appear before us in order to support it) contends that, though section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act does not deal with the quantum or mode of proof, we must assume that it not only requires that a mortgage-document (for 100 rupees or more) should be attested by two witnesses, but that the mortgagee suing on it should call two witnesses, if alive, to prove the document or should make the one witness (called) to prove its attestation by another also. No doubt there are English and American Statutes which contain such strict provisions about the mode of proof also (by calling, at least two witnesses) of documents required to be attested by two or more witnesses. I do not see, however, why we should make section 59 stricter than it is and add the words to the section (after the words "two witnesses") such as "two of whom at least shall, if alive, be called to prove the instrument or one of whom at least, shall be called to prove that the instrument was not only attested by himself but attested by another attester." The fact that the Evidence Act is 10 years older than the Transfer of Property Act has no relevancy in the consideration of this question. I might add that section 69 of the Evidence Act says that, if no such attesting witness can be found, proof that the attestation of one attesting witness at least is in the hand-writing of that witness and that the signature of the person executing the document is in the hand-writing of that person is proof which might be accepted as sufficient by the Court. If section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act is interpreted as we are invited to interpret it, as adding another requisite (even in the circumstances contemplated by section 69 of the Evidence Act, that is, even where no attesting witness is alive or could be found), namely, direct proof that two attesting witnesses saw the execution, it would be practically impossible in most such cases to adduce evidence of third persons about attestation by two witnesses and many old mortgage transactions could never be proved at all as such. Documents, say about 28 years old, where it is not at all unlikely that the two attestors and the mortgagee have died (life not being too long in this country), cannot be proved at all to be valid documents unless some third persons who did not attest but merely happened to be present at the execution and attestation (a very unlikely contingency) happened to be alive, remembered what happened long ago of a transaction at which they were casually present and could, therefore, be called to prove the attestation by two attestors. If the argument is pushed to its logical limit then even section 90 of the Evidence Act which says that a document purporting to be 30 years old can be presumed to have been validly executed and attested, must be deemed to have been overruled by the provisions of section 59 of the later Transfer of Property Act. No doubt, where the provisions of section 68, Evidence Act, have been complied with by calling the attesting witness to prove the execution by the mortgagor, and the attestation by himself (the witness) and the document may, therefore, be accepted by the Court as prima facie sufficiently proved to be a valid mortgage, that prima facie proof can be rebutted by proof, on the other side, that the other witness or witnesses who has or have also apparently attested the document did not really see its execution and that the document, therefore, did not comply with the requirements of section 59 of Act IV of 1882.

The cases in Vadla Nagiah v. Divakara Mudaliar (1), Muniappa Chettiar v. Vellachamy Mannadi (2), Shamu Patler v. Abdul Kadir Routhen (3), Ganga Pershad Singh v. Ishri Pershad Singh (4) and Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (5) are all cases in which it had been definitely proved, as found by the lower Courts, that the apparent attestors of the documents in question were not attestors in the legal sense and had not seen the execution, and hence it was held in those cases that the documents were invalid as mortgages. Those cases did not consider whether the document had been prima facie proved to be a valid mortgage, that is, whether the requisition as to proof contained in the Evidence Act as regards such a document had been complied with and in fact no occasion arose in those cases for the consideration of that point on the facts found in those cases.

The question now in dispute was directly considered in Shib Dayal v. Sheo Ghulam (6), which decision was pronounced after the Privy Council decision in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthen (3). That case in Shib Dayal v. Sheo Ghulam (6) followed two earlier decisions of that Court Ram Dei v. Munna Lal (7) and Uttam Singh v. Rukam Singh (8). In Ram Dei v. Munna Lal (7) the question in dispute has been carefully considered. I am unable to accept the contention of Mr. Sesha Aiyangar that the learned Judges who decided those three cases overlooked the distinction between the proof of a document and the validity of a document. On the other hand, I think they did have that distinction clearly in their minds and held that, whereas section 59 of Act IV of 1882 did require that there should be two attesting witnesses at least for the validity of the document of the nature mentioned in that section, the requirements of the Evidence Act as to proof of such a document could be sufficiently met by compliance with the directions in sections 68 and 69 of the Evidence Act. I think also that section 114 of the Evidence Act [relied on in some other connection by the learned Judges who decided Jogendra Nath Mukhopadhyaya v. Nitai Ohurn Bundo-padhyaya (9)] supplies the clue to the intention of the Legislature in enacting sections 68 69 of the Evidence Act which consider proof up to a certain point as legally sufficient. As I said already, such prima facie evidence of validity (believed by the Court to be true) could be rebutted by other evidence (of course, when believed by the Court).

In the present case, the evidence of P. W. No. 4 believed by the Courts sufficiently satisfied the requirements of section 68 of the Evidence Act (the document being on its face, attested by at least two attesters and thus satisfying the requirement of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act). Following, therefore, Shib Dayal v. Sheo Ghulam (6) I would hold that the document has been proved to be a valid mortgage.

In the result, the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified and the usual mortgage-decree shall be passed in favour of the plaintiffs for the sum mentioned in the lower Appellate Court's decree with interest as provided for therein, Items Nos. 1, 3 and 4 being directed to be sold first and Item No. 2 last. The plaintiffs shall have their costs of the second appeal from defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and their costs incurred in the Courts below will be paid by the first defendant. The costs shall also be a charge upon the mortgaged property. Time for redemption is six months from this date.

SPENCER, J.—In this case the validity of the suit document, a mortgaged-deed, was not the subject of any issue in the Court of first instance, the only matter on which the plaintiffs and the first defendant joined issue being the question of discharge, upon which defence the District Munsif dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge, after reversing the first Court's finding on the question of discharge, gave the plaintiffs a personal decree against the first defendant alone and refused to give them a decree for sale of the mortgaged property on the ground that the attestation to the deed had not been properly proved. From the Subordinate Judge's order on the review petition his reasons for not granting a decree on the mortgage appear more fully than in his judgment. He says therein that, though the first defendant admitted execution, he did not ask for an issue to be framed as to the validity of the mortgage-deed but as against the other defendants who remained ex parte, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove the document in the manner prescribed by section 68 of the Evidence Act and he had not done so.

In my opinion, the requirements of section 68 of the Evidence Act were sufficiently complied with when P. W. No. 4, an attesting witness, was examined. If there had then been any idea of suggesting that this witness did not know what was meant by "attesting" he should have been asked some questions in the cross-examination to further explain his statement in the chief examination. "I attested it." The document, Exhibit A, shows that two other witnesses signed it. But it is not known definitely whether they are alive and available for examination.

The features of this case resemble that decided in Shib Dayal v. Sheo Gulam (6). It was there stated: "with regard to the proof of the mortgage the plaintiff produced one of the attesting witnesses who proved that he saw the mortgagor sign the mortgage and that he signed his name as an attesting witness. On the face of it, the mortgage appears to have been attested by a number of other witnesses, but they were not called, nor did the witness who was called say that there was any other attesting witness present. He was not asked the question by either side. The question is whether, under these circumstances, there being no other evidence, the mortgage can be said to be proved." Their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court held that there had been a sufficient compliance with the law as stated in section 68 of the Evidence Act when one attesting witness was examined, as required by that section and the evidence for the plaintiff was not at all rebutted. Ram Dei v. Munna Lal (7) was a similar case. As to the amount of proof required, section 68 of the Evidence Act does not require that more than one attesting witness should be called to say that he attested it before the document can be used as evidence. I do not believe that it could have been the intention of the framers of the Transfer of Property Act which became law in 1882, to lay down anything in section 59 contrary to the provisions of the Evidence Act of 1872 on the subject of proof. If an Appellate Court, in the exercise of its discretion under the proviso to section 58 of the Evidence Act and to Order VIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, requires clearer proof of attestation it is the duty of the Court itself to call for such proof and not to decide that the document has not been proved as a mortgage merely because the plaintiff did not examine all attesting witnesses. See Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (5) and Muniappa Chettiar v. Vellochamy Mannadi (2).

Mr. Sesha Aiyangar, for the respondent, relied on two other decisions which can clearly be distinguished. In Param Hans v. Randhir Singh (10) the second witness did not sign or make a mark and so the document was held to be not validly executed as there was nothing in the evidence to show that he authorised the scribe to write his name. In Vadla Nagiah v. Diakara Mudaliar (1) there was no admission or proof of the attestation nor did any presumption arise from the common course of business that the mortgage had been validly attested. Both these cases are, therefore, distinguishable from the present.

I concur in the decree proposed to be passed by my learned brother,

M. C. P.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar at Gurdaspur, dated the 3rd of August 1916, modifying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 13th April 1916.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit between two firms in which the plaintiffs sued for recovery on what was alleged to be a stamped balance and a few subsequent dealings. In the First Court the plaintiffs obtained a decree for almost the whole of their claim and this decree was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge. There was also an appeal by the plaintiffs as regards the sum disallowed, with the result that in the Court of the District Judge their whole claim was allowed. The present appeal is by the defendants.

The First Court held that the balance referred to was duly stamped and the stamp cancelled. This finding was contested on appeal but the point was not decided by the District Judge. We do not, however, propose to remand the case as the appeal is a very old one and we have no difficulty in agreeing with the finding of the Trial Court, on the evidence of Uttam Chand, P. W. No. 3, and Radha Kisben, P. W. No. 4, that the balance was stamped at the time of the execution. There was no reason why it should not have been stamped in the ordinary course of business, and Counsel for appellants is incorrect in saying that the statement of Dani Chand, P. W. No. 2, supports the contention of his clients. We prefer the evidence to which we have referred to that of Kishori Lal, defendant, and his relative, Girdhari Lal.

The cancellation was done by drawing lines across the stamp, and it appears to us that the drawing of these lines is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 12 (3) of the Stamp Act. Though the point was not actually decided in Piran Ditta v. Mangal Singh (1), this was the view taken by Rattigan, J., after consideration of Virabhadrapa v. Bhimaji (2). We for our part are unable to see why drawing of lines across a stamp should not be as effectual as any other mode of cancellation, provided that from what has been done the intention to cancel is clear, and certainly this is the method of cancellation, adopted by a large number even of literate people.

The other grounds of appeal are numerous but only a few of them have been referred to by Counsel. We may remark, however, that the matter decided by the lower Appellate Court on the appeal of the plaintiffs-respondents was a pure question of fact and cannot be disturbed on second appeal. It is not a fact as alleged by Counsel that the Court of first instance did not examine all the witnesses for the defendants, as the record shows that they closed their case; and though Counsel has argued in a general way that certain letters written by the plaintiffs to the defendants are fatal to the case of the former, he has not explained why. He has taken exception to the fact that certain interrogatories were issued to one of the plaintiffs, but the record shows that this was done only after the said plaintiff had been in the witness-box and at the request of defendants themselves.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The provisions of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure do not contemplate an order by the Court for the extinction of the right to redeem, where the suit by a mortgagee or by a mortgagor is not founded upon a mortgage by conditional sale. [p. 563, col. 2.]

The provisions of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code apply to sales ordered under Order XXXIV of that Code, and where such a sale is ordered, the mere 'sale' has not the effect of divesting a person whose property has been sold of the ownership of his property, because, in many cases, the sale is liable to be revoked. It is only when the sale becomes 'absolute' upon an order confirming it that it has the effect of divesting the person whose property is sold of his title to it and of vesting it in the pur-

The principle of the doctrine of subrogation is applicable to the case of the substitution of one creditor for another by operation of law, and where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property, though he is not a mortgagee, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property. #### JUDGMENT.

WAZIR HASAN, A. J. C.—The properties mentioned in List A annexed to the plaint, i. e.—

1. 1-anna-7-pies share with sir lands in Mauza Hari;

2. 45 bighas, 14 biswas in Mauza Atwatman;

3. 54 bighas, 19 biswas also in Atwatman; were mortgaged by Ram Sahai, defendant No. 1, and Ram Nidh, defendant No. 2, to one Maulvi Fakhruddin by a deed, dated the 30th November 1903, and also by deeds, dated the 2nd December 1904 and the 3rd October 1905 executed by Ram Sahai alone. Ram Nidh seems to have disappeared from the scene after having taken part in the execution of the first deed of mortgage, dated the 30th November 1903. In execution of a decree for arrears of revenue which the plaintiff held against Ram Sahai the 45 bighas odd in Mauza Atwatman were put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff on the 20th of August 1909 [see Har Sahai v. Hon'ble Raja Ali Muhammad Khan (1)].

On the 25th October 1909 Har Sahai, his son, Chab Nath, and his grand son, Mahadeo Prasad, executed a deed of mortgage in favour of Bibi Jai Kishori, defendant No. 3, in respect of all the three items of properties mentioned before and also some other properties (C-1). On the 1st of February 1914 Ram Sahai alone executed another deed of mortgage in favour of the same Bibi Jai Kishori in respect of the properties which stood already mortgaged to her as well as some other properties (C-2).

(1) 20 Ind. Cas. 266; 16 O. C. 178.

On the 30th July 1914 Ram Sahai executed a third deed of mortgage in favour of the same lady creating a further charge for the fresh loan on the same properties which were the subject-matter of the mortgage of the 1st February 1912 (C-3). It will be seen from the sequence of events which have been given above that the plaintiff's purchase of the 45 bighas odd land in Atwatman is prior to the incumbrances in favour of the appellant. But that fact is immaterial for the decision of the question of the liability of the other two items except in so far that it excludes the possibility of any 'notice' being fastened on the plaintiff.

On the 16th of July 1913 Maulvi Fakhruddin lodged his claim in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki to enforce payment of money charged upon the properties mentioned at the outset of this judgment under his three deeds of mortgage noted before. To this suit he impleaded, amongst others, the plaintiff and the defendant No. 3, Bibi Jai Kishori. Fakhruddin obtained the usual decree for sale on the 23rd of October 1913 for a sum of Rs. 11,745-12-0. The final decree was passed on the 10th June 1914 and eventually the properties were sold on the 20th of May 1915. The sale was held in several lots and different items of the properties were purchased by different individuals all of whom, we are told, were strangers. The plaintiff, then, on his depositing in Court Rs. 13,415-10-7 for payment to the decree-holder, Fakhruddin, and Rs. 710 for payment to the several purchasers, applied under Order XXI, rule 83, of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the sale of the 20th of May 1915 set aside. The order prayed for was passed on the 30th of August 1915. The facts which I have given in the above narrative are not disputed.

The present suit is brought by the plaintiff for recovery of Rs. 12,225-11-5 principal and Rs. 2,934 interest by sale of the 1-anna 7-pies share with sir lands in Mauza Hari and 54 bighas odd land in Mauza Atwatman. His case is that each of the three items of the properties was liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgages in favour of Maulvi Fakhruddin, that the amount for which his property, i. e., 45 bighas odd land, was liable comes to Rs. 1,950, that after deducting this sum from the total amount of money paid by him he is entitled to recover the balance by the sale of the other two items of properties just before mentioned.

The only serious defence to this claim of the plaintiff was lodged by the defendant No. 3. It is not necessary to set out in any detail the various pleas which she raised in the lower Court because the points urged in appeal on her behalf lie within a very narrow compass and these I shall notice at their proper places.

On the question of the plaintiff's right to sell these two properties free from any incumbrances in favour of the defendant No. 3, the learned Subordinate Judge of Bira Banki gave his finding in favour of the plaintiff. On the question of the amount of rateable contribution by each of the properties, he came to the following conclusions :—

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. By 1-anna 7-pies share in Hari	4,568	12	0
2. By 54 bighas odd land in village Atwatman ...	4,867	8	0
3. By 45 bighas odd land in village Atwatman ...	4,669	7	5

He, therefore, held that the plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 9,456.40 as principal and to Rs. 2,302.9.6 interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum. In the result, he granted a decree to the plaintiff in the following terms :—

"I pass a decree for Rs. 11,758.13.6 with proportionate costs in plaintiff's favour. Defendants will pay the decretal amount within six months of this date otherwise a 1-anna-7-pies share in village Hari and 54 bighas, 19 biswas land in village Atwatman as described in the schedule attached to the plaint shall be sold. Interest from the date of the suit till 24th August 1919 at 9 per cent. Order XX, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code." The only person aggrieved by this decree was the defendant No. 3 and consequently she is the sole appellant before us.

In support of the appeal the following points have been urged by the learned Pleader for the appellant :

(1) That section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV 1882) has no application to this case,

(2) That even if it has, the statutory charge which the plaintiff may hold in virtue of the provisions of that section did not come into existence a minute earlier than the time of payment which the plaintiff made under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Code of Civil Procedure and that, consequently, the charge in favour of the plaintiff can be enforced only as subject to the several incumbrances in favour of the appellant.

The argument advanced under the first point is that the mortgages in favour of Fakhruddin had been extinguished by, and merged in, the final decree of the Court which he had obtained on the 10th of June 1914 and, consequently, the payment made under Order XXI, rule 89, had not the effect of redeeming any mortgage. The old section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act provided as follows :—

"If in any case under section 88 the defendant pays to the plaintiff or into Court on the day fixed as aforesaid the amount due under the mortgage, the costs, if any, awarded to him, and such subsequent costs as are mentioned in section 94, the defendant shall (if necessary) be put in possession of the mortgaged property; but if such payment is not so made, the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, may apply to the Court for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property, and the Court shall then pass an order that such property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in section 88; and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished." Compare, in this connection, the recent decision of the Privy Council in Matru Mal v. Musammot Durga Kunwar (2). Section 89, however, has been repealed by the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), section 156 and Schedule V, Order XXXIV of that Code now deals with "Suits relating to Mortgages of Immoveable Property." That Order provides neither for the extinction of the mortgagor's right to redeem nor of the security as a result of the passing of the final decree either in a suit for sale by a mortgagee or in a suit for redemption by a mortgagor, where the mortgage is not by conditional sale.

Order XXXIV, rule 5, sub rule (2), is as follows:—

"Where such payment is not so made, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the mortgaged property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in rule 4"; and Order XXXIV, rule 8, sub-rule (4), is that, "Where such payment is not so made, and the mortgage is not by conditional sale, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the defendant, pass a decree that the mortgaged property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is found due to the defendant, and that the balance (if any) be paid to the plaintiff or other persons entitled to receive the same: Provided that the Court may, upon good cause shown and upon such terms (if any) as it thinks fit, from time to time, postpone the day fixed for payment." On the other hand, in a suit for foreclosure by a mortgagee as well as in a suit for redemption by a mortgagor when the mortgage is not simple or usufructuary the final decree in case of non-payment has the effect of debarring the mortgagor from "all right to redeem" [Vide Order XXXIV, rule 3, sub-rule (2), and rule 8, sub rule (2)]. These provisions of the Code are in complete accord with the general rule that the mortgagor's equity of redemption "continues unless and until by judgment for foreclosure, or the operation of the Statute of Limitations, the character of creditor is changed for that of owner, or the interest of the mortgagor is destroyed by sale either under the process of the Court or of a power in the mortgage incident to the security." (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXI, page 71, section 125).

It may further be observed that a mortgagor may lose his right to redeem also by the effect of res judicata. The general rule quoted above is recognised by the proviso to section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882) which is as follows:—"Provided that the right conferred by this section has not been extinguished by act of the parties or by order of a Court." (We are not here concerned with 'act of the parties'). I have seen above that the provisions of Order XXXIV of the Code do not contemplate an order by Court for the extinction of the right to redeem where the suit by a mortgagee or by a mortgagor is not founded upon a mortgage by conditional sale.

This naturally brings me to the question,—When does the mortgagor lose his equity of redemption? The same question may be put in another form. When and how is the mortgagor deprived of his ownership of the property? For an answer to this question we must turn to some other provisions of the law of procedure. The provisions are to be found in Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908). It is now generally agreed that these provisions would also apply to sales ordered under Order XXXIV of the Code [See Janj Bahadur v. Kuer Kishen (3) and Sita Ram v. Bharath Prasad (4)], nor was the point disputed at the Bar. The main rules of Order XXI with which I am concerned fall under the heading "Sales of Immoveable Property." A careful analysis of these rules will reveal that the mere 'sale' has not the effect of divesting a person whose property has been sold of the ownership of his property. The sale is liable to be revoked in many cases. It may be revoked in the same proceedings in which it is held; (1) when the purchaser makes a default in payment (rule 86); (2) on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it (rule 90); (3) on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold (rule 91) and also on an application to set aside the sale on deposit (rule 89). An improper sale will have no efficacy. In the case of Pooley's Trustee v. Whetham (5) Cotton, L. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, observed:—"The power of sale given to Mr. Kaye being, therefore, not objectionable, is there any objection to the sale? A passage was read to us from the judgment of the late Vice Chancellor Stuart in Robertson v. Norris (6) stating that the Court will consider the exercise of a power of sale improper, and will prevent it being effectual against the mortgagor if it is exercised, not for the purpose of getting money which is due on the mortgage to secure which the power of sale is given, but for some indirect purpose—a statement of the law from which I do not dissent."

So long, therefore, as the 'sale' is liable to be vacated no legal consequences can flow from it. It is only when it becomes 'absolute' upon an order confirming it that it has the effect of divesting the person whose property is sold of his title to it and of vesting it in the purchaser (Vide Order XXI, rules 92 and 94). Section 65 of the Code makes it perfectly clear, though the purchaser's title on a sale becoming absolute has been by that section given a retrospective effect from the date of the sale. This is in harmony with the rule applicable to a private transfer where the deed effecting it is required by law to be registered. No title passes in such a case without the registration of the deed, but as soon as registration is perfected the transfer of the title dates from the date of the deed (section 47 of the Registration Act—Act XvI of 1908). It would appear from what has been said before, that an order absolute in a suit arising out of a mortgage by conditional sale and an order confirming a sale and thus making it absolute in a suit on a simple or a usufructuary mortgage have the parallel effect of shutting out the equity of redemption in each case. I may here quote the following passage from the judgment of Lord Selborne, L. C., in the well-known case of Heath v. Pugh (7):—

"As to the equity of redemption, it is sufficient to quote Lord Hardwicke's words in the leading case of Oasborne v. Scarfe (8): 'An equity of redemption has always been considered as an estate in the land, for it may be devised, granted or entailed with remainders, and such entail and remainders may be barred by fine and recovery and, therefore, cannot be considered as a mere right only; but such an estate whereof there may be a seisin. The person, therefore, entitled to the equity of redemption is considered as the owner of the land, and a mortgage in fee is considered as personal assets.'.....'The interest in the land must be somewhere and cannot be in abeyance, but it is not in the mortgagee, and, therefore, must remain in the mortgagor. A devises his estate and afterwards makes a mortgage in fee; though this is a total revocation in law, yet in this Court it is a revocation pro tanto only,' (and see Blake v. Foster (9)).

"This being the position of the title, as long as the mortgage is redeemable, the effect of an order of foreclosure absolute is to vest the ownership of, and the beneficial title to, the land, for the first time, in the person who previously was a mere incumbrancer. The equitable estate of the mortgagor is then forfeited and transferred to the mortgagee. It is transferred as effectually as if it had been conveyed or released. A foreclosure (said Lord Hardwicke) 'is considered as a new purchase of the land.' 'The mortgage being foreclosed' (said Sir Wm. Grant) 'the estate became absolutely his.' 'By the order made in the foreclosure suit' (said Sir Lancelot Shadwell) 'he became the absolute owner.' Oasborne v. Scarfe (8), Silberschildt v. Schiott (10), Lee Gros v. Ockerell (11)." I am of opinion, therefore, that a mortgagor does not lose his right to redeem unless and until the sale has become absolute. It follows that when the plaintiff made the deposit under Order XXI, rule 89, he had his equity of redemption subsisting and the said deposit had the effect of redeeming the mortgaged properties. I overrule the first point.

Under the second point, it is contended that the plaintiff cannot be treated as a representative of the mortgagee, Fakhr ud din and the rights possessed by the latter are not available to the former. In support of this argument the following cases were brought to our notice:—

JAI KISHORI V. MOHAMMAD ALI MOHAMMAD KHAN.

Makhdam Khan v. Musammat Jadi (13), Raja Ali Mohammad Khan v. Court of Wards Bishunpur Estate (14), Basant Singh v. Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (15), Jag Mohan Singh v. Sita Ram Singh (16), Mohammad Mohsin v. Mohammad Abid (17).

Vasudev Bhikaji v. Balaji Krishna (12)—In 1872 V and G mortgaged the land in suit. In 1882, a consent decree was passed against the mortgagors and in favour of the mortgagee.

Some time after this, but before 1885, the decretal amount was paid by V and he alone redeemed the property and obtained possession. In 1898 the heirs of G brought the suit out of which the appeal arose against the representatives of V claiming the half share of the land in question. One of the pleas in defence was that V and those claiming under him have been in adverse possession for more than twelve years since V redeemed the property. The plaintiff relied upon Article 148 of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877). The learned Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, held that "it is a condition of Article 148 that it should be one against a mortgagee," that a redeeming co-mortgagor has a "charge and is not a mortgagee" and that, consequently, "he would not be a mortgagee within the meaning of Article 148."

Makhdam Khan v. Musammat Jadi (13)—The facts of this case were similar to the facts of the Bombay case just mentioned and the point for decision was exactly the same. A Bench of this Court, consisting of Messrs. Scott and Ryves, followed the Bombay decision and held that Article 148 did not apply but that Article 144 did to a suit for possession brought by one mortgagor against his redeeming co-mortgagor. In the course of his judgment Mr. Scott observed as follows:—

"The redeeming co-mortgagor no doubt alone becomes entitled to actual possession, if the mortgage was with possession and under section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act he has a charge on the share of each of his co-mortgagors for the proportion of the expenses properly incurred in redeeming and obtaining possession. If, as contended by the appellant, a co-mortgagor who redeems the whole mortgage, has the same interest in the mortgaged property as the mortgagee, section 95 would be superfluous and unnecessary, as without it he would have the right of a mortgagee, which is superior to a charge on the property. I, therefore, am of opinion that by the Transfer of Property Act it was clearly intended that a co-mortgagor redeeming should have no right in the shares of the co-mortgagor other than a charge, and that he is not a mortgagee or representative of a mortgagee."

Before I proceed further I desire to record my complete agreement with the opinions expressed in the aforementioned two cases that, 'where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property,' (see section 95, Transfer of Property Act) and that such a redeeming mortgagor is not a mortgagee.

To the decision of the case, Raja Ali Muhammad Khan v. Court of Wards, Bishunpur Estate (14), I will refer later. The decision in Basant Singh v. Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (15) is not relevant at all to the question which I have to decide and, therefore, I need not pause to consider it.

The judgment of Mr. Louis Stuart in Jag Mohan Singh v. Sita Ram Singh (16) has no bearing whatsoever on the case before us and we do not understand why it was quoted at all. The point decided in that case was that section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to the case of a redeeming mortgagor when the mortgage redeemed was a usufructuary mortgage and the redeeming mortgagor had not obtained possession. This view is in consonance with the decision of the Privy Council in Ahmad Wali Khan v. Shamsul-Jahan Begum (18) to which Mr. Stuart has made a reference in his judgment.

Mohammad Mohsin v. Mohammad Abid (17)—The point for decision in that case was one of limitation and the question was whether the suit brought by the appellant for redemption of a mortgage of December 21st, 1856, was governed by Article 148 or by Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act (Act IX of 1908). The remark at page 75—"It is only when a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior mortgage that the question of subrogation arises," was made with reference to the particular facts of that case and does not seem to have been intended to define the exact limits of the application of the principle of subrogation. This interpretation is borne out by what follows immediately after: "A mortgagor who redeems a mortgage by himself cannot claim subrogation, nor can the person who succeeds to his interest." This sentence clinches the exact point which the facts of that case gave rise to. It is a well-established principle of equity that the rule of subrogation has no application to the case of a person who pays his own debts or discharges incumbrances created by himself.

The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ahmad Wali Khan v. Shamsul-Jahan Begam (18) was also quoted and it was argued that their Lordships of the Privy Council would have laid it down in that case if it were correct that a chargeholder under section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882) acquires any of the rights of the mortgagee when he has redeemed. This is an argument which I am unable to entertain seriously. Obviously, the point which I have to determine did not arise in the case which their Lordships had had before them and it is impossible for me to conjecture what their decision would have been if it had arisen [See the case of Secretary of State for India v. J. Momet (19)].

The precise point, therefore, which we are called upon to decide in this case did not arise for decision and was not decided in any of the cases referred to. It is true, as I have said before, that the plaintiff cannot claim to be the representative of Fakhruddin, but it does not at all follow from this that he has no right of his own. What the plaintiff exactly claims is 'priority' of his charge over the incumbrances upon which the appellant relies and that claim he sets up not in right of Fakhruddin and as his representative but in his own right. This brings me to the crucial point whether the plaintiff has such a right.

Neither the provisions of section 95 nor of section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882) can be relied upon in support of the right of priority claimed by the respondent. No provision of any other legislative enactment was referred to at the Bar; nor am I aware of any. But the absence of any such statutory provision cannot and should not, in my opinion, debar me from dealing out that simple justice to the plaintiff to which he is manifestly entitled. The obstruction on the part of the appellant comes with little grace. These two pieces of property were saved by the act of the plaintiff, which, though primarily impelled by motive of self-protection, had the effect of averting the sale the confirmation of which would have carried away all, including the appellant's incumbrances. The payment made by the plaintiff has enabled the appellant to avail of her securities if she wished subject to the equitable claims of the former. However it may be, I think that I have power to do what the appellant is unwilling to concede. Precisely in circumstances of this case, the law, which is the fountain-head of our jurisdiction, gives us clear authority to 'act according to justice, equity and good conscience' [Vide section 3, clause (g), Oudh Laws Act (Act XVIII of 1876)] and I am of opinion that I would be so acting if I apply the principle of subrogation to this case. There are no elements in the plaintiff's claim which would arrest the application of that principle. The payment was not made by him as a volunteer; he was not primarily bound to discharge the obligation resting on these two items of properties, he was obliged to do so for protecting his own bit of property and he has paid not only a portion of the debt but the whole debt.

Now, what is this right of subrogation? This question may best be answered in the language of an eminent Indian lawyer Sir Rash Behary Ghose: "I now pass on to the kind of subrogation of which I am mainly going to speak to you to-day, namely, the substitution of one creditor for another not by virtue of any actual assignment but by operation of law, a right which does not depend upon a mere legal fiction but upon the most obvious principle of justice and equity, and which is recognised in one form and another in almost every system of law." (Ghose's Tagore Law Lectures on Law of Mortgage, 4th Edition, Volume I, pages 331 and 332).

The principle of subrogation was applied, though not in express terms, by their Lordships of the Privy Council 'in the interests of justice, equity and good conscience,' in the leading case of Gokuldass Gopaldass v. Rambux Sheochand (20). Their Lordships, in considering the doctrine laid down in the case of Toulmin v. Steere (21), referred to and quoted from the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Hall in Adams v. Angel (22) and also from the judgment of Sir George Jessel, M. R., in the Court of Appeal in the same case, then they proceeded to notice some decisions passed in India and finally observed as follows:—

"The doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere (21) is not applicable to Indian transactions, except as the law of justice, equity, and good conscience. And if it rested on any broad intelligible principle of justice it might properly be so applied. But it rests on no such principle. If it did, it could not be excluded or defeated by declarations of intention or formal devices of conveyance, whereas it is so defeated every day. When an estate is burdened by a succession of mortgages, and the owner of an ulterior interest pays off an earlier mortgage, it is a matter of course to have it assigned to a trustee for his benefit as against intermediate mortgagees to whom he is not personally liable.

"In India, the art of conveyancing has been and is of a very simple character. Their Lordships cannot find that a formal transfer of a mortgage is ever made, or an intention to keep it alive ever formally expressed. To apply to such a practice the doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere (21) seems to them likely, not to promote justice and equity, but to lead to confusion, to multiplication of documents, to useless technicalities, to expense and to litigation.

"The obvious question to ask in the interest of justice, equity and good conscience is, what was the intention of the party paying off the charge? He had a right to extinguish it and a right to keep it alive. What was his intention? If there is no express evidence of it, what intention should be ascribed to him? The ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways, shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest. In the familiar instance of a tenant for life paying off a charge upon the inheritance, he is assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have intended to keep the charge alive. It cannot signify whether the division of interests in the property is by way of life-estate and remainder, or by way of successive charges. In each case it may be for the advantage of the owner of a partial interest to keep on foot a charge upon the corpus which he has paid." I have seen before that both the appellant and the respondent were parties to the suit of the first mortgagee, Fakhr-uddin. Both had equal opportunities to save their respective interests. The appellant did not avail herself of that opportunity but the respondent did. I can conceive of no just or even a reasonable ground, and none has been suggested at the Bar, for giving the benefit of the payment made by the respondent obviously for the protection of his own interest to the appellant. If I allow the contention of the appellant, the result would be that the value of the charge which the respondent holds will be reduced to almost nothing [see Stevens v. Mid-Hants Railway Co. (23)].

In the case of Blackburn Building Society v. Cunliffe Eooks & Co. (24) Lord Selborne, L. C., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, after deciding the question of the power of borrowing on the part of the Society, observed as follows as regards the rights of Bankers:—"And there is an equitable principle consistent with the law of which I have spoken, sound in itself, and also sufficiently established by authority which may entitle them, nevertheless, to some benefit from their securities; and if the facts of the case give them the benefit of that equitable principle, it is consistent with justice and with authority to say that irregularity of either the form or the substance of their course of dealing shall not stand in the way of justice due to them." Again, at page 71: "Regarded in that light, it is consistent with the general principle of equity, that those who pay legitimate demands which they are bound in some way or other to meet, and have had the benefit of other people's money advanced to them for that purpose, shall not retain that benefit so as, in substance, to make those other people pay their debts. I take that to be a principle sufficiently sound in equity; and if the result is that by the transaction which assumes the shape of an advance or loan nothing is really added to the liabilities of the Company, there has been no real transgression of the principle on which they are prohibited from borrowing. Well, applying that in the present case, we think that, as far as it can be made out that the moneys which were advanced by the Bankers simply went to pay the legitimate debts and liabilities of Society, the Bankers ought to have the benefit of their security." This decision was affirmed on appeal [Cunliffe Brooks & Co., v. Blackburn and District Benefit Building Society (25)]. Lord Blackburn, in delivering the judgment of the House of Lords, made the following observations:—"Any persons, whether the Bankers or any one else, might pay off the creditors and stand in the shoes of the creditor who is paid off....As I have already intimated, there could not, in my opinion, have been any objection made against the claim of a person who, whether at the request of the managers or without it, and whether a Banker or not, paid off one to whom the Society was liable, and either by express or implied bargain purchased the claim of the person who was paid off. He would not be entitled to claim as lender of the money; but he would be entitled to claim as assignee of the creditor whom he had paid off.

"The Court of Appeal, in the present case, held that though there was nothing that amounted to an assignment to the Bankers of the claims of those who were paid off by the money advanced, yet if it could be shown that such claims were in fact paid off thereby, there was an equity in substance to give them, the Bankers, the same benefit as if there had been such an assignment. This is an important decision. It seems to be justice; whether it is technical equity is a question which, I think, is not now before this House."

In the case of Neath Building Society v. Luce (26) Obity, J. said as follows:—

"The second question arises in working out the equity of the person who has lent to the Society sums in excess of their borrowing power. Such sums it is clear he cannot recover on the contract of loan, but it is also established that he has an equity of subrogation which is expressed by Lord Selborne in Blackburn Building Society v. Cunliffe Brooks & Co. (24) as a right to be re-paid such portion of the amount lent as went to pay the legitimate debts of the society. To this extent the lender is entitled to stand in the shoes of the creditors. But that case also contains a further illustration of this right of the lender. If the Society has made advances to members out of the amount lent, and obtains securities in respect of these advances, then the lender is entitled also to have the benefit of these securities."

I may also refer to the judgment of Romer, J., in the case of Chetwynd v. Allen (27) of Warrington, J., in Butler v. Rice (28) of Mockerjee, J., in Gurdeo Singh v. Ohandrikha Singh (29) and of Stanley, O. J., and Banerji, J., in Har Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad (30) in support of the view which I am taking in this case.

The general rule, therefore, is that 'one who advances money to pay off a charge becomes in equity a transferee of the charge and intends to keep it alive.' This is well expressed by Sir Rash Behary Ghose at page 348 of his book already referred to : —

"Strictly speaking, therefore, when one of several mortgagors redeems a mortgage, he is entitled to be treated as an assignee of the security which he may enforce in the usual way for the purpose of reimbursing himself. It is true section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act allows only a charge on the interests of the co-mortgagors. But whatever may be the true construction of this unskillfully drawn and clumsily worded section, I venture to think it does not impose any new burden, and the charge would have the same priority as the security which has been redeemed on the principle that the benefit of subrogation may be claimed by any person who redeems a mortgage on an estate in which he is only partially interested. Tenants for life, lessees, and purchasers of a part of the mortgaged estate, all come within this rule, and are entitled to enforce any security redeemed by them against other persons interested in the equity of redemption for their proportion of the mortgage-debt." The result is that the second point taken on behalf of the appellant also fails.

The learned Pleader for the plaintiff-respondent drew our attention to section 81 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882). That section in terms does not advance the case of the plaintiff any further than that all the three items of properties are liable to contribute rateably to the debt of Fakhraddin. It, however, seems to be settled law "that the owner of one of those properties who pays off the mortgage shall have a charge on another for any portion of the debt. [Vide Ray Ali Mohammad Khan v. Court of Wards, Bishunpur Estate (14)]. The rule is stated by Fisher in his Law of Mortgage, Sixth Edition, section 1347, in the following words:—"The effect of the equitable doctrines of contribution and marshalling is shortly as follows:—if several estates, whether of one or of several owners, be mortgaged for or subject equally (and not one as surety or collateral security for the other) to one debt; or if the owner of several estates, having mortgaged one of them, charges his real estate with or devises it in trust for payment of his debts and the estates descend or are devised to different persons (for the rule will not hold where they come to the same person) and though one of them pass by a specific and the other by a residuary devise; the several estates shall contribute rateably to the debt; being valued for the purpose, after deducting from each estate any other incumbrance by which it is affected; and a vendor's lien being reckoned like any other incumbrance." But that each item of the property is burdened with a charge for the proportionate amount is not enough for the success of the plaintiff's claim. The real question is one of 'priority' as against the incumbrances existing in favour of the appellant. This question I have already answered in favour of the respondent. No other point was argued before us.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Where the sale to be set aside has taken place in execution of a mortgage decree a proceeding under Order XXI, rule 89, is essentially a proceeding by way of redemption. This is evident from the fact that the sale is set aside not on payment of sale price but of the decretal amount. The plaintiff's right to get the sale set aside arises in virtue of his having an interest in the equity of redemption of a portion of the mortgaged property, namely, 45 bighas of Atwatman which he purchased in execution of a simple money decree. This is, therefore, a case in which one of several mortgagors has redeemed the mortgaged property and obtained possession thereof and is, as the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly held, exactly covered by section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The only other question is the point of time from which the plaintiff's charge is to be reckoned. This is not stated in section 95, but the true answer clearly is that it is the date from which he became a co-mortgagor, i.e., the date of his purchase. Once he has acquired a right to redeem he cannot be made liable for subsequent incumbrances to which he was not a party. The interpretation contended for by the appellant, namely, that his charge is subsequent to any incumbrances by the owners of other portions of property right up to the date when the sale was set aside, would lead to results, on the face of them, inequitable and absurd. Suppose A and B are owners of two properties mortgaged to C, and that C is about to take proceedings to enforce his mortgage. A is in a position to redeem B is not. B proceeds to incur further loans on the security of his property until the equity of redemption is worth nothing. Clearly A's charge cannot be made subject to these later incumbrances. It would be useless giving charge on the property of the co-mortgagors if the latter are to have it in their power at any time to render the right valueless.

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Collector, duty of—Failure of Collector to consider matters indicated in section—Sanction, validity of.

Although it is desirable that a Collector, before granting sanction for a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, should consider whether the trust is a public trust, whether there are prima facie grounds for holding that there has been a breach of such trust and whether the persons suing are persons who have an interest in the trust, yet his failure to consider these matters, does not in any way invalidate a sanction granted by him.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 24th April 1917.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case, who claim to be the Mutwallis of a mosque, sued for the removal of the Imam, actual possession of the mosque and other reliefs. They obtained sanction for the suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, from the Collector, but this sanction was held by the District Judge not to be a proper sanction in law and the suit was, therefore, dismissed as not maintainable. Against this decision the plaintiffs have appealed.

The first point raised is that the Court-fee viz., Rs. 10, is insufficient. The Court-fee payable is admittedly that paid in the first Court, and Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondent claims that the appeal should, therefore, be dismissed. He refers especially to Lekh Ram v. Ram, i Das (1) as an authority in his favour. In this case, however, the question of Court-fee came up before the admitting Judge and that Judge then expressed his doubt as to the Court-fee payable and ordered the question to come before the Division Bench hearing the case. In these circumstances, we consider that the appellants were to some extent justified in postponing the payment of Court-fee which they declared before the admitting Judge that they were ready to pay as directed. We have, therefore, directed that the full Court fee shall be put in by 4 P. M. to-day, and as Counsel undertook that this will be done, we proceeded to hear the appeal. The Court fee was duly paid.

As for the merits of the case, it is clear that the Collector in giving sanction in no way exercised his judgment as to whether the case was one in which he should grant sanction. His order was to the effect that it was his practice never to refuse permission unless there was a likelihood of the breach of the peace or of public trust funds being dissipated in useless litigation or unless the matter was so politically important that a decision by executive authority was preferable. From his order it is clear that he did not consider whether the persons suing were persons who had an interest in the trust or whether the trust was a public trust and whether there were prima facie grounds for holding that there had been a breach of such trust. The District Judge held that his omission to consider such points was a vital defect and that the sanction was not a valid one. He based his decision on Sajedur Raja Chowdhury v. Gur Mohun Das (2) and Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondent has argued his case on the same lines. Section 92 itself, however, requires no particular consideration of any of the above questions by the Collector and the remarks in Saeedur Raja Chowdhuri v. Gour Mohan Das (2) are entirely obiter. Mr. Moti Sagar has been able to refer us to no authority that the Collector is required in his order to show that he has considered the points referred to in the Calcutta judgment, and there is no other authority of any Indian Court in favour of this proposition. While, therefore, we agree with the remarks of the Calcutta High Court to this extent that it is desirable that a Collector before giving sanction should exercise his judgment on the lines indicated we do not consider that a failure to do so in any way invalidates the sanction granted.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and remand the case for decision on the merits. Costs will be costs in the cause and the Court fees paid in this appeal will be refunded.

Appeal accepted.

The interest of a monthly tenant in property which is being acquired under the Land Acquisition Act comes to an end when the property vests in the Collector under section 16 of the Act. The effect of the acquisition and the resultant vesting is equally effective and complete in the case of acquisition undertaken by Government on the application of the Commissioner under section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. [p 573 col. 2.]

The vesting contemplated by section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act is such as would result under the Land Acquisition Act. [p 573, col. 2.]

Section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act pro tanto modifies the provisions in the Land Acquisition Act so as to vest the property in the Corporation on payment of compensation awarded, instead of in the Government and, therefore, no transfer from Government to the Corporation is needed. [p. 574, col. 1.]

The provisions of section 31 of the Land Acquisition Act do not apply in the case of acquisitions made by virtue of the provisions of section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act and payment of the compensation amount by the Commissioner is enough. [p 574, col. 1.]

The Crown is not bound by the provisions of any Act unless directly or by necessary implication referred to therein, and for this purpose the Crown means not only the King but also Officers of State acting on behalf of the Crown in discharge of their executive duties. The provisions of the Bombay Rent Act, therefore, cannot affect the rights and powers of Government and their Officers under the Land Acquisition Act. [p 575, col. 1.]

The Bombay Rent Act was not intended to apply to premises acquired under the Land Acquisition Act for public purposes. The whole object of such an acquisition is to get the land immediately for useful public purposes and it would be defeating that object to lay down that the public body acquiring the land is not entitled to immediate possession. The general provisions of the Rent Act cannot be held by implication to repeal and override particular and special enactments like the Land Acquisition Act and the Municipal Act. [p. 574, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—In the year 1917 the Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay adopted in its final form a scheme for the widening of Churchgate Street and Armenian Lane within the Fort of the City of Bombay, and for the development of that portion of the Fort which was under their consideration ever since 1914, and determined for that purpose to acquire certain properties abutting on those streets. Having failed to acquire the properties by private agreement with the owners thereof, it was considered necessary to have resort to the provisions of section 91 of the City of

BOMBAY MUNICIPALITY v. DAMODAR BROS.

Bombay Municipal Act. The Municipal Commissioner, with the approval of the Standing Committee, moved the Government of Bombay to acquire these properties on behalf of the Corporation under the Land Acquisition Act. The Government of Bombay thereupon, on the 23rd of July 1917, notified the acquisition of five plots in Armenian Lane called plots I to V (Exhibit A). On the 1st of December 1917 the Governor-in-Council issued the necessary notification for the acquisition of seven plots situated in Churchgate Street, called the plots VI to XII in the said notification (Exhibit B). Exhibit H is the plan showing the nature of the scheme and the properties to be acquired. The plots marked I to V on the plan are covered by the notification Exhibit A, and the plots marked VI to XII on plan Exhibit H are comprised in notification Exhibit B. The properties involved in this litigation are properties V and VI on the plan Exhibit H. Property V is situated in Armenian Lane and property VI is situated at the junction of the Churchgate Street and Esplanade Road. Sir Mahomed Yusuf was the owner of both these properties and he had let the said properties to one Diveshwar Parshotam under the lease, dated 12th of December 1917 for a period of three years from the 1st of November 1917.

After the properties were notified for acquisition as stated above, the Collector proceeded to determine the compensation payable to Sir Mahomed Yusuf in respect of these properties. The persons claiming to share in the compensation to be awarded were, Sir Mahomed Yusuf, the Gresham Life Assurance Society, who claimed certain easements on the properties acquired, and Government, to whom certain annual payments were made for the land. The lessee, Diveshwar, had no claim to share in the compensation to be awarded, because by clause 16 of his lease, it was provided that in case the buildings were required by any public body or Government, the lease was to be null and void.

By the time the proceedings before the Collector terminated, but before his award was actually published, the Executive Engineer of the Municipality and Sir Mahomed Yusuf came to an agreement that was embodied in the correspondence Exhibit

D, whereby, in consideration of Sir Mahomed Yusuf agreeing to pay the portion of the compensation payable to the Gresham Life Assurance Society and to Government and his further agreeing not to claim from the Municipal Corporation the compensation payable to himself, the Municipality agreed to convey to Sir Mahomed Yusuf the residue of the land acquired from him after retaining the portion necessary for the purpose of widening the street and also in addition certain strip of land which the Municipality were to get under the arrangement with the Wadia Trust being the owners of property No. XI. Sir Mahomed Yusuf also agreed to pay the costs of any suit or suits that the Municipality might have to file for the purpose of ejecting the occupants of the said premises. The above arrangement was approved by the Municipal Corporation, but no conveyance has yet been given to Sir Mahomed Yusuf.

The Executive Engineer informed the Collector of the above arrangement and he thereupon, on the 24th of November 1919, published his award (which was ready in July but the publication of which was postponed because of the negotiations that were going on between the Municipality and Sir Mahomed Yusuf) whereby he fixed the amount of compensation at Rs. 19,84,948 and apportioned the same as follows:—

	Rs.
Sir Mahomed Yusuf	... 19,61,652
The Gresham Life Assurance Society	... 21,300
Government	... 1,996

By his letter of the same date, the Collector forwarded the award to the Municipal Commissioner and requested him to arrange to send his Surveyor, on the 4th of December 1919, to receive charge of the land from the Collector's Surveyor. On the 3rd of December 1919, the Executive Engineer forwarded to the Collector two cheques of Sir Mahomed Yusuf for the amounts payable respectively to the Gresham Life Assurance Society and to Government. The Collector paid those amounts to the parties concerned.

On the 9th of December 1919 the Collector's Surveyor and the manager of Sir Mahomed Yusuf signed Exhibit M, wherein it is recorded that they had respectively handed over and taken charge of plots Nos. V and VI. On the same day the Collector's Surveyor wrote a letter (Exhibit N-2) to Mr. Jamshedji Fitter, the Acquisition Officer of the Municipality, and sent along with it what is called a charge-receipt for these properties and the same was signed by Mr. Fitter and the Collector's Surveyor (Exhibit J), whereby it is recorded that they had respectively taken and handed over charge of the said plots.

The Municipality, by their letter of the 22nd of December 1919, required the occupants of these properties who were monthly tenants of the said Diveshwar to vacate the premises in their occupation by the 31st of December 1919. Some of the occupants have vacated the premises in their occupation and others have remained on the premises on the understanding with the Municipality that they would vacate on a fortnight's notice. The defendants disregarded the said notices and the Municipal Corporation has filed these suits for recovery of possession from the present defendants, and the second plaintiff Sir Mahomed Yusuf has been joined as co-plaintiff out of caution, as the plaint says, by reason of the agreement with him. The defendants in Suit No. 910, Messrs. M. Damodar Brothers are the occupants of premises comprised in No. V on Exhibit H, and the defendants in Suits Nos. 911, 912, 955 and 956 are occupants of premises comprised in No. VI. It was agreed that all these suits should be tried together as many of the points arising in these cases were common.

Several questions of law were raised and were argued at considerable length by Counsel appearing for the various parties. It is contended on behalf of the first plaintiff that, by virtue of the provisions of section 91 (2) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, the properties vested absolutely in the Corporation who thereby acquired all existing interests in the property and that such vesting gets rid of everybody, that the provisions of the Rent Act do not apply in the case of the occupants of such premises and that, even if the Rent Act applies, there is satisfactory cause for the recovery of possession. It was contended for the defense, (1) that there was no vesting of the premises in dispute in the Corporation, because the provisions of the City of Bombay Municipal Act and the Land Acquisition Act had not been complied with; (2) that when property vests in the Corporation under section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act such vesting is not of such an absolute character as the vesting in Government under section 16 of the Land Acquisition Act; and (3) that, in any event, the Bombay Rent Act applied, and that, under the circumstances of the case, there was not sufficient cause for ejecting the defendants within the meaning of the proviso to section 9 of the Bombay Rent Act. The special circumstances regarding the different defendants were also gone into in support of the contention that if decrees were passed in favour of the Corporation the defendants should be given considerable time for giving possession in order to enable them to make other arrangements.

Under section 16 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, when the Collector has made the award he may take possession of the land which shall thereupon vest absolutely in the Government free from all incumbrances; and, under section 47, if the Collector is opposed or impeded in taking possession of the land, he can enforce the surrender himself, if he is a Magistrate, or, if not a Magistrate can apply to the Commissioner of Police to enforce such surrender. It is not denied that the interest of a monthly tenant comes to an end when the property vests in the Collector under section 16. The effect of the acquisition and the resultant vesting must, to my mind, be equally effective and complete in the case of acquisition undertaken by Government on the application of the Commissioner under section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. Reliance was placed on the fact that, while section 16 of the Land Acquisition Act and section 41 of the City of Bombay Improvement Trust Act spoke of vesting absolutely and free from all encumbrances, section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act merely used the expression 'vest.' But I think that when the Municipal Act provides for acquisition by resorting to the Land Acquisition Act the vesting contemplated is such as would result under the latter Act. It was contended that under section 16 of the Land Acquisition Act the properties could only vest in the Government and as the Government had not conveyed the properties to the Corporation, the latter had acquired no title to the properties and reference was made to the provisions of Part VII of the Land Acquisition Act which deals with acquisition of land for Companies and it was pointed out that section 41 contemplated the transfer of the acquired land by Government to the Company concerned. I think section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act pro tanto modifies the provisions in the Land Acquisition Act so as to vest the property in the Corporation on payment of compensation awarded, instead of in the Government and, therefore, no transfer from Government to the Corporation is needed.

It was contended, further, that, inasmuch as the Collector had not tendered payment of the compensation awarded to Sir Mahomed Yusuf and had not paid it to him as required by section 31 of the Land Acquisition Act, the Collector was not entitled to take possession and hand it over to the Municipality. I do not think the provisions of section 31 apply in the case of acquisitions made by virtue of the provisions of section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act and payment of the compensation amount by the Commissioner is enough.

It was next contended that in fact no possession was taken by the Collector and handed over to the Municipality and that Exhibits 2, M, N and J were merely paper transactions. I am unable to regard these as merely paper transactions. Moreover, in the case of acquisitions under section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act I do not think the taking of possession by the Collector and his handing over the same to the Municipality is necessary. As I have pointed out above, the property vests directly in the Corporation without the intervention of Government or the Collector, and when the property is so vested in the Corporation, they are entitled to take possession, which they are seeking to do by these suits.

Then it is contended that, inasmuch as the compensation awarded to Sir Mahomed Yusuf has admittedly not been paid and the arrangement arrived at with him had the effect to avoid such payment, even if it was not entered into for that very purpose, the provisions of section 91, clause (2), were not complied with and the property did not vest in the Corporation. When the Collector informed Sir Mahomed Yusuf of his award on the 24th of November, Sir Mahomed Yusuf replied to the Collector on the 23rd of December 1919 to the following effect:—

"I beg to state that my claim for compensation amounting to Rs. 19,61,652.0.0 as mentioned in the award has been satisfied by reason of the arrangement arrived at between the Municipal Corporation and me and which is embodied in my letter to the Municipal Executive Engineer, dated the 29th September 1919 and his letter to me, dated the 5th November 1919."

I think the money was to all intents and purposes paid to Sir Mahomed Yusuf, although the money did not actually change hands as the Municipality retained the same as the price of the land that they had agreed to convey to Sir Mahomed Yusuf. The Municipality could have given a cheque for the amount to Sir Mahomed Yusuf and he could have immediately returned it to them in fulfilment of his agreement. Such a formality was unnecessary. I, therefore, hold that the property, the subject-matter of these suits, vested absolutely in the Municipal Corporation and that such vesting put an end to all interests in the property.

Then, the question arises whether in such a case the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act apply. I think that the Bombay Rent Act was not intended to apply to premises acquired under the Land Acquisition Act for public purposes. The whole object of such an acquisition is to get the land immediately for useful public purposes and it would be defeating that object to lay down that the public body acquiring the land is not entitled to immediate possession. The general provisions of the Rent Act cannot be held by implication to repeal and override particular and special enactments like the Land Acquisition Act and the Municipal Act; Dodds v. Shepherd (1). As already pointed out, under section 47 of the Land Acquisition Act the Collector is empowered to summarily enforce surrender of possession without the intervention of any Court and the Rent Act cannot override that provision. Moreover, the Crown is not bound by the provisions of any Act unless directly or by necessary implication referred to therein and for this purpose the Crown means not only the King but also Officers of State acting on behalf of the Crown in discharge of their executive duties. The provisions of the Rent Act, therefore, cannot affect the rights and powers of Government and their Officers under the Land Acquisition Act.

BOMBAY MUNICIPALITY v. DAMODAR EROS,

But whatever that may be, assuming that the Rent Act applies, I have no doubt that the premises are required by the Corporation for a satisfactory cause. The evidence of Mr. Mackison, the Executive Engineer of the Municipality, shows that the whole scheme of the widening of the Churchgate Street and Armenian Lane hangs together and they cannot get on with the scheme till they get possession of the premises, the subject-matter of these suits. Plots Nos. I, II, III and IV are all cleared now and a good number of the tenants of plots Nos. V and VI have agreed to remain on the premises in their occupation on the understanding that they would vacate on forty-eight hours' notice and some of them to whom such notices have been served have already vacated. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary for the Municipality to get possession of the premises occupied by the defendants in these suits in order to enable them to carry out the whole scheme and to fulfil their obligations under the agreement with Sir Mahomed Yusuf. The plans submitted to the Municipality by Sir Mahomed Yusuf for the development of the areas that would go to him have been passed and the buildings according to these plans can only be constructed if the Municipality can obtain possession of the premises, the subject-matter of these suits.

There is no doubt that with regard to some of the defendants, it is considerable hardship that they are required to vacate the premises in their occupation. This is particularly the case with Messrs. M. Damodar Brothers, the defendants in Suit

No. 910, and Messrs. D. Macropolo and Co., the defendants in Suit No. 912. But where any scheme of large public utility, such as the Municipality have undertaken in this instance, is to be carried out, individual hardship of this character is unavoidable. Mr. Mackison deposed that when the scheme is fully carried out, the Churchgate Street and Armenian Lane will be considerably widened, to the great convenience of the congested public traffic in those streets and the development of this quarter will provide double the letting space for offices of what is available at present.

It is contended that the notice given by the Municipality on the 22nd of December to vacate by the 31st of December 1919 was not a sufficient notice and that, therefore, these suits must fail and that the Municipality can sue for possession only after giving a month's notice to vacate. The lease of Diveshwar, as already pointed out, terminated on the acquisition and on such determination the monthly tenancies of the under-lessees, the defendants, also came to an end. Thereafter they remained on the premises merely as tenants on sufferance and they were not entitled to a month's notice.

It is contended that the Municipality should at present take possession only of the portions actually required to be thrown into streets to be widened. Even if this were practicable, it would upset and virtually make it impossible to carry out the whole scheme which involves re-selling of the areas not actually thrown into the streets for the purpose of carrying out the scheme economically and beneficially in the public interests. Section 296 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act expressly empowers the Municipality to acquire in addition to the land actually required for widening any public street all such land and buildings outside the intended regular line of such street as it shall deem expedient and to sell such additional land.

Only a small portion of the premises occupied by Messrs. Javeri and Co. the defendants in Suit No. 911, is to be utilised in widening the Armenian Lane, but the rest of the area the Municipality have agreed to give to Mongini Brothers in consideration of their removing the portion of their premises within the set-back line in the Churchgate Street, except a little strip which they have arranged to give to Sir Cowasji Jehangir, the owner of plots Nos. VII and VIII, as part of the arrangement with him. There is really no hardship in the case of Messrs. Javeri and Co. They have hired other premises into which they have already removed part of their offices and stock. With regard to Messrs. Dharamai and Co., the defendants in Suit No. 955, and the Madras United Spinning and Weaving Mills Co. Limited, the defendants in Suit No. 956, there is no particular hardship. With regard to Messrs. M. Damodar Brothers and Messrs. D. Macropolo and Co, as well as with regard to the other defendants, it must be remembered that they had ample warning about their being required to vacate their premises. The notifications for the acquisition of the properties occupied by them were promulgated as early in 1917, and they must be perfectly aware that the acquisition was being proceeded with. A petition on behalf of various occupants, including some of the defendants in these suits, was addressed to the Municipal Corporation praying that the time for demolishing the buildings in Churchgate Street be extended (Exhibit K). On the 9th of September 1919, the Standing Committee resolved not to comply with the request of the applicants and, on the 3rd of November 1919, the Corporation declined to interfere, and the applicants were informed of this on the 7th of November 1919. The applicants presented a petition to Government and, on the 5th of February 1920, the Government refused to comply with the request of the applicants to delay the scheme (Exhibit L). Under the circumstances, I think that the Municipality must succeed and the defendants should be ordered to vacate the premises in their occupation and to hand over vacant possession thereof to the first plaintiff. In view of the fact, however, that there is monsoon at present, I direct that execution of the decrees be stayed till the 5th of October next. The defendants must pay to the first plaintiff compensation for use and occupation as prayed in the plaints in the respective suits from the 1st of January 1920 except in the case of the defendants in Suits Nos. 910 and 956 of 1920 who must pay such compensation from the 1st of February 1920. The defendants must pay the costs of the first plaintiff. The second plaintiff has, I believe, not incurred any separate costs, but if he has, he must bear his own costs. It was really not necessary to have joined him as plaintiff.

The law of pre-emption may be evaded by any legal means, and there is nothing illegal in a man becoming a proprietor in a village under an exchange where he apprehends that a sale effected in his favour would be pre-empted. [p. 578, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 18th December 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Ferozepore, dated the 25th August 1916.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case are residents of Sadai Jaimal Singh. They instituted a suit for possession by pre-emption of 235 kannals, 18 marlas of land situate in their village on payment of Rs. 4,500 which they alleged to be its market-value. The land in suit had originally belonged to Ganda Singh, a resident of the plaintiffs' village, and had been parted with by him to Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh, residents of Dhindsab, under a deed of exchange, dated the 15th March 1915. The plaintiffs alleged that although this deed purported to be a deed of exchange, the transaction was really a sale under the guise of an exchange. The Trial Court accepted the view advanced by the plaintiffs and granted them a decree for possession of the said land on payment of Rs. 3,655. Against this decree Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh preferred an appeal to the District Judge who came to the conclusion that the transaction had not been shown to be anything other than what the deed described it to be, that is, that it had not been shown to be a sale, and the plaintiffs' suit was thereupon dismissed. They have now come up to this Court in second appeal, and on their behalf we have heard Mr. Aziz Ahmad, while Mr. Sheo Narain has addressed us on behalf of the respondents.

The document before us, which was executed on the 15th March 1915, is, in its terms, clearly and unmistakably a deed of exchange. It purports to exchange 235 kanals, 15 marlas of land situate in Badni belonging to Ganda Singh for 225 kanals, 17 marlas of land situate in Dhindsah belonging to Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh. Ganda Singh's land was under mortgage: 154 kanals, 8 marlas were under mortgage to Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh for Rs. 2,400. The remainder, 81 kanals, 10 marlas, was, (together with other land with which this transaction is not concerned) mortgaged to one Jaimal Singh for Rs. 4,500. The period for this mortgage was ten years, of which seven years still remained. On the day following the execution of this deed, Ganda Singh mortgaged the land he had taken from Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh in Dhindsah to Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh: 157 kanals, 8 marlas were mortgaged for Rs. 4,928-8-0 the term being ten years: 78 kanals, 10 marlas were left in possession of Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh and were to remain in their possession until such time as Ganda Singh redeemed the mortgage in favour of Jaimal Singh, referred to above, and thus released the 81 kanals, 10 marlas which were in possession of Jaimal Singh as mortgagee. Mr. Aziz Ahmad, who argued his clients' case with great ability, contended that, inasmuch as Ganda Singh did not get possession of any of the land in Dhindsah and as the mortgage of 157 kanals, 8 marlas of the Dhindsah land for

Rs. 4,928-8-0 was far in excess of the real value of the land, it should be held that the parties to this deed of exchange intended the transaction to be a sale, the consideration being the sum of Rs. 4,928-8-0. He contended that the circumstances disclosed the fact that Ganda Singh would practically never be able to redeem this Dhindsah land, having regard to the excessive charge thereon, and that, therefore, it should be regarded as clear evidence indicating that he intended to sell that land. In support of his contention our attention was drawn to Gul Muhammad v. Sabz Ali Khan (1). There, a deed of exchange was executed on the 19th January 1912 under which Khair Muhammad, etc., exchanged certain land with land belonging to Gul Muhammad. On the 21st January 1912 Khair Muhammad, etc., sold the land they had taken in exchange for Rs. 13,100. On these facts it was held that the intention of the parties was to effect a sale and not an exchange. After giving due weight to Mr. Aziz Ahmad's contention, we are unable to hold that the present case is on all fours with the one relied on by the learned Counsel. In that case there was a complete sale of the land taken in exchange, while in the present case the land taken by Ganda Singh has not been sold. He is entered in the revenue records as the owner and possesses all the proprietor's rights in the land. The land he gave situated in Badni was, as stated above, heavily encumbered. Not unnaturally, Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh got the encumbrances on the land taken by them transferred to the land given to Ganda Singh in exchange. As far as we can see, Ganda Singh was in precisely the same position qua the land taken by him as he was in regard to the land that he gave in exchange. We agree with Mr. Sheo Narain in his contention that, so long as the mortgage continues, it cannot be held to be irredeemable. As pointed out by the learned District Judge, the real values of the land in question are not known. For the purposes of the deed of exchange, the parties fixed a sum of Rs. 5,500 as the value of their respective lands. We agree with the learned District Judge in thinking that this valuation was purely an arbitrary one and cannot be regarded as conclusively fixing the real market value.

Chet Singh and Sarmukh Singh have made no secret of the object they had in effecting this exchange. They frankly admitted that they desired to obtain a footing in Mauza Badni and were unable to do so by buying land therein, the reason being that any purchase made by them would be open to a pre-emption suit. In order to attain their end, they thought out this method of evading the law of pre-emption. It has been repeatedly held that the law of pre-emption may be evaded by legal means, and there is nothing illegal in effecting an exchange. We agree with the learned District Judge in holding that the present transaction has not been shown to be other than what it purports to be, viz., an exchange, and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Rule 74 of the Rules and Bye-laws of the Ahmedabad Municipality is not ultra vires [p. 579, col. 1.]

The effect of that rule is that, for any particular year, the Municipality is entitled to such amount as house and property tax as is determined by the beginning of the year, and not to any increase that may be determined at any time during the year. [p. 579, col. 1.]

Where the Municipality increases a tax without complying with the provisions of rule 74, the assessee is bound to pay only that amount which was fixed for the next preceding year and any excess levied by the Municipality can be recovered by him. [p. 580, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover certain taxes said to have been illegally levied by the Ahmedabad Municipality. In the lower Courts the case has been disposed of on somewhat different grounds, but in the result a refund of the excess of the drainage-tax claimed by the plaintiff is allowed, but a refund of the house and property-tax is not allowed. In the appeal before us, a refund of the excess amount levied in respect of the house and property-tax for the year 1911-12 is claimed on the ground that rule No. 74 of the Rules and Bye-laws of the Ahmedabad Municipality, which were in force at the time, has not been complied with. It is stated that the assessment list with the proposed alteration for the year 1911-12 was published in April 1911, and the notice of the proposed increase in the tax was given to the plaintiff by the Municipality on the 20th of June. The plaintiff objected to the enhancement on the 12th July, but a demand was made for the enhanced amount on the 14th July. A further protest was made by the plaintiff on the 30th July and his objections were heard and disposed of in December 1911 by the officer authorised to deal with such objections. Ultimately, a notice of demand was served on the 27th January 1912 and the amount claimed by the Municipality for the year 1911-12 was paid under protest. I mention these dates as stated on behalf of the plaintiff and not challenged on behalf of the defendant with respect to the proposed enhancement relating to one property though the whole amount levied was in respect of several properties. These dates in substance are applicable to the full demand made by the Municipality with reference to all the properties, as to which a refund is claimed.

The two grounds urged in support of this claim for refund before us are that, under section 65, sub-section (4), there was no proper authentication of the list in so far as the officer required by the clause to sign the list did not do so; and, secondly, that the provisions of rule 74 were not complied with at all. As regards the first objection, I do not think that there is any substance in it. It may be that if the list is not signed it could not be accepted as conclusive evidence as provided by sub-section (c). But I do not see how the mere fact that the officer did not sign the list could affect the question as to whether the levy was legal or not, particularly when the amount fixed under the list is not challenged before us.

The second objection which is based on rule 74 seems to me to be good. The rules in question were originally framed under section 32, clause (h), of Bombay Act II of 1884, and under section 2 of the present District Municipal Act these rules were in force in 1911. This position is not challenged on behalf of the Municipality. If the rule is not ultra vires it is clear to my mind, from the provisions of this rule, that the intended increase in the house and property tax was to be notified to the house-owners concerned before the 1st of March. All objections to the proposed increase were to be lodged in writing in the Municipal Office before the 15th March, and the investigation was to be completed before the 1st of April and the payment of the tax for the official year was to be considered due on that date. That is, in the present case, if the provisions of this rule had been duly followed, by the 1st of April 1911, all objections should have been considered and the amount payable for the year 1911-12 determined. The effect of the rule seems to me to be that, for the year 1911-12, the Municipality would be entitled to such amount as is determined by the beginning of the year and not to any increase that may be determined at any time during the year. I am unable to agree with the lower Appellate Court on this point. The question is not whether the levy of the tax is illegal apart from rule 74, but the question to my mind is as to what was due to the Municipality by the present plaintiff by way of house and property-tax according to law. The rule distinctly indicates that the amount payable for the year is the amount fixed at the commencement of the year. Unless the increased amount was determined in the manner contemplated by rule 74, the only amount that could be said to be due by the owner for 1911-12 was the amount which was fixed for the next preceding year. I do not see anything unreasonable in this rule, and, if it is consistent with the provisions of the present Act, I am of opinion that it should be given effect to. If effect is given to it, it follows that the levy of the increased tax for the year 1911-12 was not justified. As a last resort, Mr. Mehta has urged on behalf of the Municipality that this rule is ultra vires and inconsistent with the provisions of Act III of 1901. In support of this argument, he relies upon section 67, sub-section (2). On a careful consideration of the scheme of the sections 63, 64, 65, 66 and 67, it is clear that under sub-section (2) of section 67 it is permissible to the Municipality to deal with the matters arising under sections 64, 65, 66 after the commencement of the official year in question. But there is nothing in the Act to show that the matters intended to be dealt with under section 65 must necessarily be dealt with after the commencement of the official year. For instance, section 66, sub-section (3), provides that any alteration made under that section shall have the same effect as if it had been made on the earliest day in the current official year in which the circumstance justifying the alteration existed. Though section 66 does not apply to the present case, sub-section (3) illustrates, to my mind, that when the Legislature intends that, even though the alteration is made after the commencement of the year, it should take effect on the earliest day in the particular official year in which the circumstance justifying the alteration exists an express provision to that effect is made. There is no such provision with reference to matters arising under section 65; and that indicates, in my opinion, that it was open to the Municipality to have such a rule as No. 74 with reference to matters arising under section 65. In prescribing the time when the objections were to be made by the house-owners and dealt with by the Municipality, there was nothing inconsistent with the provisions of the District Municipal

MUHAMMAD SAID V. SHAH NAWAZ.

Act of 1901. It is also clear to my mind that these provisions as to time, when a house-owner is to receive notice of the intended increase and his objections relating to the increase are to be decided, are within the scope of the powers of the Municipality to make rules concerning the levy of the taxes. The words of clause (1) of section 45 are wide enough to justify such a rule; and, though we are not strictly concerned with the question as to whether this rule was intra vires under the Act of 1884 it seems to me that, under clause (h) of section 32 of the Act of 1884, it was competent to the Municipality to have such a rule regulating the levy of the house and property tax. It is clear that this rule was binding upon the Municipality as well as upon the house-owners; and the non-compliance with that rule entitles the plaintiff to recover what has been levied by way of house and property-tax in excess of what was payable at the beginning of the year, which would be the amount fixed for the next preceding year. The correctness of the amount claimed by the plaintiff is not challenged on behalf of the Municipality.

The cross-objection with reference to the refund of the drainage tax has not been pressed.

I would, therefore, vary the decree of the lower Appellate Court by allowing to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 413-5-6 claimed in this second appeal. The plaintiff to have his costs throughout.

The cross objection is dismissed with costs.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 13 (o) — Agricultural land, what is.

The mere fact that a plot of land is assessed to land revenue would not make it agricultural land, unless it is proved that the plot is occupied or let for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture. [p 531, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 2nd March 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 5th of July 1919.

Lala Tiroth Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Obaidulla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue for possession of a piece of land in Manza Shish Mahal by right of pre-emption. They at first treated the land as urban land and claimed pre-emption on the ground of vicinage. The defendant denied that the custom of pre-emption existed in the locality in which the land was situate. The plaintiffs then, with the permission of the Court, amended the plaint and claimed pre-emption on the ground that the land was agricultural and that they were land-owners in the village, while the vendee was not, and they added, in the alternative, that if the land were held to be a residential site in the limits of the town of Lahore they were entitled to pre-empt on the ground of vicinage.

The Subordinate Judge found that the land was not agricultural, but was urban immoveable property, and also that the custom of pre-emption was not proved to exist in that locality, so he dismissed the suit.

On appeal the District Judge has held that the land is agricultural, and he has remanded the case for disposal of the other issues. The vendee has filed a second appeal in this Court.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that the appeal does not lie, on the ground that the question involved is one of custom, but I do not agree with the contention. The District Judge has not given any decision on the question whether the custom of pre-emption exists in the locality, but has decided only that the land is agricultural land within the meaning of the Pre-emption Act. The finding is one of law, and an appeal from the order of remand lies under Order XLIII, rule 1 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code.

I do not attach much importance to the first ground of appeal, in which it is contended that the plaintiffs should not have been allowed to amend their plaint. The fact appears to be that they were not certain themselves whether the land was urban or not, and when the vendee disputed the existence of the custom of pre-emption in the locality they thought it advisable to put forward alternative claims. I see no objection to the amendment of the plaint.

On the question whether the land in suit is agricultural I differ from the finding of the lower Appellate Court. The land is no doubt assessed to revenue, but in the last Settlement it was included in the category of residential or building sites and assessed at a rate higher than that which is charged for agricultural land. It has not been proved that the land is occupied or let for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture, and it is improbable that this small plot, only about 13 marlas in area, can be used for pasturing cattle. I hold, therefore, that the land in suit is not agricultural land.

The remaining points taken by the plaintiffs in their appeal in the lower Appellate Court have not yet been determined.

I accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court for a fresh decision of the appeal before it. Court-fee on the appeal in this Court to be refunded. Other costs will be costs in the case.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—One Narsingbhai was the owner of the suit property. On the 8th of January 1904 he entered into an agreement with the defendant in this suit to sell the property at the rate of Rs. 175 an acre and received Rs. 100 as earnest-money and agreed to pass a regular sale deed. Thereafter, he was attacked by plague and died before the sale deed could be executed. On the 30th of September his widow executed a sale-deed in favour of the defendant putting him in possession of the property. The consideration for the suit-property, at the rate of Rs. 175 an acre, was Rs. 1,307. Rs. 100 having been paid, the balance left was Rs. 1,267. The consideration paid by the defendant is said to have been made up as follows. He took over the mortgage due by the deceased in favour of one Arandibai for Rs. 1,000, and the interest then due amounting to Rs. 215 and a debt of Rs. 75 due to Government on account of taga-i making altogether Rs. 1,290, rather more than the actual balance due. The widow at that time was a minor and, therefore, under section 7 of the Transfer of Property Act, not being competent to contract to sell the property, she was not competent to transfer title. Thereafter, she adopted the present plaintiff who brought this suit in 1915 against the defendant to recover possession with subsequent mesne profits of the suit land and for other relief.

The learned Judge held that the plaintiff's adoption was proved, that Nandubai was a minor when the sale-deed (Exhibit 26) was passed, that the agreement to sell the land in suit by Nandubai to the defendant was proved and that the sale deed was passed by Nandubai, his widow, in pursuance of the said agreement. But he found that the sale-deed was obtained by the defendant by misrepresentation as stated by the plaintiff in the second paragraph of the plaint, and he finally came to the conclusion that the plaintiff could contend that the sale was invalid on account of the minority of Nandubai and on account of the misrepresentation as alleged by the plaintiff. He passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession if he paid within six months Rs 1,600 to the defendant as compensation for the cancellation of the sale-deed.

Now, when the agreement to sell was passed by Narsingbhan, the defendant acquired a right to a sale-deed on payment of the balance of the purchase-money, and if Narsingbhan had put the defendant into possession of the property without giving him a sale-deed, then, under the Full Bench decision of Bapu v. Kashinath (1), if at the time when the agreement was still capable of specific enforcement the vendor sued to recover possession it would be a valid defence that the vendee had been placed in possession of the property and was willing to perform his part of the agreement. The learned Judges considered that where a vendor, who has contracted to sell immoveable property and has under the contract put the prospective vendee in possession, repudiates the fiduciary obligation with regard to possession, he could not sue the latter in ejectment if the vendee was willing to complete the purchase. The learned Judges also stated as follows at page 112 : * "We are of opinion that a suit for specific performance is not the purchaser's only remedy, and that he may, in the circumstances stated in the question, if there are no other facts operating to his prejudice, successfully plead his contract of sale and the possession acquired under it." I presume that means, the vendee in possession under a contract of sale is not obliged to sue for specific performance and can resist any attempt by the vendor to eject him unless there are other facts, such as fraud or misrepresentation, which may operate to his prejudice. Then, is the defendant's position in this case inferior to that of the defendant in the case I have cited, merely because he was put into possession by the widow of the vendor and not by the vendor himself? No doubt the sale-deed cannot be considered as effecting a transfer of the property in the legal sense of the word. But there could be no objection to the widow putting the purchaser in possession and receiving the purchase price and so far carrying out the contract which had been entered into by her husband, and I cannot say that the widow herself could have successfully sued the present defendant for possession supposing she had not adopted. It must follow then that the present plaintiff, her adopted son, is in no better position than the adoptive mother, nor is he in any better position than Narsingbhan would have been if he had given possession to the purchaser in his lifetime. That appears to me to be the true answer to the question arising in this case, and there is, therefore, no need to consider any of the points which have been dealt with by the learned Trial Judge. In any case it cannot be said that there are any equities in favour of the plaintiff. We are dealing with a transaction which, apart from the validity of the sale-deed, was completed in 1904. Although after his adoption the plaintiff was still of tender years, he must have known, long before the suit was filed, about this transaction, and it was only in 1915 when, as the learned Judge points out, the value of this property had increased to a considerable extent that he sought to take advantage of the fact that his adoptive mother passed a sale-deed before she attained majority, in order to defeat the defendant's rights.

In my opinion, the decree of the learned Judge must be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Fawcett, J.—I think the main question in this appeal is, whether the present case falls under the Full Bench ruling in Bapu v. Kashinath (1), or whether it has been rightly distinguished from that case by the lower Court. To satisfy the conditions of the principle laid down in that case it is, first of all, a requisite that the agreement to sell the property to the defendant shall still be capable of specific enforcement. On this point I think the contention that such a suit by the defendant would not be time-barred is correct. The case is, of course, governed by Article 113 of the Indian

IVATURY ATCHAMMA v. IVATURY PAPIAH,

Limitation Act, under which the prescribed period of three years begins to run from the date fixed for performance or, if no such date is fixed, when the plaintiff has notice that performance is refused. In this case the written contract, Exhibit 26, fixed no date for the performance, and the oral evidence as to that important term of the contract is conflicting and must, I think, be excluded under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. Then, the only question is, when was it that the plaintiff had notice that performance of this contract was refused? He had, in fact, a conveyance executed by the widow and he cannot, in my opinion, be said to have had any notice that performance was refused within the meaning of this Article 113 until the plea was raised that his conveyance was void as having been executed by a minor. There is no evidence that the defendant knew that the widow actually was a minor, and it would be giving a very inequitable meaning to the words if it were held, because the conveyance to sell was void, that, when the conveyance was executed, there was a refusal to perform the contract to sell. To that extent, therefore, I think the case must be held to fall within the Full Bench ruling.

The next question that arises is, whether the basis on which that ruling rests applies to the present case. It is held in the judgment of the Full Bench that, "where... a vendor, who has contracted to sell immovable property and has under the contract put the prospective vendee in possession, sues the latter in ejectment, he recondites if the vendee is willing to complete the purchase, the fiduciary obligation arising out of the contract and annexed to the ownership of the property, and seeks to treat the vendee as a trespasser. Once it is recognized that the plaintiff is violating his fiduciary obligation, it is clear that the Court cannot grant him the relief which he seeks, for it will not aid him in committing a breach of trust and his suit must fail; the defendant is no trespasser, but is in possession under the contract which the plaintiff has bound himself to carry out." This fiduciary obligation is there specifically described as arising out of the contract and annexed to the ownership of the property, and if that is a correct description, that fiduciary obligation attaches also to any legal representative of the vendor who has contracted to sell. Also, on principles of equity, it seems to me that the legal representative should be under the same obligation and not escape it merely because the original vendor has died. Consequently, I do not think that the lower Court was right in holding that this Full Bench ruling is distinguishable, because it was not the seller, but the seller's widow, that put the defendant in possession. It is not, I think, right to say that delivery of possession by the widow was non-existent in the eye of the law. It was an actual delivery of possession and it was a delivery of possession under a fiduciary obligation annexed to the ownership of the property.

Therefore, I think, the case falls under the Full Bench ruling and I agree in allowing the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, O. J.—In this case the estate of the last male owner descended to his widow and on her death in 1877 to their four surviving daughters. According to the law in this part of India, they inherited jointly a woman's estate in their father's property determinable on the death of the last survivor when the succession would devolve on the next heir of their father the last male owner. Sundaramma, one of the four daughters, excluded and held adversely to her three sisters, and, on the expiration of the statutory period of 12 years, their rights of suit became barred and their rights in the property were extinguished under section 28 of the Limitation Act, Act (IX of 1908). The present plaintiff, one of the excluded sisters, survived Sundaramma who died in 1895 and instituted within 12 years the present suit in which she sought to recover the estate by right of survivorship from Sundaramma's alienees and her son, the 7th defendant, who is at once heir to his mother's separate estate and the next reversioner to the estate of the last male owner. At the hearing of the appeal the plaintiff's claim to the whole of the estate was hardly pressed, but it was contended that, though she might have become barred as to her own share and the shares of her excluded sisters, she was, at any rate, entitled to succeed by survivorship to the share of her sister, Sundaramma, who continued in possession and enjoyment of the estate until her death, on the happening of which event, it was argued, the plaintiff became entitled for the first time to succeed to her share. In my opinion, this contention is untenable. It has never, so far as I know, been suggested that a member of an undivided family who has been excluded for the statutory period is entitled, on the death of any undivided co-parcener leaving no direct heirs to represent him, notwithstanding his own exclusion and the statutory extinguishment of his rights in the joint family property, to succeed with the other co-parceners by right of survivorship to the share of such deceased co-parcener. This contention ignores the fact that this so called right of survivorship is incident to the right of joint possession and enjoyment of the estate with the others who are jointly entitled, and cannot exist separately when the right of joint possession and enjoyment has been lost. This, in my opinion, is a rule of general jurisprudence applicable to all cases of joint tenancy. It is laid down in Coke on Littleton 183(a) where the right of survivorship is treated as a jus accrescendi or right of accretion to the existing interest of the surviving joint tenant, and a Latitio maxim is cited to the effect that there can be no such right of accretion in the absence of an existing interest.

It has also been expressly applied to India in Katama Natchiar v. Rajah of Shikha-gunga (1), where the Lords of the Judicial Committee, in negating the right of the other co-parceners to succeed to the separate property of a deceased co-parcener, lay down that the right of survivorship cannot exist apart from the right of joint possession and enjoyment.

"According to the principles of Hindu Law there is co-parcenaryship between the different members of a united family, and survivorship following upon it. There is community of interest and unity of possession between all the members of the family, and upon the death of any one of them the others may well take by survivorship that in which they had during the deceased's lifetime a common interest and a common possession. But the law of partition shows that as to the separately acquired property of one member of a united family, the other members of that family have neither community of interest nor unity of possession. The foundation, therefore, of a right to take such property by survivorship fails."

In the present case the plaintiff had no community of interest or unity of possession with her sister, Sundaramma, at the time of the latter's death and, therefore, in their

IVATURY ATCHAMMA v. IVATURY PAPIAH.

Lordship's language, the foundation of the plaintiff's right to take her sister's share by survivorship fails. This view is also supported by the decision of Jenkins, C. J., in Sachindra Kishore Dey v. Rani Kant Chuckerbutty (2). It would appear that it is unnecessary to decide the point, that the effect of the interests of the other sisters being barred and their rights being extinguished under the Limitation Act, was to enlarge the estate of Sundaramma and to give her an estate for her own life and the lives of her sisters determinable on the death of the last survivor. I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—One Veerasalingam died in 1864 leaving a widow and five daughters. The widow, Bangarammal, died in 1877. On her death, one of her daughters, Sundarammal, took possession of the entire estate and was in sole possession of it till she died in 1905. She made various alienations during her life time. Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 are the alienees, the 7th defendant is the son of Sundarammal. The plaintiff is the sole surviving daughter of Veerasalingam. She sues for the recovery of the property on the ground that, on the death of Sundarammal, she became entitled to it by survivorship.

One of the contentions of the defendants was that Veerasalingam was succeeded by a son and that, consequently, the plaintiff was not the nearest heir to the property, being the sister of the last male owner.

The Subordinate Judge held that Veerasalingam died last and we agree with him. The defendants have also raised the plea of limitation. The Subordinate Judge says with reference to it, in paragraph 27 of his judgment, that the plaintiff's right to recover the properties is barred by limitation. He has, however, decreed to her some items of the property apparently on the ground that she succeeded to the estate of her sister by survivorship. The plaintiff has preferred Appeal No. 247 in respect of the items disallowed and some of the alienees from the 7th defendant his mother have filed Appeal No. 256. Appeal No. 260 was allowed to be argued first as that raised a contention which, if successful, would render the hearing of the other appeal unnecessary.

(2) 27 Ind. Cas. 250; 18 C. W. N. 904.

It relates to portions of Items Nos. 2 and 3. A decree was given to the plaintiff for the other items, but as no appeal was preferred by the persons affected, we do not think that this is a proper case for exercising our power under Order XLI, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code, in their favour.

I shall now consider the plea of limitation. The estate which Sundarammal and the plaintiff has under the Hindu Law was only for life. On their death, the grand-son, tracing descent from his grand-father, will succeed to the full estate. To him the cause of action would arise under Article 141 of the Limitation Act (Act IX of 1908) on the death of the last of the life estate holders, namely, the plaintiff. Under the Limitation, Act XIV of 1859, adverse possession acquired against a life owner was held to bar the reversioner as well. The language of Article 141 of the present Act has been advisedly changed and the cause of action against the reversioner starts only on the death of the last life estate-holder.

Now, the question arises whether, on the death of Sundarammal, who held adversely to the plaintiff, the latter had any title to succeed to the property by survivorship. Mr. Rama Rao contended that what was lost by the plaintiff was her right of enjoyment along with her sister, Sundarammal, and that her right of survivorship was unaffected by the adverse enjoyment. Mr. Narayanamurthy for the defendants contended, that the plaintiff lost both the rights. It was held in Jiyamba Bai Saiba v. Kamakshi Bai Saiba (3) after a very elaborate examination of the authorities, by Scott, C. J., and Ellis, J., that two or more lawful wives of a Hindu take a joint estate for life in their husband's property, with rights of survivorship and of equal beneficial enjoyment. The Judicial Committee in Gnapathi Nilamani v. Gajapathi Rathamani (4) quote with approval this statement of the law. The Privy Council had already held in Bhugwandeon Doobey

IVATURY ATCHAMMA v. IVATURY PAPIAH.

v. Myna Basse (5) that one of the widows had not power of disposition over an estate which she may enjoy conjointly with her co-widow. In Kothaperumal v. Venkabal (6) and in Musammal Dal Koer v. Musammal Panbus Koer (7) the same view was expressed. It is now well-settled that co-widows and daughters are on the same footing in this respect.

The characteristics of joint tenancy have been described by ancient text writers. In 2 Blackstone it is stated:—

"The properties of a joint estate are derived from its unity, which is fourfold, the unity of interest, the unity of title, the unity of time and the unity of possession, or, in other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time and held by one and the same undivided possession."

This definition deals, no doubt, with a case of conveyance; but there is no reason for holding that cases of inheritance differ in any material particulars from it. The Judicial Committee in Kalima Natchiar v. Rajah of Shivogurga (1) applied it to a case of an ordinary co-parcenary.

The argument of the learned Vakil for the plaintiff is that each one of the characteristics is capable of being separated and enjoyed when occasion arises and that they do not coalesce. On the other hand, Mr. Narayanamurthy contended that it is of the essence of this class of rights that they are inseparable and that each of them is dependent on the other. This contention seems to be supported by the authorities.

Ooke on Littleton, Volume 2, 188 (a), is the foundation for all the propositions which have been subsequently deduced by writers and recorded in Judicial decisions. The law is thus laid down there:—

"And this is to be observed, that there shall be no survivor, unless the thing be in jointure at the instance of the death of him that first dyeth: for the rule is nihil de re accrescit ei, qui nihil in re quando jus accrescet habet."

In commenting upon it in Williams Law of Property, the author says:—

"As joint tenants together compose but one owner, it follows, that the estate of each must arise at the same time; so that if A and B are to be joint tenants of lands, A cannot take his share first and then B come in after him"; and again he says:—

"The incidents of a joint tenancy, above referred to, last only so long as the joint tenancy exists."

Blackstone comments upon the same passage in these terms: "This right of survivorship is called by ancient authors the jus accrescendi because the right, upon the death of one joint tenant, accumulates and increases to the survivors."

The authorities to which I shall presently draw attention establish that where there is a disruption of the joint tenancy the right of survivorship is gone. For example, where one of the joint tenants releases his interest in favour of the others, the joint tenancy comes to an end and a tenancy-in-common is created, see Chesler v. Willan (8).

It has also been held that a joint tenancy will be put an end to by operation of law, for example, when one of the joint tenants becomes a bankrupt, vide Thomason v. Frere (9), Morgan v. Marquis (10), Butler's Trusts, In re, Hughes v. Anderson (11).

In the latter case a male and a female became joint tenants under a bequest. They subsequently married. The question was, whether the female's right of survivorship was lost by this marriage. A strong Bench, consisting of Cotton, L. J., Lindley, L. J., and Bowen, L. J., came to the conclusion that it was not lost. Bowen, L. J., thus states the law:

"It depends on whether the marriage divests the property from the wife and vests it in the husband. If it does, the joint tenancy is severed. If it does not, there is no severance."

IVATURY ATCHAMMA v. IVATURY PAPIAH.

Applying the same principle to the present case, if, by virtue of limitation, the right of enjoyment to the exclusion of the plaintiff vested in Sundarammal, the joint tenancy was severed.

This leads me to the consideration of the effect of the Law of Limitation in the case. Article 127 of the Limitation Act is not in terms applicable, because it has been held from the earliest times that widows and daughters, taking as joint tenants, are not entitled, as a matter of right, to alienate their share, or to enter into a partition. No doubt, for the sake of convenient enjoyment, they may ask the Court, if they cannot agree among themselves, to allot particular portions of the property for them during their lives. The Madras High Court appears to have gone further than the other High Courts, but even on the authority of our decisions, Article 127 of the Limitation Act cannot be applied as between the co widows and daughters. The proper Article is 144. That Article, read with section 28 of the Limitation Act, makes it clear that by non-enjoyment for the statutory period the right of survivorship is lost. The expression "the right to such property" in section 28 must include the right to joint enjoyment as well as the right of survivorship. In Subbammal v. Krishna Aiyar (12) the learned Judges of this Court held that the right of survivorship is not separable from the right of enjoyment.

Some argument was based on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Aumirtolall Bose v. Rameekant Mitter (13) and Ohotay Lall v. Ohunoo Lall (14). In both these cases, the question was considered with reference to a right of preference which a married daughter having issue has over barren and unmarried daughters. From the nature of the right it would necessarily follow that the right of survivorship would revive when the preference was gone. I do not think these cases are of any assistance in dealing with this case.

I feel no difficulty in holding that Sundarammal acquired adversely the right of survivorship possessed by her sister. The only doubt in my mind is, whether on the death of Sundarammal, succession will be in abeyance until the death of the plaintiff because the grand-son, under Article 141 of the Limitation Act and the Hindu Law, does not take the inheritance as long as the last life estateholder is alive. In English Law, under similar circumstances, a civil death is spoken of so as to let in the next heir but I do not think we need apply that principle. In my opinion, the analogy of the English Law regarding estates pur autre vie can be extended to this case. The estate for the life of her sister which Sundarammal acquired does not come to an end with her death. An estate pur autre vie may arise by express limitation and by assignment of an existing life estate (see 24 Halsbury, paragraph 340). If there can be an assignment of another's estate for life, I fail to see why there should not be an acquisition of an estate for the life of another. It is now settled by legislation in England that this estate pur autre vie can be bequeathed and would descend in a particular manner to the heir-at-law or to the personal representative of the holder of the estate. No doubt, it will come to an end with the death of cestui que vie, but till his death the legatee donee or the heir is entitled to possession. The death of the holder of the estate pur autre vie does not put an end to it.

Now, applying that analogy to the present case, if Sundarammal, by excluding the plaintiff, not only acquired a full right of enjoyment in the property but also acquired an estate pur autre vie, that is, for the life of the plaintiff, this estate would descend to Sundarammal's heirs. This view received support from the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Chatterjee, J., in Sachindra Kishore Dey v. Kajani Kant Chuckerbutty (2). The learned Chief Justice says this:—"So far as the original title to a moiety is concerned, it is not suggested before us that the claim of the plaintiff could be resisted, but it is said that, inasmuch as Harasundari died in 1906, the plea of adverse possession and the consequent extinguishment cannot prevail as to the share that originally survived to Kashiswari on Harasundari's death. So the problem that arises in this case is, what was the effect of adverse possession against the two daughters who succeeded on the death of their father under the Dayabhaga system of law." Then, after discussing some of the cases, he concludes:—"The result appears to me to be that, so far as Kashiswari is concerned, her right was extinguished not only in the original 8-annas that devolved on her, but in respect of the whole 16-annas which passed to her and her sister as a single inheritance on the death of their father."

No doubt, in the case before the Calcutta High Court, the acquirer was a stranger, but the principle of that decision seems applicable to the present case.

On the whole, I have come to the conclusion, though not without some hesitation, that the true rule is that enunciated by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Sachindra Kishore Dey v. Rajani Kant Chuckerbutty (2). That view is in accordance with the English authorities to which I have referred. I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff lost her right of survivorship by the operation of section 28 of the Limitation Act, and that this suit, so far as a portion of Item No. 2 is concerned, should be dismissed.

*Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 16, 24—
Schedule of creditors, non-preparation of, whether bars

A firm was adjudicated insolvent, but no schedule of creditors, as required by law, was prepared, nor was notice of the insolvency proceedings served on all the creditors. One of the creditors brought a suit against the insolvents to recover the amount of his debt, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that no permission had been obtained from the Court under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act:

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, dated the 2nd April 1919.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, B. B., for Defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5.

JUDGMENT.—The firm of Des Raj-Rughnath Das of Amritsar instituted a suit against Duni Chand, Jethu Mal, Amir Chand, Lakbmi Chand and Thakar Das, described as proprietors of the firm known as Duni Chand Jethu Mal, of Hoti Marden, in the district of Peshawar. It was pleaded by the defendants, inter alia, that inasmuch as the firm Duni Chand Jethu Mal of which they were said to be the proprietors had been adjudicated insolvent in 1914, the suit was barred, permission under section 16 of the Insolvency Act not having been obtained from the Insolvency Court. The Judge of the Small Cause Court, at Amritsar, upheld this plea and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff firm of Des Raj-Rughnath Das has come up to this Court on the revision side, through Dr. Nand Lal complaining against this decision, and I have heard Mr. Sheo Narain for the respondents, Amir Chand, Lakbmi Chand and Thakar Das. The other two respondents were absent, although service had been effected on them.

ICHALAL JAGMOHANDAS v. NAGO SINA PATIM.

The first ground taken by Dr. Nand Lal was that the Insolvency Act, III of 1907, was not in force in Peshawar. Mr. Sheo Narain, however, pointed out that this was erroneous and drew my attention to a notification to be found in the Appendix of the N. W. P. Code, at page 673, by which notification Act III of 1907 was extended to Peshawar. Dr. Nand Lal, however, contended that, inasmuch as his clients (the petitioners) had never been served with notice of the insolvency proceedings in Peshawar and as no schedule had been prepared subsequent to adjudication as is required by the Insolvency Act, the insolvency proceedings were no bar to the present suit. In support of his contention he referred me to Harya v. Mul Chand (1), which ruling followed Arunachala v. Ayyavu (2). The present case is very similar to the case decided by the Chief Court in 1907. With the application which was filed by the insolvents themselves a list of creditors was filed but no schedule was prepared. Notice was issued and on the date fixed six out of 39 creditors appeared. The then petitioners were adjudicated insolvents, and the 27th August 1914 was fixed for the creditors to prove their claims. No creditors appeared and the papers were ordered to be filed. From the record in the insolvency proceedings it appears that the present petitioners were never served with notice of these proceedings. No schedule, as required by law, was prepared and, therefore, the decision in Harya v. Mul Chand (1), appears to me to be in point. The conclusions arrived at by the Court below are, therefore, erroneous, and I accept this petition and, setting aside the order of dismissal, direct that the case be proceeded with in accordance with law. Costs in this Court will follow the event.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, O. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover joint possession of the plaint land. Plaintiff's father purchased a joint half share in Survey No. 165, Pot No. 1, with other property from Bhiku Dharma and Ann Bhiku on the 22nd of August 1903. On the same day Bhiku and Ann passed a lease in favour of Jagmohandas in respect of the property mentioned in Exhibit 19 for a term of one year and agreed to pay the rent of Rs. 42. The term of the rent-note expired on the 22nd of August 1904. On the 5th of March 1913 Bhiku Dharma, Hari Dharma, Ann Bhiku and Sakharam Hari, sold the entire land, Survey No. 165, Pot No. 1, to the defendant. This suit was filed on the 28th of August 1917. It has been dismissed in both Courts on the ground that Article 139 of the Indian Limitation Act applies, and that when the term of the rent-note expired on the 22nd of August 1904, Bhiku and Ann held adversely to the landlord, and there was no evidence in the case from which a fresh tenancy could be inferred.

TEHLA MAL v. DHANA MAL.

The facts of this case are entirely different from the facts in Chandri v. Dasi Bhau (1). It must be remembered that in this case the tenants were the vendors who were tenants-in-common with two other persons of the plaint-land and the fact that they held over would not in any way affect the plaintiff's right as purchaser under the sale-deed to sue for partition against his co tenants in-common. What might have happened if he had let a portion of the land which belonged to the tenancy-in-common to an outsider who held over is a question which does not arise. In this case the plaintiff stood in the shoes of Bhiku and Anu who had a right of partition against the other members, Hari and Sakbaram, and it would depend upon the terms of the partition what portion of the tenancy in common would go to him on division. We think the case clearly comes under Article 144, and not under Article 139.

The appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff's suit decreed with costs.

F. WOERT, J.—I agree. In this suit the plaintiff stated his claim to recover joint possession of the plaint property not as a landlord, but as an owner, and, although he does mention that the land was leased to the defendant's predecessor in-title, yet his claim was clearly brought on the basis of his title as owner. Accordingly, although the tenancy may have determined, I do not think that the case can properly be held to fall under Article 139; and there being no other Article applicable, it falls under the general Article 144. That being so, the grounds on which the lower Courts have held the suit time barred are, in my opinion, wrong.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104 (1) (f), Sch II, paras 19, 21—Arbitration by intervention of Court—Award—Appeal against order filing award, whether lies.

Section 104 (1) (f) of the Civil Procedure Code provides for an appeal against an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and applies to an award filed under paragraph 21 of Schedule II to the Code. No appeal lies against an order filing an award made in pursuance of an order of reference made by the Court and filed under paragraph 19 of the Second Schedule to the Code.

First appeal from the decrees of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 28th March 1917.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dev Rai Sawhney, for Bhagat Govind Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 6th of December 1916 the Subordinate Judge of Amritsar passed an order that the agreement between the parties referring their dispute to arbitration should be filed in Court, and made an Order of Reference to the arbitrator appointed by the parties. The arbitrator duly gave his award which was accepted by the Court and embodied in a decree. Against this decree the defendant has preferred an appeal to this Court.

Now, it is perfectly clear that there is no appeal from a decree passed in accordance with an award. Nor do the provisions of section 104 (1) (f), Civil Procedure Code, apply to the facts of this case. That clause provides for an appeal against an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and obviously applies to an award filed under paragraph 21 of Schedule II to the Code of Civil Procedure. In the case before us, the award was made in pursuance of an Order of Reference made by the Court, and the proceedings of the arbitrator were subject to the supervision of the Court. There can be no manner of doubt that an award made under paragraph 19 cannot be treated as an award made without the intervention of the Court, and clause (f) of section 104 cannot be invoked for the purpose of sustaining an appeal from an order filing an award under that paragraph.

We are, therefore, perfectly clear that this appeal is incompetent and must be dismissed with costs.

Lease—Covenant for renewal at option of lessee—Rule against perpetuities, whether applies—Covenant, whether enforceable—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 14.

A covenant in a lease to renew from time to time at the option of the lessee is a covenant running with the land and is not subject to any rule against perpetuities, and is enforceable if the intention in that behalf is clearly shown [p. 592, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Nellore, in Appeal Suit No. 9 of 1919, (Appeal Suit No. 18 of 1919 on the file of the District Court, Nellore), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Nellore, in Original Suit No. 1563 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr K. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—In the first place, the plaintiff did not ask for renewal of the lease for 8 years after its expiry. He has been guilty of laches and is not entitled to relief.

The covenant for renewal offends against the rule as to perpetuities in section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In Kolathu Ayyar v. Ranga Vadhyar (1) &

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 203; 39 M. 114; 24 M. L. J. 83; 18 M. L. T. 179; (1913) M. W. N. 163.

contract of pre-emption was held to offend the rule against perpetuities. The same principle applies to this case.

Mr. T. V. Ramanatha Aiyar, for the Respondent.—As the plaintiff was in possession, he could have asked for a renewal when he chose. There was no laches. The rule against perpetuities is in respect of conveyances. Here is not a case of conveyance but of a lease. A covenant for perpetual renewal is enforceable.

18 Halsbury's Laws of England, paragraph 935. Kolathu Ayyar v. Ranga Vadhyar (1) is a case of pre-emption which stands on a different footing.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff had a lease of the land in dispute from the defendant for a period of five years for Mica Mining purposes on the 6th May 1903 with the following clause "I bind myself to give you such leases as you may require from time to time after the expiration of this agreement on same conditions. Should I fail to do so, I bind myself to pay you all your expenses that you incur." The plaintiff entered into possession according to the terms of the lease and erected certain structures on the land with a view to carry on the mining operations. But sometime in 1915 the defendant obtained a decree for possession of the land inasmuch as the present plaintiff had not, on the expiry of the term mentioned in the lease, taken out any renewal. Thereupon the plaintiff called upon the defendant on the 4th November 1916 to execute a lease for 5 years with the clause for renewal in the terms set out above but the defendant refused to grant any such renewal. The lessee then instituted this suit.

Both the lower Courts have held that the plaintiff is entitled to such a lease as he asked for and gave a decree for specific performance. It was argued before the District Munsif that the decree in the suit of 1915 operated as res judicata, but he held that in that suit no question as to the plaintiff's right to renewal was decided and that, therefore, the present suit was not barred. No argument has been addressed to us on this plea. Another defence set up was that the plaintiff was guilty of laches in not asking for renewal of the lease since the expiry of the first term in 1903, until 1916. But then he was in possession and was willing to carry out his part of the agreement and he was never called upon to take a renewal. The lower Appellate Court has discussed this question fully and is right in holding that the plaintiff's right to enforce the agreement has not been lost by laches.

The point, however, which was pressed before us with great persistence was that the agreement was in violation of the rule against perpetuities as laid down in section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section enacts the well-known rule that no interest in property can be created to take effect after the life-time of one or more persons living at the date of such transfer, and the minority of some persons who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period. The short answer to this argument is, that the agreement in question cannot properly be said to be a transfer of property which is defined by section 5 of the Act as "an act by which a living person conveys property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons or to himself and one or more other living persons." Here there is no conveyance of property after the expiry of the term of five years. The agreement in question is only a covenant to renew at the option of the lessee. A covenant like this is a covenant running with the land and is not subject to any rule against perpetuities. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 18, paragraph 935, it is pointed out that a covenant for perpetual renewal is enforceable if the intention in that behalf is clearly shown. The nearest case that has been cited in support of the appellant's contention is of Kolathu Ayyar v. Ranga Vadhyar (1) where a contract of pre-emption was held to offend against the rule against perpetuities for it fixed no time within which the agreement to convey was to be performed. Even there the contract was sought to be enforced against the heirs of the person who had entered into it and not, as here, against the lessor himself. But, apart from that, a contract of pre-emption stands on a different footing from a covenant to renew from time to time which has always been recognised both in England and here as a perfectly valid and enforceable contract.

The second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Where unnecessary plaintiffs withdraw from a suit, such withdrawal does not necessitate a dismissal of the suit.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 10th of July 1919, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The contention that the withdrawal of unnecessary plaintiffs in a suit necessitates its dismissal cannot be accepted. The question whether the plaintiffs who withdraw had or had not any interest in the subject-matter of the suit is one of fact which cannot be raised in second appeal. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

As regards the cross-appeal the facts are not very clear, but there is some indication on the evidence that the sir was divided and the Commissioner seems to have found as a fact that No. 641 was actually transferred in 1908. The appeal to Mahesh v. Hari Khan (1) which rests on the hypothesis that the sir was joint is not made on a fine foundation. The cross appeal, therefore, also fails and is dismissed. The parties in both appeals will bear their own costs.

The Assistant Collector's record, it may be noted, is far from satisfactory and the issue was not properly framed.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Ahmedabad, confirming the conviction but reducing the sentence passed by the City Magistrate, First Class, at Ahmedabad.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The accused was found guilty by the City First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad, of an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal to the Sessions Judge the conviction was confirmed but the sentence was reduced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

He has now applied to the High Court to exercise its revisional powers in his favour. The accused was a witness in what was known as the Nadiad Derailment Case tried by the Commissioners appointed under the Defence of India Act. On the 17th May 1919, the accused, having heard that a warrant for his arrest in connection with that offence had been issued, went to the Resident First Class Magistrate at Nadiad to surrender in order to save himself from arrest if he found that a warrant had actually been issued. As a matter of fact, a summons only had been issued for his attendance under section 160, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate referred him to the Fozdar. He made a statement to that officer who, thereupon, sent him to the Magistrate who recorded his statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code. After he had given his evidence before the Commissioners at the trial of the accused in the case, the Commissioners, considering that a certain statement made before them was in direct conflict with a particular statement made before the Magistrate, passed the following order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code:—"Whereas we, the President and Members of the Second Special Tribunal, Ahmedabad, are of opinion that there is ground for inquiry into offence committed by Parshottam Ishwar"...(p. 1-2.)

The accused was put up for trial before the First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad, who framed a charge against him under section 193 of Indian Penal Code in that he had made a statement on oath, on the 17th May 1919, at the stage of a judicial proceeding into the Nadiad Derailment Case before the Resident First Class Magistrate and another statement, on the 25th July 1919, before the Second Special Tribunal, one of which statements he either knew or believed to be false or did not believe to be true.

On this charge, as above stated, the accused has been found guilty.

A great many points were argued before us by Mr. Jinnah, on behalf of the accused, but there is only one of any real substance which would be sufficient, in my opinion, if decided in favour of the accused, to induce the Court to interfere with the findings of the lower Court

It was contended, inter alia, by the accused in his petition to this Court that the Commissioners were not a Court and had no power to grant sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, as they had no appellate or revisional jurisdiction over Subordinate Magistrates; that the statement of the 17th May was not brought to their notice in the course of judicial proceedings; that they had no power to direct the prosecution of the petitioner on an alternative charge without specifying that the statement before them was false; that the order under section 476 was not a proper order; that the prosecution had failed to prove that the statement of the 17th May was made on oath; that the statement was not made voluntarily; and that the Commissioners had erred in declining to call witnesses whose evidence was necessary for the defence.

The latter charge might be a serious one but it has been shown that the defence wished to call Mr. Elliott and Mr. Gandhi, two of the Commissioners, and Mr. Patel, one of the Counsel, in order to ascertain how the statement of the 17th May came under the notice of the Commissioners. But the Resident Magistrate said he forwarded it in the ordinary course to the District Magistrate, and the Trial Magistrate says in his judgment, "it is an admitted fact that the statement was brought under the notice of the Tribunal during the trial of the accused in Case No. 2 of 1919," while the Sessions Judge says: "The First Class Magistrate forwarded it to the District Magistrate who in his turn forwarded it to the Special Tribunal." Nor does it appear from his judgment that any objection was raised before him with regard to the exclusion of evidence. Therefore, we can safely assume that the statement reached the Commissioners in the ordinary course and that there is no substance in the present complaint. The other points have all been adequately dealt with by the lower Court and there is no need for us to deal with them again in detail.

There can be no doubt that the accused has made contradictory statements. That is by no means conclusive proof of his guilt. The accused told the Commissioners that the statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, was made because Inspector Janubhai said he would go to jail at once if he did not make it. In his statement before the Trying Magistrate he described at great length how he was induced by the Inspector to say what he did before the Resident Magistrate. But the evidence to support this allegation was absolutely disbelieved by the Trying Magistrate and the question was very carefully considered by the Sessions Judge and I see no reason why we should differ from him. The other objections are all technical and, even admitting that there have been errors, omissions or irregularities in the proceedings, we should not be justified in reversing the conviction unless we were satisfied that they had occasioned a failure of justice: section 537, Criminal Procedure Code.

But there are several important questions to be answered before we can confirm the conviction.

1. Whether the statement made before a Magistrate in the course of Police investigation under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, was evidence in a stage of judicial proceedings?

2. Whether a statement under section 164 can be said to be evidence in a stage of judicial proceedings if the Magistrate who records it has no jurisdiction to inquire into or try the case?

3. Whether, if the statement under section 164 is not evidence in a stage of judicial proceedings, it can form the basis of an alternative charge under section 193, Indian Penal Code?

4. Whether the answers to the first three questions can be in any way affected by the fact that the judicial proceedings in the case were before a Tribunal appointed under the Defence of India Act?

The difficulty in answering questions Nos. 1, 2, and 3, lies not only in the fact that there are many conflicting decisions of the Indian Courts upon them, but also in the fact that there have been changes from time to time in the law which had to be determined in those cases.

Section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, enables a charge to be made in the alternative if a single act or a series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute.

It might be fairly deduced from the terms of the section that to procure a conviction on one charge facts would have to be proved which would constitute an offence, so that if it could not be proved that one of two contradictory statements was false, a conviction under section 193, Indian Penal Code, could not result. Under section 555, Criminal Procedure Code, the forms set forth in the Fifth Schedule, with such variations as the circumstances, of each case require, may be used for the respective purposes there in mentioned. The Form XXVIII (II) (4) gives the form for a charge of making contradictory statements one of which is known or believed to be false and thereby committing an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. In Queen v. Mohamed Hoomayoon Shaw (1) it was held by a majority of a Full Bench that a conviction on such a charge was good notwithstanding that the Jury had not distinctly found which of the two statements was false. On the other hand, in Queen-Empress v. Kabhai (2) it was held by this Court that in the case of contradictory statements, separate heads of a charge should be framed imputing to the accused falsehood on each of the occasions. If a conviction was justified only on one or other of the heads and it was uncertain on which of the two occasions falsehood was uttered section 72 of Act XLV of 1860 applied directly. The judgment in such case should be framed in the alternative and punishment inflicted for the lesser offence. Mr. Mayne in his work on the Penal Code does not agree with this view of section 72. He says, at page 365, 4th Edition: "It certainly seems to me that this mode of charging two contradictory statements, made at different times, as making out a single offence, does not come within the terms of section 72, Indian Penal Code." And at page 41 (4th Edition) he says: "It will be observed that to authorise a conviction under this section, the doubt must be as to which of the offences the accused has committed, not whether he has committed either." And this seems to be correct.

To set these doubts at rest illustration (b) was added to section 236 which made it clear that the section might legally be construed as enabling a Court to charge an accused under section 193 in the alternative with 'making contradictory statements and to convict him, although it could not be proved which of the statements was false. But it is only when the statements constitute a series of acts that an alternative charge can be framed under section 236, Criminal Procedure Code. Section 193, Indian Penal Code, provides punishments for two classes of perjury. A person is said to give false evidence when, being legally bound on an oath or by any express provision of law to state the truth or being bound by law to make a declaration upon any subject, he makes any statement which is false and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true. It makes a difference with regard to the maximum punishment which can be imposed whether he intentionally gives false evidence in any stage of a judicial proceeding, or in any other case, and the question arises whether a statement in a stage of a judicial proceeding and a statement in any other case can be linked together so as to form a series of acts on which a charge can be framed in the alternative under section 236.

In Queen-Empress v. Mugapa (3) it was held by the Full Bench, following Queen-Empress v. Annia (4), that where a person had made two contradictory statements one to a Police Officer, under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, and another to a Magistrate holding an inquiry, he could not be charged on an alternative charge. That case was under the Code of 1832 when a person could be convicted under section 193 for making false statements before a Police Officer investigating an offence under Chapter XV of the Criminal Procedure Code. Unfortunately, no reasons are given for this decision, nor for the decision in Queen-Empress v. Annia (4), and it can only be presumed that the learned Judges thought that the two statements did not constitute a series of acts, although they might be made in the course of the investigation and the trial respectively of the same offence. No reference was made to Queen-Empress v. Parbham Raysing (5) in which it was decided that a Police investigation was by reason of Explanation (2) to section 193, Indian Penal Code, a stage of a judicial proceeding.

In Queen Empress v. Bharmā (6) the following question was referred to a Full Bench: "Whether a statement made before a Magistrate in the course of a Police investigation is made in a stage of judicial proceeding so as to suffice as a basis in part, of an alternative charge of an offence under section 193 of Indian Penal Code."

The Police were investigating a case of murder and the statement was recorded by a Third Class Magistrate. The answer given by the Full Bench was that as the Magistrate had no authority to carry on the preliminary inquiry in the case, the statement made before him was not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding. None of the previous authorities were discussed and no reasons were given for the decision. It might be inferred that the learned Judges considered that if the Magistrate had authority to carry on the preliminary inquiry, the statement would have been evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, but this is by no means certain. They may have thought that, in any event, the fact of his having no authority was sufficient to dispose of the case. It would certainly be illogical if the question whether a proceeding before a Magistrate under Chapter XIV, Criminal Procedure Code, was a stage of a judicial proceeding, depended on whether or not he had authority to deal with the case under Chapter XV. It does not appear to me that the explanation to section 164, which was added in 1892, makes any difference. Certain doubts had been expressed as to the desirability of Magistrates who had no jurisdiction in the case recording confessions and statements under section 164 [Reg. v. Vahul Jetha (7)] and the explanation was added to remove these doubts.

Now, if an investigation under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code is an investigation directed by law preliminary to a proceeding before a Court of Justice, then, under Explanation (2) to section 193, such an investigation is a stage of a judicial proceeding, and this is the view which has been adopted by the High Courts of Allahabad and Madras. In Queen-Empress v. Khem (8) a witness made a statement before a Third Class Magistrate under section 164 and another before the Magistrate at the trial. It was held he might be convicted under the second, if not the first, paragraph of section 193, Indian Penal Code. Queen-Empress v. Bharmā (6) was referred to but as the Third Class Magistrate had jurisdiction to try the case it did not apply. But the learned Judges seem to doubt the correctness of the decision, and it may be inferred that they thought that, even if the statement was not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, it was evidence in another case and could be linked with a statement made in a stage of a judicial proceeding. But they were clearly of opinion that if the Magistrate had authority to try the case the statement recorded by him was evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding. In Queen-Empress v. Alagu Kone (9) a Magistrate recorded a statement in a murder case under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code. Afterwards, the witness withdrew his statement and he was charged in the alternative under section 193 with intentionally giving false evidence. It was held that Queen-Empress v. Bharmā (6) was not applicable as the Magistrate who recorded the statement was the Committing Magistrate. In Suppa Tevan v. Emperor (10) a statement was recorded by a Magistrate in a murder case investigation under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code. It was held that the Magistrate was a Court and when he took down the statement under section 164 he was acting in discharge of a duty imposed by law and was authorised to administer oath. It was argued that the conviction of the accused under section 193, Indian Penal Code, was not legal, and it was held that, in the face of the Explanation attached to section 193, that contention could not be accepted. An investigation under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code was a stage of a judicial proceeding and, therefore, the appellants gave false evidence. The illustration to Explanation (2) was referred to, but, with due respect, the illustration does not give an answer to the question whether an investigation under Chapter XIV, Criminal Procedure Code, comes within the Explanation. It may be said the investigation referred to in the illustration is an investigation after the inquiry has commenced, but is preliminary to the actual trial, because the Magistrate has no authority to try the case.

It does not appear that it was seriously argued in the Trial Court that in ordinary cases a statement recorded under section 164 is not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, while before the Sessions Judge from his judgment it seems to have been admitted that it would be. But it was argued that this was not an ordinary case. The Tribunal was constituted under Act IX of 1915 which abrogated all provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code so far as they related to committal proceedings. That, therefore, the Magistrate, though a First Class Magistrate, had no authority to carry on the preliminary inquiry in this case, so that the decision in Queen-Empress v. Bharna (6) was directly applicable. On the other side it was argued that, though by section 5 of the Act, the Tribunal might take cognizance of a case without a committal order, there was nothing in the Act to bar committal proceedings being taken if the authorities so decided, though naturally the intention of the Act was to do away with the necessity of the stage of the ordinary procedure so that the Tribunal might deal with all cases whether triable by a Court of Session or not as if they were warrant cases. It seems to me it would be difficult to say that the Magistrate had no authority, considering the powers which were vested in him to carry on the preliminary inquiry in the case, merely because it had been enacted by the Legislature that in a particular class of cases within which this one fell there should be no preliminary inquiry, but the point is sufficiently doubtful, considering the ruling in Queen-Empress v. Bharna (6), to make it desirable that it should be referred to a Full Bench with the other questions which this case has afforded an opportunity for getting finally decided so far as this Court is concerned. The following questions are referred to a Full Bench :—

1. Whether a statement recorded by any Magistrate in the course of a Police investigation under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, is evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding within the meaning of section 193, Indian Penal Code, Explanation (2) ?

2. Whether such a statement can be said to be evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding if the Magistrate who records it has no jurisdiction to inquire into or try the case ?

3. Whether if such a statement is not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding but comes within the meaning of the words 'evidence in any other case' in section 193, Indian Penal Code, it can be linked with a statement which is evidence in a stage of the judicial proceeding following on the investigation so that the two can be said to be a series of acts on which an alternative charge can be framed under section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, of intentionally giving false evidence ?

4. Whether the Magistrate who had authority to carry on the preliminary inquiry, but for the notification under the Defence of India Act, had any jurisdiction to inquire into or try the case after the notification ?

5. Whether, if the Full Bench are of opinion that question 1 should be answered in the affirmative, it makes any difference that the original case was directed to be tried by a Tribunal under the Defence of India Act instead of being tried in the ordinary course, so that the investigation under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be considered a stage of the proceedings before the Tribunal ?

SHAH, J.—I agree that the only point of substance arising in this application is, whether the statement of the petitioner recorded by the First Class Magistrate of Nadiad, on the 17th of May 1919, under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, after the Notification No. 3778 of the Local Government under section 3 of the Defence of India Act (IV of 1915), was published on the 14th of May, can form a basis, in part, of the alternative charge of an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code.

The other points raised by Mr. Jinnah on behalf of the accused do not afford any good ground for interference in revision.

Several questions have been argued in connection with the point, which require to be considered. These questions have been formulated by my Lord the Chief Justice at the end of his judgment, with which I generally agree. They are all important questions and some of them are not free from difficulty. There is diversity of judicial opinion as regards some of them; and there is the question of applying the Full Bench decisions of this Court in Queen-Empress v. Bharna (6) and Queen-Empress v. Mugapa (3) to the statement recorded under the special circumstances of this case. For a satisfactory disposal of this case it is desirable that these questions should be referred to a Full Bench. Accordingly, I concur in the proposed reference.

PURSHOTAM ISHVAR AMIN V. EMPEROR.

I do not desire to express any opinion on any of these questions at this stage: nor do I mean necessarily to suggest any doubt as to the correctness of the Full Bench decisions above referred to so far as they go.

In pursuance of the foregoing, the case came before a Full Bench on the 4th October 1920.

OPINION OF FULL BENCH.

PRATT, J.—(October 11, 1920).—The questions referred for decision to the Full Bench are,—

1. Whether a statement recorded by any Magistrate in the course of a Police investigation under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, is evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding within the meaning of section 193, Indian Penal Code, Explanation (2)?

2. Whether such a statement can be said to be evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding if the Magistrate who records it has no jurisdiction to inquire into or try the case?

3. Whether, if such a statement is not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, but comes within the meaning of the words 'evidence in any other case', in section 193, Indian Penal Code, it can be linked with a statement which is evidence in a stage of the judicial proceeding following on the investigation, so that the two can be said to be a series of acts on which an alternative charge can be framed under section 236,

Criminal Procedure Code, of intentionally giving false evidence?

4. Whether the Magistrate who had authority to carry on the preliminary inquiry, but for the notification under the Defence of India Act, had any jurisdiction to inquire into or try the case after the notification?

5. Whether, if the Full Bench are of opinion that question No. 1 should be answered in the affirmative, it makes any difference that the original case was decided to be tried by a Tribunal under the Defence of India Act instead of being tried in the ordinary course, so that the investigation under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be considered a stage of the proceedings before the Tribunal.

A Police investigation under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code is not itself a judicial proceeding within the meaning of that term as used in the Indian Penal Code. Under that Code a judicial proceeding is a proceeding before a Judge as defined in section 19. Nor does it become a stage of a judicial proceeding by virtue of the Explanation to section 193. The words of the Explanation are: "An investigation directed by law preliminary to a proceeding before a Court of Justice." A magisterial inquiry preparatory to commitment is an inquiry directed by law preparatory to the trial. This direction is expressed in section 206 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The effect of the Explanation is, therefore, to make a magisterial inquiry preparatory to commitment, a stage of a judicial proceeding. But there is no direction of law that the Police investigation should precede a trial. It very often does not, e.g., when the Magistrate takes cognizance on a complaint or 'suo motu'. Nor is it enough that the Police investigation does, as a matter of fact, often precede a trial. The section requires something more. There must be an express direction by law just as under Explanation (4) there must be an express direction by a Court of Justice.

To hold that a Police investigation is a stage of a judicial proceeding would lead to anomaly. A Magistrate trying a warrant-case is a Court of Justice (section 20, Indian Penal Code); but a Magistrate holding an inquiry preparatory to commitment is not [section 19, illustration (d)]. A Police investigation preparatory to a trial by a Magistrate would, therefore, be a stage of a judicial inquiry, while a Police investigation preparatory to a magisterial inquiry for commitment would not.

No doubt a Magistrate examining a witness under section 164 would do so on oath. But the definition of judicial proceeding in section 4 (m) of the Criminal Procedure Code is limited to that Code and does not apply to that phrase as used in the Indian Penal Code.

A statement recorded by a Magistrate of a witness in the course of a Police investigation under Chapter XIV is, I think, not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding and I differ on this point from Queen-Empress v. Parshram Raysing (5), Queen-Empress v. Alagu Kone (9) and Suppa Teoan v. Emperor (10).

It is quite immaterial whether the Magistrate had or had not jurisdiction to inquire into or try the case. Under the Code of 1872, there were cases where the fact that the Magistrate had jurisdiction was regarded as indicating that the examination was not under section 164, as it professed to be, but should be considered to have been taken in the course of the inquiry or trial: Empress v. Anuntram Singh (11), Empress of India v. Yakub Khan (12). Subsequent changes in the Code of 1882 have made these cases obsolete. But they have left their mark on the case of Queen-Empress v. Bhurma (6). There, in a case of murder, a statement was made under section 164 before a Third Class Magistrate and was afterwards contradicted before the Committing Magistrate. The Court held that the statement before a Third Class Magistrate was not evidence in a judicial proceeding that Magistrate not having authority to carry on the preliminary inquiry. The reservation as to the Magistrate's jurisdiction was, we think, made in order to leave open the question whether, if the Magistrate had jurisdiction, the statement, though professing to be made under section 164, should not be considered part of the commitment inquiry. In Queen-Empress v.

Bharma (6) the Full Bench merely answered the question propounded and did not consider whether the accused could not have been convicted of a charge in the alternative for false evidence under section 193, Part I, before the Committing Magistrate, or of false evidence under section 193, Part 2, before the Third Class Magistrate. But in the case of Queen-Empress v. Ismail (13), decided three months later, though reported in I. L. R. 11 Bom. 659, a conviction was confirmed in the alternative for giving false evidence before a Magistrate or false evidence before a Police Officer (under section 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882).

In the case of Queen-Empress v. Kabhai (2) it was held in a similar case that a charge for one offence in Form X XVIII (II) (4) of Schedule V of the Criminal Procedure Code could not be framed, but that separate heads of charge in the alternative should be framed under section 236. This was followed by the case of Queen-Empress v. Annia (4), where the statement made to the Police Officer was in answer to questions which tended to expose the accused to a criminal prosecution. The Court held that this was not false evidence as the accused was not bound to answer truly. This was sufficient to dispose of the case, but the judgment, professing to follow Queen-Empress v. Kabhai (2), added that even if the statement to the Police was false evidence, the case was not one in which alternative charges could be framed. This was not only an obiter dictum but an incorrect statement of the decision in Queen-Empress v. Kabhai (2), nevertheless the Full Bench in Queen-Empress v. Mugapa (3) approved the case of Queen-Empress v. Kabhai (2), that a charge in the Criminal Procedure Code form was not possible, and at the same time followed Queen-Empress v. Annia (4) in holding that alternative charges could not be framed. The judgment acknowledged the discrepancy between Queen-Empress v. Annia (4) and Queen-Empress v. Kabhai (2), but gave no reason for following the obiter dictum in the former rather than the decision in the latter—and it does not even refer to the case of Queen-Empress v. Ismail (13).

The confusion seems to have arisen out of the apparent inconsistency between section 236 and the Form of Charge, Schedule V, Form XXVIII (II) (4). The Form sets forth two statements each in a judicial proceeding, "one of which statements you either knew or believed to be false, or did not believe to be true, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code." It appears to be a Form of Charge with one head for a single offence and thereby invites the criticism of Mr. Mayne quoted in the referring judgment. But the form comes under Part II of Form XXVIII "Charges with two or more heads." The charge is really a charge in the alternative either of an offence under section 193 on the first statement or of an offence under section 193 on the second statement. But because the two offences happen to be under the same part of the same section, the form uses the words "an offence" under section 193. It is this somewhat inaccurate wording that has led to the erroneous opinion that alternative charges could not be framed where the contradictory statements fell under different parts of section 193.

But under section 236 it is quite clear that a charge in the alternative may be framed for different offences. The prosecution cannot establish exclusively any one offence, but are able to prove any act or series of acts which exclude the innocence of the accused, and shew that he must have committed one of two or more offences. The prosecution establish a corpus delicti on the facts which can be proved and the facts which cannot be proved are subsidiary facts important only to this extent that they decide under which penal provision the delictum falls, or on what occasion the offence was committed. In illustration (a) the recent possession of stolen property is the corpus delicti. Whether the accused stole it himself or subsequently received it from the thief are subsidiary facts which only affect the question whether his delictum falls under section 379 or section 411 of the Indian Penal Code. In illustration (b) the two contradictory statements constitute the corpus delicti and what cannot be proved is the subsidiary fact on which occasion the false evidence was given. If the one statement was evidence in a judicial proceeding and the other evidence in any other case, the alternative charges would be one under the first part and one under the second part of section 193. Judgment could be in the alternative under section 367 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, and the punishment would be for the minor offence under section 72, Indian Penal Code.

It is argued that false evidence in a Police investigation and false evidence in a judicial proceeding do not form a series of acts and cannot be linked together in alternative charges. If false evidence in a commitment inquiry and false evidence in a trial can be charged in the alternative I cannot understand how it can be argued that false evidence in a Police investigation stands on a different footing. It is said that the acts must form a series. True, but the only factor that makes them a series is that they each lead to an inference as to the guilt of the accused. There may be a number of acts apparently distinct and even different transactions but when they form a chain of circumstantial evidence pointing to the guilt of the accused they become a series. This circumstantial evidence may prove the accused's connection with a murder. These acts and the murder are the corpus delicti and the accused may be charged in the alternative with murder or abetment of murder. So with contradictory statements the connection is that, taken together, they lead to an inference of the accused's guilt.

I think that charges in the alternative can be framed for giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding or giving false evidence in any other case. I think the decision in Queen-Empress v. Mugapa (3) is incorrect and the decisions in Queen-Empress v. Ismail (13) and Queen Empress v. Khem (8) are correct.

The Defence of India Act provides for exclusive trial before the constituted Tribunal. It in no way affects the Police investigation or the Magistrate's jurisdiction to take part in the investigation. Indeed, section 9 contemplates the fact that a statement may have been taken before the Magistrate. I would therefore, answer the questions referred:—

- (1) In the negative. (2) In the negative.
- (3) In the affirmative, and questions (4) and (5) do not arise.

PURSHOTTAM ISHWAR AMIN v. EMPEROR.

MACLEOD, C. J.—(October 11, 1920).—I agree that the answers to the questions referred to the Full Bench should be as given in the judgment of my brother Pratt. The third question is the most difficult one. Section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code contemplates a case where an accused person has committed an act or a series of acts and it is uncertain on the facts proved which of two or more offences has been committed. A series of acts means two or more acts connected together by some common relation. Clearly, a statement on oath before a Committing Magistrate and a statement on oath at the trial of the same accused on the same charge would constitute a series of acts. Accordingly, under section 236 a witness could be charged with having given false evidence either before the Committing Magistrate or at the trial. The doubt which arose owing to conflicting decisions was, whether it was necessary to prove that one of the statements was false or whether the mere fact that the statements were contradictory was sufficient for a conviction of the offence of giving false evidence. This doubt was set at rest by the addition of illustration (b) to section 236. It does not appear to have been noticed that section 236 was originally framed to meet the case where it was doubtful whether offence A or offence B had been committed at the time when the charge had to be framed. Schedule V, Form XXVIII, provided for the framing of charges under two or more heads in accordance with the provisions of section 236. But in the case of contradictory statements the doubt would be whether perjury had been committed on occasion A or occasion B, a very different matter. The form of charge in Schedule V, Form XXVIII (1) (4), is, therefore, strictly speaking, not a charge under two heads but a charge under one head for a single offence. The charge should be "either that you committed an offence of giving false evidence on occasion A or on occasion B and because the statements are contradictory you must have committed that offence on one of the two occasions." The illustration (b) made it clear that it was not necessary to prove on which of the two occasions false evidence had been given. But the illustration does not alter but merely explains the section, and it cannot be that only the contradictory statements mentioned therein can form the basis of an alternative charge.

The next point to be noticed is, that section 191 of the Indian Penal Code defines the offence of giving false evidence. Section 193 provides for the punishment. It does not say that there are two kinds of perjury, but that if perjury is committed in the stage of a judicial proceeding it may be punished more severely than if committed in any other case. The offence is perjury wherever it may be committed.

In illustration (b) to section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, the common relation is the inquiry as to the committal of a particular offence by one or more individuals and that enables the statements made on two different occasions to be considered as a series of acts. But the Police investigation under Chapter XIV has also a common relation though it is a wider one, viz, the inquiry into the committal of a particular offence. Therefore, a statement at the Police investigation under section 164 and a statement after judicial proceedings have commenced form a series of acts within the meaning of section 236. If, on the other hand, the common relation can only be the inquiry as to whether one or more particular individuals committed a particular offence, then they cannot form a series of acts. But there is no reason why the wider relation, if it exists, should not be taken into account. To hold otherwise would have this disastrous effect that witnesses might make the most incriminating statements under section 164 resulting in persons being charged under the Indian Penal Code, with only the bare chance of such witnesses being held guilty of perjury, if they resiled from their statements at the trial. For nothing is more difficult to prove than the fact that a witness has made a statement which he knew or believed to be false or did not believe to be true. It is only when he makes contradictory statements that a real chance of conviction arises. I think unnecessary confusion has been caused by the phraseology of section 191 of the Indian Penal Code. The act which constitutes the offence is the making of a false statement on oath on an occasion when by the law the person making the statement is bound to tell the truth. If that act had been called 'perjury', a term which every one understands, there would have been no difficulty. But to call it 'giving false evidence' involves the use of a word which itself has several meanings. Clearly, 'evidence' is not used in its restricted meaning of evidence which is given or can be used in the course of judicial proceedings, but in its widest sense including any formal enunciation of facts made for the purpose of establishing a particular conclusion. Thus, a creditor who makes a false affidavit of claim against an insolvent's estate or an insolvent who makes a false schedule, gives false evidence. And, if either of them happened to make contradictory statements before the Court in the course of proceedings under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, I do not see why they should not be convicted under section 194 without the prosecution having to prove which of the statements was false: the common relation being the particular insolvency in which the statements were made. In my opinion, therefore, there is a common relation between the statement made before the Magistrate under section 164 and the statement before the Tribunal so that they form a series of acts. No doubt, this opinion is in conflict with the Full Bench decision in Queen-Empress v. Mugapa (1). But with all due respect to the learned Judges who tried that case, the value of their considered opinion is deprived of much of its value by the fact that no reasons are given, and the contrary decision of this Court in Queen-Empress v. Ismail (13) was not even referred to. It may be that section 236 was considered, but, in my opinion, the real crux is whether the inquiry into the committal of a particular offence, without dealing with the question whether a particular individual has committed it, can constitute the common relation between the two statements and it is impossible to say whether their Lordships considered the question before them from that point of view.

SHAN, J.—(October 11, 1920).—I agree with the judgment of my brother Pratt as regards questions Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 5 referred to the Full Bench. I would answer these questions in the same sense, generally, for the reasons given in that judgment.

As regards question No. 3, I regret that I am unable to accept the conclusion reached in that judgment.

I would answer that question in the negative.

I have carefully considered the arguments and the statutory provisions bearing on this question, as also the various decisions cited before us. The provisions of section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, are of an enabling and not obligatory nature, and it is open to the Courts, on a fair interpretation of the section, to hold that a statement, which is not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, ought not to be linked with a statement which is evidence in a judicial proceeding or at a stage of a judicial proceeding so as to form the basis of an alternative charge. In determining whether any two contradictory statements can form the basis of an alternative charge, the Court must have regard to the nature of the statements. A statement recorded by a Magistrate under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, in the course of an investigation under Chapter X.V before the inquiry or trial has commenced, generally speaking, cannot be evidence at the trial, while a statement recorded before a Committing Magistrate in the course of the inquiry can be evidence at the trial. The statement recorded under section 164 is one which a witness is under no legal obligation to make, though if he elects to make it he is bound to state the truth, in view of the provisions of the Indian Oaths Act. The scheme of the Code of Criminal Procedure makes a clear distinction between the stage of Police investigation and that of judicial proceedings by way of inquiry or trial. Though the obligation to state the truth is common to statements recorded under section 164, as well as those made at the inquiry or trial, there is, in my opinion, a clear distinction between these two classes of statements. There is also a difference in the circumstances and surroundings under which the two sets of statements are recorded. This may be taken to be recognised by the Legislature, as the statements recorded under section 164 are not permitted to be treated as evidence at the trial under the Code of Criminal Procedure or the Indian Evidence Act.

I am not speaking here of the special provisions of section 9 of the Defence of India Act (IV of 1915). It is not necessary to express any opinion, for the purpose of the case, as to whether that section applies to statements recorded under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code. Assuming, without admitting, that such statements may be used as evidence under the special circumstances stated in that section, I do not think that that circumstance affects in any way the broad consideration that such statements cannot be treated as evidence at any inquiry or trial under the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In determining whether a statement recorded under section 164 during the Police investigation and a statement recorded in the course of judicial proceedings at the trial can constitute a 'series of acts' within the meaning of section 236, there is no adequate reason to ignore the difference between the two acts. In spite of these considerations, I might have taken the view, which is now contended for by the learned Advocate-General, and which, it is said, is well within the scope of section 236 had it not been for the fact that a Full Bench of this Court had by necessary implication put a restricted interpretation upon the terms of section 236. That is the decision in Queen-Empress v. Mugapa (3). The Full Bench, consisting of Sargent, O. J., and Telang, Candy and Fulton, JJ., held that a statement made to a Police Officer under section 161 of the Code of 1882 and that made before the Committing Magistrate could not form the basis of an alternative charge, much less of a conviction under section 193, Indian Penal Code. In that case one of the statements was made at a stage of a judicial proceeding and the other was made at a stage of investigation under Chapter XIV of the Code then in force, the person making the statements being under an obligation to state the truth on both the occasions. It is true that no reasons are given for this decision, and no reference is made to the terms of section 236, Criminal Procedure Code. I do not feel any doubt, however, that the conclusion was reached after a careful consideration of section 236, which in terms was the same as the corresponding section in the Code of 1898. Though this reported decision was before the Legislature when the Code of 1898 was enacted, I do not find any change in the section, which can be reasonably construed as overruling or rendering obsolete that decision. Illustration (b) to the section was added for the first time in the Code of 1898. I do not think, however, that the illustration touches the present point. As I read the illustration, it only makes clear that two contradictory statements, one made before the Committing Magistrate and the other at the trial, can form the basis of an alternative charge of giving false evidence. It is not pressed before us, and I do not think that it could be reasonably suggested, that the word 'Magistrate' in the illustration can mean any Magistrate other than the Committing Magistrate. The illustration, so far as it goes, refers to the linking of two contradictory statements in the course of judicial proceedings for an alternative charge under the same part of section 193, Indian Penal Code. I do not think that the alteration in section 61 of the Code of 1888 makes any difference so far as the application of the decision in Mugapa's case (3) to the point, which we have to decide, is concerned.

I am humbly of opinion that the decision in Queen-Empress v. Mugapa (3) is correct, and may be followed so far as it applies to the present case. The effect of that decision, in my opinion, is that two contradictory statements, one recorded before the commencement of the inquiry or trial and the other recorded at the inquiry or trial, cannot form the basis of an alternative charge, or conviction under section 193, even though with reference to each statement the charge of giving false evidence at a stage of a judicial proceeding or merely of giving false evidence, as the case may be, can be established if the prosecution be in a position to prove that the particular statement is false in fact. The statement recorded under section 164 in the present case stands, for the purpose of the point under consideration, on the same footing as the statement made to the Police Officer under section 161 under the Code of 1882 in Mugapa's case (3).

Fawcett, J.—(October 11, 1920).—I agree in the answers and reasoning given in the judgment of my brother Pratt.

As to the third question, it is true that illustration (b) to section 236, and the Form of Charge in No XXVIII of Schedule V of the Criminal Procedure Code, presumably relate to contradictory statements in an inquiry before a Committing Magistrate and in a trial before a Sessions Court; but this by no means justifies the view that the Legislature intended to confine the power to frame an alternative charge under section 236 to the case of contradictory statements falling under the first part of section 193, Indian Penal Code, or to a case where both statements fell under the same part of that section. The illustrations and forms are useful guides to the meaning of a section, but do not constitute the main enactment.

The expression 'series of acts' in section 236 is very wide, and I do not think there is any legitimate ground for holding that the circumstances that a statement under section 164 is voluntarily made and cannot itself be treated as evidence of the facts stated therein operate to prevent it being one of a 'series of acts', taken in conjunction with a connected statement made by the same person 'in a stage of a judicial proceeding.' The offence of "giving false evidence," which is defined in section 191, Indian Penal Code, applies to each of the two acts, if the statement is false, etc.; and the fact that under section 193 one of the acts is liable to a greater penalty than the other is immaterial, except in regard to the question of punishment, which is dealt with in section 72, Indian Penal Code. Sub-section (3) of section 367, Criminal Procedure Code, makes it clear that there can be a conviction in the alternative in a case where there is a doubt as to which of two parts of the same section applies, just as much as in a case where a doubt arises as to which of two sections applies. And this suffices to show that section 326 is also intended to cover the former case. Nor does it seem necessary to state in the charge that one of the statements falls under a particular part of section 193, Indian Penal Code, and the other statement under another part of that section. Thus, section 304, Indian Penal Code, is divided into two parts, drawing a distinction in the penalty to be inflicted for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, according to the convict's intention or knowledge but the Form of Charge under section 304 in No. XXVIII (1) (6) and II (2) of Schedule V of the Code does not require the particular part of section 304, under which the accused is charged, to be stated. Under section 221 (2) it suffices to give the specific name of the offence, which, in the case under consideration, is that of "giving false evidence," whether it be "in a stage of a judicial proceeding" or "in any other case."

SETALVAD, J.—(October 11, 1920).—I agree in the answers given in the judgment of Pratt, J., to the questions referred to the Full Bench. As regards question No. 3, I fully concur in the reasons given in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. The real question is, whether a statement made by a witness on oath under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code during the course of investigation under Chapter XIV, and a statement made by the same witness at the trial, constitute a series of acts within the meaning of section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code, so that an alternative charge can under that section be framed in respect of such statements. I have no doubt that they do constitute a 'series of acts'. On information being given of an alleged offence, an investigation takes place under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code; following on such investigation the inquiry before the Committing Magistrate takes place and lastly comes the Sessions trial. There is a common relation between all acts done in the course of these three stages and statements made by the same witness at one or more of these stages constitute 'a series of acts'. It was contended that only offences of identical nature can be the subject of an alternative charge. There is no such restriction to be found in section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But assuming there is such a restriction, the offences which form in this case the subject of the alternative charge are, in my opinion, identical. The charge is that the accused in this case either gave false evidence when he made his statement under section 164 or he gave false evidence in his statement before the Tribunal. Giving false evidence before the Tribunal, being in a stage of a judicial proceeding, falls within the first part of section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and giving false evidence in the course of a statement under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, falls within the second part of section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. But in either case, the offence is the one defined in section 191 of the Indian Penal Code, viz., "giving false evidence."

After the decision of the Full Bench the case came before a Division Bench (Macleod, C. J. and Shah, J.) on the 20th of

FINAL JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, O. J.—(October 29, 1920).—It has now been decided in this case by the Full Bench that the statement made on oath by a witness before a Magistrate under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, can be made the basis of an alternative charge together with a statement made on oath at the trial, provided there was a common relation between the two statements. There is a common relation in this case, and, therefore, the accused could be convicted with having given false evidence by the mere fact that he had made contradictory statements, one before the Magistrate and one at the trial.

It has been argued, however, that there has been either a want of or an irregularity in the sanction required by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. Assuming that, when contradictory statements are made before different Courts, the sanction of each of those Courts is required before a Court can take cognizance of the charge of giving false evidence, and assuming that the Magistrate in this case who recorded the statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, was a 'Court', there is no doubt that the sanction of the Magistrate was not obtained. But the sanction given by the Tribunal was to the effect that an inquiry should be made with regard to the contradictory statements made by the accused before the Tribunal and before the First Class Magistrate when he was examined under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code. There is no doubt that the accused had ample notice of what he was being charged with, and it was open to the accused when the Magistrate commenced the proceedings to take the objection that the Magistrate could not take cognizance of the charge for want of sanction of the First Class Resident Magistrate who recorded the statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code. Although an objection was taken before the Trying Magistrate no application was made to a higher Tribunal to stop the proceedings on the ground that a proper sanction had not been given. It is true that in appeal the learned Sessions Judge thought that no sanction was necessary because he considered that the Resident Magistrate was subordinate to the Tribunal.

However that may be, assuming that there is an irregularity in the sanction which was required by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, before the Magistrate could take cognizance of the charge against the accused, section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, is very clear as to what course is open to the High Court in revision when it is brought to its notice that there has been an irregularity in the sanction. It provides that "no finding, sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered under Chapter XXVII or on appeal or revision on account of... (b) the want of or any irregularity in any sanction required by section 195 (Criminal Procedure Code) or any irregularity in proceedings taken under section 476, ... unless such error, omission, irregularity, want... has in fact occasioned a failure of justice."

In Sunder Dasadh v. Sital Mahto (14) the petitioners were convicted and sentenced to fine under section 206, Indian Penal Code, without any sanction being given under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, and the Court said: "No doubt sanction to the prosecution should have been given before the Magistrate took cognizance of that offence, but unless the want of such sanction has, in fact, occasioned a failure of justice (section 537, Code of Criminal Procedure), the conviction is not bad only on that account. There is nothing in the proceedings to show that this is so."

I should not go so far as to say that in this case there was a want of sanction, that is to say, an entire want of sanction, as there was the sanction of the Tribunal. It may be said that there was a deficiency in the sanction as the Magistrate had not sanctioned prosecution. But, however that may be, it cannot be said that this want of sanction or deficiency or irregularity in the sanction granted has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. It has been proved that the accused had made directly contradictory statements which constitute the offence of giving false evidence within the meaning of section 191, Indian Penal Code, taken in conjunction with section 233, Criminal Procedure Code. Therefore, there is no reason why we should interfere with the conviction on the ground of any want of sanction or deficiency or irregularity in the sanction.

(14) 25 C. 217 at p. 229, 6 C. W. 5, 221.

It seems to me the question whether the Magistrate recording a statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, is a 'Court' or not is now irrelevant, considering the Full Bench in this case has held that these two contradictory statements can form the subject of a charge of giving false evidence. If he is not a Court, no sanction would be required. But it has been held by the Madras High Court that a Magistrate recording a statement on oath under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, was a Court see Queen-Empress v. Alagu Kone (9)] and that decision was followed in Suppa Tevan v. Emperor (10). It seems unfortunate that although the words 'evidence', 'judicial proceedings', 'Court', 'Court of Justice' are used in the Indian Penal Code, Criminal Procedure Code, the Indian Evidence Act and other Acts, there is no general definition of these terms applicable to any Act in which they appear. But 'Court' is defined in the Indian Evidence Act, section 3, as including "all Judges and Magistrates, and all persons, except arbitrators, legally authorised to take evidence;" and under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate is bound to record the statements made to him in such of the manners therein-after prescribed for recording evidence as is, in his opinion, best fitted for the circumstances of the case. If there were anything at all in the point, I should say that there was considerable justification for the decision of the Madras High Court that the Magistrate recording a statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, was a 'Court'. But it seems to me the point is immaterial because, under section 191, Indian Penal Code, the offence of giving false evidence is committed by making a false statement on oath when a person making a statement is legally bound by an oath or by an express provision of law to state the truth. When the law provides, therefore, for any case in which a person can be bound by an oath to speak the truth, and such a person makes a statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true, then he is said to give false evidence, and there is no necessity that such a statement should be made in or before a Court, whatever the definition of 'Court' may be. He is liable to be punished under section 193, Indian Penal Code, which provides, however, that a more severe punishment can be inflicted if the offence is committed at any stage of a judicial proceeding than if it is committed in any other case. Therefore, there is no reason to interfere with the conviction in this case. The original sentence of two years passed by the City First Class Magistrate was reduced by the Sessions Judge to one year's rigorous imprisonment, and, therefore, that is well within the period of imprisonment prescribed by section 193, Indian Penal Code, when the false evidence is not given in any stage of a judicial proceeding. Considering all the circumstances, we reduce the sentence to six months. This decision will cover the other two cases, Revision Applications Nos. 198 and 199, in which also the sentences are reduced to six months respectively.

SHAR, J.—(October 29, 1920).—I concur in the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice. In view of the opinion of the majority of the Full Bench, by which this Court is bound, it is clear that the two contradictory statements, one of which is recorded by the Magistrate under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, not at any stage of a judicial proceeding, and the other recorded by the Tribunal in the course of a judicial proceeding, can form the basis of an alternative charge under the latter part of section 193, Indian Penal Code.

There is only one more point which has been raised on behalf of the applicant, that the sanction of the Magistrate before whom the statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, was recorded was not obtained in this case, and that, without his sanction, the Trial Magistrate could not take cognizance of the case on an alternative charge. No doubt, an order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, was made by the Commissioners appointed under the Defence of India Act. But it is clear, on the decisions of this Court as also on the provisions of the Code, that in the case of an alternative charge under section 193, Indian Penal Code, based upon two statements made before two different Courts, the sanction of both the Courts or of Courts to which these two Courts may be subordinate for such an alternative charge is necessary. It is true that the applicant in this case could not have applied to this Court to revise the order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, made by the Commissioners appointed under the Defence of India Act. But after the proceedings were sent up to the Trial Magistrate in this case, the plea based upon the want of sanction of the Magistrate who had recorded the statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, could have been taken, and, as I understand from the argument, it was taken. The Trial Magistrate apparently overruled that objection. It was open to the present applicant at that stage to have moved this Court to stay proceedings for want of such a sanction. The Trial Court, however, proceeded with the case and the accused was convicted. The Sessions Judge has overruled the plea on the ground that such sanction was granted in this case by the Commissioners under the Defence of India Act, as a superior Court. This point is now taken before us.

In view of the provisions of section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, it is clear that the want of any sanction or any irregularity in the sanction required by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be made the basis of interference in revision unless such want of sanction or irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice. It cannot be said in the present proceedings that the want of such a sanction has occasioned a failure of justice though the objection was raised apparently before the Trial Court. I may add that I am unable to accept the Sessions Judge's view that, for the purpose of section 195, the First Class Magistrate was a Court subordinate to the Commissioners appointed under the Defence of India Act. I take it, for the purpose of this argument, that the Magistrate recording the statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, was a 'Court' under the Code of Criminal Procedure. In my opinion, there can be no doubt that the duty which the Magistrate is required to perform by way of recording a statement under section 164 Criminal Procedure Code, is to be performed by him as a Magistrate, i.e., as a Court. The further argument which has been urged on the basis that the Magistrate is not a Court does not really arise. But I may add with reference to that argument that if the Magistrate were not a Court, the position of the applicant would become weaker and not in any sense stronger, so far as the point relating to the want of sanction is concerned.

Thus, it seems to me that, though the sanction of the First Class Magistrate of Nadiad, who recorded the statement under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, was necessary, we cannot interfere in revision on that ground under the circumstances of this case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 27—Pardon, whether can be tendered after charge is framed.

There is nothing in section 27 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to prevent a pardon being tendered to a person after a charge has been framed against him [p. 60r, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, First Class, exercising enhanced powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Montgomery, dated the 14th August 1920.

Mr. Badr ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. A. Herbert, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Mangu and Budh Singh, appellants, have been convicted by a Magistrate invested with section 30 powers of dacoity under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment each. The dacoity was committed on the night between the 27th and 29th February 1920 in the house of Chiman Ram which is situated at a distance of 100 feet from the canal rest-house at Jiwan Shah in the Montgomery District. The dacoity is said to have been committed by five persons, viz., the two appellants, Ram Singh, approver, and Bishan Singh and Ghona, who are said to have absconded. The dacoits were pursued from the scene of the occurrence to Chak No. 51, the exact distance of which is not stated on the record, and as the night was a moonlight one, the members of the pursuing party had ample opportunity of seeing their faces and being able to identify them subsequently. Ram Singh was at first put on his trial along with the two appellants and charges were framed against all three of them on the 14th May 1920. A pardon was tendered to Ram Singh on the 7th June and he was examined as a witness in the case on the 17th. The first objection taken by Mr. Kureshi on behalf of the appellants is that it was illegal to tender a pardon to Ram Singh and examine him as a witness after a charge had been framed against him. There is, however, nothing in section 337, Criminal Procedure Code, which prevents a pardon being tendered during the hearing of the case to one of the persons being tried, and Mr. Kureshi is unable to cite any authority in support of his argument. Moreover, section 338 of the Code allows a Court to which a commitment has been made, with the view of obtaining on the trial the evidence of any person supposed to have been concerned in, or privy to, any such offence, as is mentioned in section 337, to tender, or order the Committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender, a pardon on the same condition to such person as is referred to in section 337. There is nothing in the Code to prevent a similar course being taken in a case not committed for trial. I, therefore, overrule this objection.

MANGU V. EMPEROR.

It does not appear exactly why it was considered necessary to tender a pardon to Ram Singh, for there was ample evidence before this was done, which, if believed, would support the conviction of the appellants. The Magistrate has written a very detailed judgment and I have gone through the evidence on the record so far as it concerns the appellants with the help of their Counsel and the Government Advocate. There is ample evidence of eye-witnesses to show that both the appellants took part in the dacoity. Nura, Lakha, Robella and Goman identified both the appellants at an identification parade in the presence of Bawa Mani Ram, Inspector (P. W. No 32), and Nawab and Allu, both of whom were injured at the hands of the dacoits, identified the appellants at another identification parade presided over by Pandit Mangat Rai, Tahsildar (P. W. No. 35). These two gentlemen are entirely reliable witnesses and there is no reason whatsoever for supposing that the identification parades were not conducted in a proper manner and with all necessary precautions. Goman witness actually arrested Budh Singh in Chak No. 51 and he, therefore, had a very good opportunity of identifying him. There was no delay about the arrest of either of the appellants during the Police proceedings, and there is no reason for supposing that the direct evidence against them has been concocted. Mr. Kureshi frankly admits that if the direct evidence be believed, the conviction must be maintained. His main argument is that in the first information report made to the Police it was not stated that the members of the pursuing party would be able to identify the dacoits. This report was made by Mangal Das, son of Chiman Ram, who does not himself profess to identify any of the dacoits. He was, it appears, in a state of bewilderment when he made the report, and I do not consider that it is of any importance that he did not state that some of the members of the pursuing party would be able to identify the offenders. I cannot see any sufficient reason for rejecting the very strong direct evidence which has been produced in the present case, and it is, therefore, quite unnecessary for me to refer to any of the other evidence on the record. The dacoity was a serious one and grievous hurt was caused to two of the villagers by the dacoits who used chhavis as well as a gun. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

Appeal against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna, at Ellore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 414, 410, 402, 413, 419 and 430 of 1917, preferred respectively against the decrees of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Kovvur, in Original Suit
Nos. 64, 60, 14, 63, 126 and 127 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. Ramesam and V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents, took the preliminary objection that no appeal lay from the order of remand. The main question in the case, viz., plaintiff's right to collect water-tax from the defendants was decided by the Appellate Court. The case was remanded for disposal on the remaining minor issues.
The disposal was not on a preliminary point within Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure
Code. See *Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan
Ghuznavi v. Allahabad Bank, Limited* (1),

Vijayaraghava Reddi v. Komarappa Reddi (2),
Raghunandan Singh v. Jadunandan Singh (3),
Athappa Chetty v. Ramanathan Chetty (4).

Messrs. P. Nagabhushanaim and P. Soma-sundram, for the Appellants.—There were a number of issues on which no finding was given. The decision was on a preliminary point and the case was not finally disposed of.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge by which he decided the main question in the suit i. e., the right of the plaintiff to collect water-tax from the defendants and remanded the suit to the District Munsif for disposal on the rest of the issues. The point which has been decided could not, in our opinion, be called a preliminary point, if any significance is to be attached to the qualification “preliminary.” According to a number of rulings of this Court, the most recent of which is reported as Athappa Chetty v. Ramanathan Chetty (4), and also of another decision in Vijayaraghava Reddi v. Komarappa Reddi (2), the decision of the Patna High Court in Raghunandan Singh v. Jadunandan Singh (3) and of the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in *Abdul Karim
Abu Ahmed Khan Ghuznavi v. Allahabad Bank, Limited* (1), the order of remand in this case must be treated as one not coming within the scope of Order XLI, rule 23, but within section 151 of the Code. The preliminary objection is good and no appeal lies to this Court under Order XLII, rule 1 (u). The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Ancestral trade—Debts liability of.

Under Hindu Law a joint family which carries on a trade handed down from its ancestors becomes a trading family, and the shares of the minor coparceners in the property of such a family are liable for debts contracted by the managing member for the purposes of the family trade or for purposes incidental to it. [p. 611, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 8th November 1916.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants.

Lala Jagan Nath and Mr. A. R. Chopra, for Mr. Gullu Ram, for Bahal Singh, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff's suit for the recovery of Rs. 5,775 upon the basis of a promissory note executed by Laehhman Singh, defendant No. 1, having been decreed against all the defendants. Dial Singh and Sultan Singh, minors, have appealed on the ground that they as minors are not bound by the act of Laehhman Singh. The appellants are the sons of Nanna Singh who was the son of Laehhman Singh. Nanna Singh died one year before the institution of the suit and in the plaint it was alleged that all the defendants were members of a joint Hindu family. The defendants-appellants denied this and alleged further that the money borrowed by Laehhman Singh was not spent on the ancestral family business and there was no necessity for the loan. The lower Court held that the minors had not discharged the onus which lay upon them of proving that they were not members of a joint Hindu family and that it had been satisfactorily established that the money for which the promissory note was executed was spent on the ancestral family business.

In the first ground of appeal to this Court it is again urged that the appellants are not members of a joint Hindu family, but Mr.

Moti Sagar in arguments did not attempt to show us that the decision of the lower Court on this point was wrong. On the other hand, he frankly admitted that he could not press this point. It is admitted that the joint family have an ancestral shop in which the business kandla kash is carried on. Laehhman Singh also carries on a wine shop, but it is contended on behalf of the appellants that this was a separate business carried on by Laehhman Singh quite independently of the ancestral family business of kandla kash and that the money borrowed by him was spent in this separate business. The lower Court has held upon the evidence that the wine shop is merely a branch of the ancestral family business and that it has been financed from the ancestral shop. We have perused the evidence on the record and, in our opinion, this finding of the lower Court is clearly correct, as will appear from the statements of the following witnesses:—

Narang Singh, page 6, lines 24 and 25 of the paper-book, says: The wine shop was started 17 years ago. Nanna Singh started it. He is Laehhman Singh's son. The wine business was a branch of the old firm. Our money was used in both the firms. Both shops belonged to Laehhman Singh and Nanna Singh.

Laehhman Singh (page 7, line 33 of the paper-book) says: Laehhman Singh started the wine shop. The funds for this shop came from the shop of kandla kash. Nanna Singh managed both the shops. Laehhman Singh also worked with him. Nanna Singh had no separate business.

Man Singh (see page 8, line 21, et seq) says: Laehhman Singh and his son both did the business (i.e., liquor business). Nanna Singh used to check the accounts and shops in the evening. Nanna Singh used to do kandla business also. Laehhman Singh and his son both owned the shop.

Jawabar Singh (page 9, lines 5 and 8) says: The liquor shop was also joint. Nanna Singh mostly worked on the kandla shop. He used to attend the wine shop also. The funds for the wine shop were taken from the kandla shop.

The important points of Kishan Parshad's evidence are given in detail in the lower Court's judgment, printed at page 18 of the paper-book, and we agree with the conclusion drawn by the lower Court therefrom.

Kalla Ram (page 12, line 34) says: Both supervised the wine shop, but mostly Laohhman Singh attended it. Laohhman Singh, defendant No. 1, has given evidence in support of the plaintiff's claim and has stated that the family was a joint one and that his son, Nanna Singh, did his business on whatever shop he was required, that there was no kharch khata in the liquor shop, that all the property was purchased from the kandla shop and that all the profits were conveyed to that shop. Moreover, all losses were debited to the kandla shop. Having regard to this evidence, we have no doubt that the lower Court is correct in holding that the liquor shop was a branch of the kandla shop and as such it must be considered to be an ancestral family trade.

Mr. Moti Sagar has referred inter alia to Ganpat Rai v. Munni Lal (1), in which it was held that there was no presumption that a debt contracted by the manager of a Hindu family was contracted for the benefit of the family, also to Krishnadran Banerji v. Sanyasi Oharan Mandal (2), in which it was held that a certificated guardian cannot start a new trade for the benefit of his ward at any rate without the sanction of the Court.

On the other side we are referred to Brij Lal v. Jaishi Ram (3), where it was held that it was not a correct statement of Hindu Law to say that when a debt was contracted by one member of an admittedly joint Hindu family, it was necessary for the plaintiff to show that the debt was raised for joint family purposes; to Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, page 211, where it is stated that the manager of a joint family has an implied authority to contract debts and pledge the credit and property of the family for the ordinary purposes of the family business, and to Raghunthji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (4), where it was held that under Hindu Law a joint family which carried on a trade handed down from its ancestors became a trading family and that where a minor was co-parcener in a joint family his share in the family property was liable for debts contracted by his managing co-parcener for any family purpose or any purpose incidental to it.

Having regard to these authorities, we are quite clear that the minor appellants are liable for the debts for which defendant No. 1 executed the pro-note sued upon, to the extent of the family property in their hands. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs and maintain the decree of the lower Court.

Appeal dismissed.

An indemnity-bond executed by a vendor of immoveable property in favour of the vendee which covenants for the payment of compensation to the latter if he is deprived of possession, and which provides for the sale of certain specific property to secure the payment of compensation, is sufficient for the creation of a mortgage in respect of the property so specified, and such mortgage has priority over intermediate mortgages created at a time when there was no debt owing by the vendor to the vendee. NARAYANASAMY RAO v. RAMASAMY NAICKER.

Messrs. T. R. Vankatrama Sastriar and T. M. Ramiswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Perumal Naick was the owner of the three classes of properties which are known as the A, B and C properties. His son is also known as Perumal Naicker. The son brought a suit against the father in Original Suit No. 11 of 1905 for partition. During the pendency of the suit, the father mortgaged all the properties to one Parthasarathy Iyengar by Exhibit E on the 16th September 1908. On the 15th October 1910 he sold a property alone to plaintiff for Rs. 2,000 by releasing that property from the mortgage to Parthasarathy Iyengar by paying the consideration received from the plaintiff to the mortgagee. As the suit for partition was pending then, the father executed Exhibit A on the same date as the sale-deed, Exhibit B, agreeing to indemnify the plaintiff under certain conditions. In January 1911 he mortgaged the B and C properties to the 4th defendant. The decree for partition between the father and the son was passed on the 29th September 1917. Parthasarathy Iyengar sued the first defendant, the son, and the fourth defendant, the second mortgagee, for the balance due to him under the mortgage. In execution of the decree, B and C properties were sold to the fifth defendant on the 2nd March 1914 for about Rs. 5,400. Out of this, a sum of Rs. 3,700 was paid to Parthasarathy Iyengar and the balance of Rs. 1,700 was paid into Court. The fourth defendant applied for the payment of this balance to him in satisfaction of his claim under the second mortgage. It was resisted by plaintiff. On the claim being allowed, the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff asking for a declaration that the balance in Court must be paid to him as his claim under the indemnity-bond was prior in date to that of the mortgage in favour of the fourth defendant and for other reliefs. The District Munsif gave a decree for Rs. 1,00 and costs in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal, that decree was modified by decreasing the plaintiffs' claim for priority to the extent of Rs. 1,300. This second appeal is against that decree.

Mr. Ayya Aiyer has argued a number of questions before us. The most important of them is whether Exhibit A, the indemnity-bond, creates a charge or a mortgage on the properties mentioned in it. It ought to be stated that Exhibit A only refers to the B Schedule properties. It must also be stated that the decree in the partition between the father and the son allotted to each of the sharers a half of every item of the properties in suit. This was an unfortunate procedure which has led to the present complication. If the Court had been apprised of the fact since the suit mortgage and sales have been created by the father, it would have allotted to the father the properties over which he created the mortgage and would have directed him to discharge his own debt leaving the son's share unaffected by the father's transactions. However, that was not done. In our opinion, Exhibit A does create a mortgage. The Subordinate Judge, referring to Imbichi v. Achampat Arukoya Haji (1), has come to the conclusion that a charge was created. In the judgment relied on the learned Judge, differing from Madho Misser v. Sidh Binai's Upadhya (2) and Harjas Rai v. Naurang (3), say that for the creation of a charge, it is not essential that there should be an existing liability. It does not appear that it was argued in that case that there is a distinction in this respect between the language of section 58, and that of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. Whereas, by the terms of section 58, a present mortgage can be effected for a future debt, there are no such words in section 100. Therefore, if the decision in Imbichi v. Achampat Arukoya Haji (1) is to be literally understood as relating to the creation of a charge as different from a mortgage, as at present advised, we would have directed the case to be further argued; but, in our opinion, it is not necessary to canvass that decision as we think that a mortgage was created by the terms of Exhibit A. The same remark would apply to the dictum of Krishnaswamy Aiyar, J., in Balasubramania Nadar v. Sivaguru Asri (4). Therein, the learned Judges speak of the creation of a charge as opposed to that of a mortgage. As was pointed out in Rama Brahmam v.

HARBARAN LAL U. NAURANGI KUNWAR.

Venkatamarasu Puntulu (5) and Ramachariar v. Dorasami Pillai (6), there are apt words in Exhibit A which are sufficient for the creation of a mortgage in respect of the properties given as indemnity. The date is specified; the property is specified; there is a covenant to pay. These are words which indicate that the property is to be sold in case the debt is not re-paid.

One other contention of Mr. Ayya Aiyar must be noticed, that is, although the mortgage in terms might have been created on the date of the execution of Exhibit A its legal consequence attached to the property given as security only on the happening of the contingency contemplated, namely, the deprivation of plaintiff's possession. We are unable to agree with this contention. The language of section 58 is clear and, unless the parties contemplated the bringing into existence of the mortgage on a future date, the rule is that, on the date of the execution of the document, the mortgage takes effect. Instances of mortgages for future debts are very common. In such cases it has never been suggested that an intermediate mortgage would deprive the creditor of his priority if such intermediate mortgage was created at a time when there was no debt owing from the debtor to the creditor. In our opinion, there was a mortgage, and that mortgagee, that is, the plaintiff, is entitled to priority over the 4th defendant's mortgage. In this suit the question of right of subrogation need not be considered.

The two further subsidiary questions are, whether the lower Court is right in giving the plaintiff 12 per cent. interest. The plaintiff is not entitled as of right to any particular rate of interest. All that he is entitled to is, some compensation for the deprivation of possession. The value of the property would, no doubt, be the particular amount on which interest by way of compensation will have to be awarded. We think that the interest at 12 per cent. awarded by the Subordinate Judge is too high. Six per cent. should be the rate of interest.

The last question relates to the nature of the decree that we should pass. As held in Balasubramania Nadar v. Sivaguru Asari (4), the plaintiff, who is an intermediate mortgagee between Parthasarathy and the fourth defendant, is entitled to sue for the sale of the properties mortgaged to him, as he was not a party to the suit by Parthasarathy. The equities in the case cannot be satisfactorily worked out without impleading Parthasarathy. We must reverse the decrees of the Court below and remand the suit to the Court of first instance with the following directions:—

(5) 18 Ind. Cas. 209; 23 M. L. J. 131; (1912) M. W. N. 1124.

(6) 29 Ind. Cas. 605.

(a) Parthasarathy should be made a party.

(b) He must be directed to deposit in Court the monies received by him with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum.

(c) The monies paid by the fifth defendant for the purchase should then be paid to him out of this sum and out of the money in Court with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of payment.

(d) The properties B and C should then be brought to sale afresh.

(e) Parthasarathy should be paid the balance due to him out of the sale-proceeds.

(f) Out of the balance, the amount due to plaintiff should be paid with respect to the properties given as indemnity.

(g) The balance, if any, should be paid to the fourth defendant.

Costs will be provided for by the first Court.

Third and Revenue Courts—Ejectment—Dispute between—Procedure, proper.

HARBARAN LAL v. NAURANGI KUNWAR.

The Civil Court has jurisdiction to eject a trespasser, but the mere denial by a sub-tenant of his tenancy does not make him a trespasser. [p. 614, col. 2.]

Where in a suit for ejectment the defendant is described as a sub-tenant, and he denies the sub-tenancy and practically sets up that he is the tenant-in-chief, it is open to either of the parties to seek in the Civil Court a declaration that he is the tenant-in-chief, as that Court is the proper Court to try all disputes between rival claimants to a tenancy, and if, in such a suit the Court finds that the defendant is a sub-tenant, it ought not to decree possession and damages; the proper decree is for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to hold as tenant-in-chief. [p. 614, col. 2; p. 615, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 29th of March 1912.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Gokul Prasad and Badri Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a plot No 96/2 khassra situated in the village Kuli Kalan. The plaintiff, Musammatt Nuranghi Kunwar, claims to be the occupancy tenant of the said plot in succession to her husband, Brindaban. The land is at present in the actual cultivation of the defendant, Harbaran Lal. The plaintiff filed a suit for the ejectment of the defendant in the Revenue Court alleging that the latter was her sub-tenant. The defendant denied that he was a sub-tenant of the plaintiff. The Revenue Court evidently accepted his defence and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff then filed the present suit for possession of the said land with mesne profits, alleging that the defendant had wrongfully denied the title of the plaintiff in the Revenue Court. The defendant re-asserted that he was holding possession of the land in his own right and that the plaintiff had no right to it and had not been in possession of it within 12 years previous to this suit. His story was that the land in question was lying fallow behind his house and that about 10 or 12 years prior to the suit he brought it under cultivation at his own expense and has been in possession since. Several Zemindars, however, gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff and supported her claim to the tenancy of the disputed land. In the revenue papers her husband, Brindaban, who was formerly the Patwari of the village, was recorded as the occupancy tenant of that plot, holding it rent free. The Court of first instance distrusted that evidence and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff, or her husband, had no real title to the said land and that the plaintiff had not been in possession of it as a tenant-in-chief at any time within 12 years prior to the suit. It accordingly dismissed the claim. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court found that the husband of the plaintiff was the tenant in chief of the disputed plot and after the death of her husband the plaintiff got into possession and that the defendants held possession of the same as a sub-tenant of the plaintiff from the year 1314 F. It decreed the claim accordingly for possession and mesne profits.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant contends that, on the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, no suit for ejectment was entertainable in the Civil Court. He relies on the decision in Ram Sukh v. Gokul Chand (1) and in Bechu Sahu v. Nand Ram Dos (2). In both these cases it has been held that an agricultural lease can be determined only by the lessor taking proceedings under the Tenancy Act, and the reason which the land holder may have for desiring to eject the tenant has nothing to do with the procedure to be adopted for his ejectment. It is unquestionable that a trespasser can be ejected through the Civil Court, but the mere denial by a sub-tenant of his tenancy does not make him a trespasser. If the person whom the plaintiff describes as a sub-tenant sets himself up as a tenant-in-chief it is open to either of them to seek in the Civil Court a declaration that he is the tenant in chief of that land. In Narain Singh v. Gobind Ram (3) it was held that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to eject as a trespasser a person whom the plaintiff, an occupancy tenant, described as his sub-tenant but who, he asserted, had lost his right by reason of his having set up in a previous proceeding the title of a chief tenant and obtained a decision to that effect from the Revenue Court. BHUMIREDDI SURANNA v. BHUMIREDDI APPADU.

pointed out in Bhup v. Ram Lal (4), a Civil Court is the proper Court to try all disputes between rival claimants to a tenancy. But a person found to be a sub-tenant cannot be ejected by it. The defendant here denies the sub-tenancy alleged by the plaintiff and practically sets up that he is himself the tenant-in-chief. He does not claim proprietary right against the Zemindar who is not even a party to the suit. The plaintiff can obtain a declaration against him that she is the tenant-in-chief of the disputed plot and not the defendant. She cannot, however, eject him through the Civil Court if he is her sub-tenant as the lower Appellate Court finds him to be. The case is somewhat complicated by the fact that the Revenue Court is stated to have already found in the ejectment proceeding that the defendant was not a sub-tenant of the plaintiff, but, even if he is not a sub-tenant, the plaintiff, as a tenant-in-chief, can still claim such rent from him as may be found equitable under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901). The plaintiff is, therefore, not without remedy. The decree for possession and damages cannot, in any case, stand. Though no objection as to the jurisdiction was raised by the defendant in this suit, the finding of the lower Appellate Court brings that question prominently up and in view of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5), the proper course seems to be to discharge that portion of the decree of the lower Appellate Court which grants the plaintiff proprietary possession and mesne profits over the property in dispute against the defendant who has been found to be her sub-tenant, and to grant instead a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to hold the land in question as a tenant-in-chief. The appeal is allowed accordingly in so far that, in lieu of the decree granted by the Appellate Court, the plaintiff will be granted a declaration that she is entitled to hold the disputed land as a tenant-in-chief. She will get her costs here and heretofore from the defendant appellant who will bear his own costs throughout.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Claim against family property—Claim referred by some members to arbitration—Arbitration, whether binding on family property.

Where a person makes a claim against the property of a joint family, and the claim is referred to arbitration by some members only of the family and a settlement is effected by them with the claimant, the arbitration and settlement are not binding on the family property. [p. 616, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, dated the 7th July 1919, in Appeal Suit No. 123 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Chodavaram, dated the 27th September 1916, in Original Suit No. 403 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Appellants.—The award is not binding on the family as the reference to arbitration was not by all the members of the family. It is not competent to second and third plaintiffs to make the reference so as to bind the family. The authority or consent of the first plaintiff was not obtained.

Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Respondents.—The award was the result of a bona fide settlement with the third defendant. Bona fide compromise by the manager of a family is binding on the family. At any rate, the award will be binding on the second and third plaintiffs, the parties to the reference, though not on the other members. When it is competent for a co-parcener to alienate his share for consideration it is also competent to him to bind himself by a reference to arbitration.

JUDGMENT.—The third defendant in the suit who is the principal respondent before us claimed to have been adopted by a member of the family of the three plaintiffs. During the absence of the first plaintiff from the village, the two other plaintiffs who are the remaining members of the family and the third defendant referred the question as to the latter's status to the arbitration of five persons. One of these persons did not act; the four others made an award giving the land in dispute to the third defendant. The District Munsif decreed the plaintiff's suit holding that there was no valid award nor anything which can be called a valid and binding settlement of a family dispute. The Subordinate Judge has reversed that decree. He agreed with the Munsif that the adoption was not proved by evidence, but he says that the award, though made only by four out of five arbitrators originally named by the parties had been accepted by the second and third plaintiffs and, therefore, was binding on them either as an award or at least as a family settlement.

The question arises whether second and third plaintiffs had any authority to bind the family by means of arbitration or by a settlement with the third defendant. The first plaintiff did not join them at all and there is nothing to show that, in his absence and without his consent, the other two plaintiffs, the remaining members of the family, had authority to enter into a transaction of this nature.

There can be no doubt that, if all the members of the family combined and agreed to an arbitration or settlement like this, it would be valid, but that did not happen in this case. It might also be, though it is not necessary to decide the point, that a manager of a family might, by entering into a bona fide compromise of a claim of this nature, bind the family. Even that has not been sought to be made out in this case. Alienation by a member of a joint Hindu family of joint family property for valuable consideration has been upheld in this Court. But there is no authority in support of the proposition that some members of a Hindu family can bind the family property by submitting to an arbitration a claim made by a third person, or by entering into an arrangement with him. In the absence of any authority, we should not be justified in extending the law as to the power of an ordinary member of a joint Hindu family to deal with his share in the joint family property. If the arbitration or settlement was without authority, the result would be that it would not bind any members of the family and not as contended for by the learned Pleader for the respondent, third defendant, that it would bind those who were parties to the settlement, though it would not affect the share of the member who did not join.

We reverse the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and restore the judgment of the District Munsif with costs here and in the Court below.

CIVIL REVISION No. 184 of 1920.

December 15, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

Musammam NAINU—PETITIONER

BHUPENDRA NATH RAKHIT AND OTHERS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 58, 60, 6 — Claim petition—No finding as to possession and interest of claimant, effect of.

Certain property was attached in execution of a decree N claimed an interest in, and possession of, the property. The court disallowed the claim, holding that N had some interest but not the entire interest, without finding what the nature of N's interest was in the property or whether the judgment-debtor or M. was in possession:

Held, that, under Order XXI, rules 60 and 61, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the order was illegal, and was liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court. [p 617, col 2; p 618, col. 1.]

Application for revision against the decision of the Small Cause Court Munsif, Arraria, District Purneah, dated the 10th May 1920.

Mr. Akbari, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Shambhu Saren, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against the order of the Munsif, dated the 10th May 1920, disallowing the claim of the petitioner under Order XXI, rule 58, to the property attached in execution of the decree of the opposite party. The Court dismissed the claim, holding that the petitioner got the property from her husband by way of inheritance and consequently she cannot claim entire interest in the property to the exclusion of her son, the judgment-debtor, and as the property attached is only 5-annas share the claimant's interest is not affected by the attachment.

It is contended that the above finding of the Court was not sufficient to dispose of the claim-case lodged by the petitioner, inasmuch as it was incumbent upon the Court to determine as to whether the property was in the possession of the judgment-debtor or the claimant, and if the Court found that the property was not in the possession of the latter, the claimant, then the claim should have been allowed. It is also said that the finding of right or title to the property does not dispose of the claim under the said order. In support of this the learned Counsel has relied upon the case of Monmohiney Dassee v. Radha Kristo Dass (1) and contends that the order of the Mansif disallowing the claim was not without jurisdiction although it did not determine the question of possession. In that case the authority of the order passed under the corresponding section 278 of the old Code of Civil Procedure was challenged by the person against whom the order was passed as well as by another person who was not a party to the claim-case in a suit brought by the purchaser of the property for the recovery thereof from the aforesaid persons. It was there held that the order passed disallowing the claim was not without jurisdiction and was conclusive between the parties. The ratio decidendi of the case was, that the Court in the claim-case based its decision not only upon the finding of possession but upon the finding of any interest in the property. In the case of Rani Kanta Rai v. Kedar Nath Biswas (2) the objection to the claim preferred by the purchaser of a holding to the attachment and sale of the property in execution of a rent-decree obtained by the landlord on the ground that the decree was a money decree and that the interest of the judgment-debtor having passed to the claimant the landlord was not entitled to attach it, was overruled by the Court holding that the claim, although preferred under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was in fact one under Order XXI, rule 58 and the Court dismissed it by virtue of section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The High Court of Calcutta (Tannon and Cuming, JJ.) refused to interfere in revision on the ground that, although the Subordinate Judge committed an error of law in holding that the application came under Order XXI, rule 58, yet the petitioner had other remedies.

In the case of Maung San Ba v. Maung Lun Bye (3), the Burma Court declined to interfere in revision with the order releasing the property from attachment holding that the property was in the possession of the claimant. The ground urged for revision was that the Court had not applied its mind to the consideration of the provisions of section 110 of the Evidence Act and had not considered the evidence produced. This was held to be not a sufficient ground for interference. This case does not help the opposite party, inasmuch as the Court's decision was based upon the finding of possession. The same remark applies to the case of Bhairon v. Musummat Ramnia (4).

In none of the authorities relied upon by the opposite party the question was directly raised as to whether, in a claim based entirely upon possession, the order of the Court disallowing the claim without any finding as to possession is valid or not. This question was answered in the negative in the case relied upon by the learned Counsel for the petitioner, namely, Monmohiney Dassee v. Radha Kristo Dass (1).

In the present case the petitioner claimed not only interest in the property but also possession of the entire property. The Court held that she had some interest but not the entire. It did not find as to what was her interest exactly in the property and whether it covered the share wholly or partly claimed by the petitioner, namely, six-annas. It did not come to any finding as to whether the claimant or the judgment debtor was in possession of the six annas attached. The order was clearly wrong under rules 60 and 61 of Order XXI.

MUHAMMAD ZAMAN BEG v. ILAHI BUX.

The question then is, whether this Court is competent in revision to interfere with the aforesaid illegal order. Mr. Shambhu Saran contends that the Court has no power. Mr. Akbari strenuously resists this contention. The lower Court, no doubt, had jurisdiction to entertain the claim preferred by the petitioner and also to disallow or to allow it, but in the exercise of that jurisdiction it committed material irregularity in not coming to the finding of possession upon which alone its order disallowing the claim could be supported. In this view this Court has jurisdiction to set aside the order and remand the case to the Munsif to dispose of the application in accordance with law. The fact that the losing party has other remedy, namely, of instituting a suit, does not, in my opinion, relieve the lower Court from exercising jurisdiction properly, legally and regularly. The claimant has a right to get her redress under Order XXI, rule 58, if she establishes her interest and possession in the property attached and there is no reason why this should be disallowed simply because the Court has jurisdiction to disallow or allow the claim, when the Court has not come to a definite finding upon which alone its order rejecting the claim could be sustained.

The result is that I allow this application and remand the case to the Munsif for determination in accordance with law. It will be open to the parties to adduce such evidence as they can.

The costs of remand will abide the result. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 8 (8)—Lease—

Heritable and transferable rights conferred on lessees—Status of lessees—Rent, whether liable to enhancement.

The status of a lessee who, by the terms of the lease, has conferred upon him both heritable and transferable rights, is that of an under-proprietor within the meaning of section 3 (8) of the Oudh Rent Act, and the rent payable by him is not liable to enhancement.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Lucknow Division, dated the 20th of August 1919, in a case of enhancement of rent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit brought under Chapter VIIA of the Oudh Rent Act for the enhancement of rent which was alleged in the plaint to be favourable.

The Commissioner has held that the defendant respondent has under proprietary rights and that his rent is not, therefore, liable to enhancement under the Resumption Chapter of the Act. The only question in this appeal is, whether the perpetual lease upon which the defendant respondent relied had an effect of creating under proprietary rights. The appellant relies solely upon the terms of the lease itself. The terms of the lease recited that the rent fixed at the time of the grant was to be payable up to the next Regular Settlement but then it was to be liable to revision. It is argued from this that the rent was not, in consequence, formally and finally fixed. This, however, seems to me to be a useless contention, for the plain meaning of the lease is merely that the rent was to be liable to revision at the next Settlement. As a matter of fact, this result would probably have ensued even if there had been no condition to that effect.

The other point taken by the appellant is that, again, according to the terms of the lease, if the lessees sold or mortgaged their rights, they were to sell or mortgage them to the lessor or his heirs. This seems to me to reserve a kind of right of pre-emption and does not take away the general power to transfer.

There is no doubt that the document conferred both heritable and transferable rights on the lessees. They are clearly brought within the definition of under-proprietor in section 3 (8) of the Oudh Rent Act. There is no provision in the

MOHAN LAL v. NIRANJAN DAS.

Act for enhancing the rent of an under-proprietor and the Commissioner rightly held that the failure of the appellant to get the rent revised at the last Settlement cannot affect the respondent's rights.

I agree with the Commissioner's finding and dismiss the appeal with costs.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 3240 OF 1916.

January 20, 1921.

MOHAN LAL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus

NIRANJAN DAS AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS
—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Donee, estate taken by—Gift over, validity of.

The Will of a Hindu testator contained the following clause:—"My wife will be the owner of this house. She will be at liberty to alienate it or dispose it of according to her wishes. None of my descendants will have any concern with it during her lifetime. If my wife does not give or alienate it to any person, it will remain the joint property of my grandsons".

Held, 1 that the widow obtained an absolute estate in the house under the Will [p. 60, col. 1]

(2) that the gift over in favour of the grandsons was null and void. [p. 60, col. 1]

In interpreting a Will the whole of it must be read, its language must receive its literal construction, its wording must be construed in its plain ordinary meaning in its plain and obvious sense, no portion of it should be treated as redundant and contradictory and the ambitions and wishes of the testator with respect to the devolution of his property must be taken into consideration [p. 62, col. 2]

The word 'malik' implies 'absolute ownership' unless there is anything in the context or surrounding circumstances to qualify such meaning and it is not so qualified by the fact that the donee is a widow. [p. 62, col. 2; p. 623, col. 1]

If an estate is given in terms which confer an absolute estate to a named donee, and, then further interests are given merely after or on the termination of that donee's interest, and not in defeasance of it, his absolute interest is not cut down and the further interests fail. [p. 624, col. 1]

When an absolute interest has been given to the first taker, followed by a gift over of what may not be required by him, the gift over, though couched in the most direct and precise words, is void for uncertainty [p. 24, col. 1]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 8th November 1916.

Mr. Zafar Ullah Khan, Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Mehar (Kama Maharon, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Manohar Lal and Diwan Mehar Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the possession of a house known as Garhiwala, situate in Kucha Muteaddi Mal, Lahore City. It belonged to Rai Bahadur Lala Gopal Das. The plaintiffs, Niranjn Das and Narisingh Das, are two of the grandsons of the Rai Bahadur. The defendant, Lala Mohan Lal, is also a grandson of the said Rai Bahadur. Before stating the facts on which the claim is based it is necessary to set out the pedigree of the family to which the parties belong. Rai Bahadur Lala Gopal Das had four sons, namely, Lala Narain Das, Rai Sahib Lala Kishan Chand, Lala Bishen Das, Rai Sahib Lala Devi Das, and a daughter, Bishen Devi. Lala Narain Das died in the lifetime of his father on the 13th December 1911 leaving Niranjn Das, plaintiff No. 1, and Narisingh Das, plaintiff No. 2. Mohan Lal is the son of Lala Bishen Das, who is said to have died on the 9th October 1914. Mr. Brij Lal, Barrister-at Law, is the son of Rai Sahib Lala Devi Das, both of whom are alive and have figured in this case as witnesses for the defence. The daughter, Bishen Devi, is married to one Lala Kidar Nath, by whom she has a daughter Musammat Jasoda, who is married to one Ram Chand, also a witness for the defence. Shortly put, the allegations on which the plaintiffs came into Court are as follows:—

On the 12th January 1912 Rai Bahadur Gopal Das made his last Will by which he bequeathed all his moveable and immoveable property in favour of his sons, grandsons and his wife, Musammat Uttam Devi. One of the properties bequeathed under the Will was a house known as Garhiwala, situate in Kucha Muteaddi Mal, in the City of Lahore. The third clause in the Will dealt with the house in dispute and ran in these words:—

"The house known as Garhiwala, situate at Lahore, Kucha Muteaddi Mal, was acquired by me (Rai Bahadur Gopal Das).

MOHAN LAL v. NIRANJAN DAS.

It adjoins the walls of the house of Pandit Ganesh Das. Musammot Uttam Devi, my wife, will be the owner of this house. She will be at liberty to alienate it or dispose it of according to her wishes. None of my descendants will have any concern with it during her lifetime. If my wife does not give or alienate it to any person, it will remain the joint property of Niranjan Das and Narsingh Dass, my grandsons."

The testator died on the 9th July 1912, and on his death Musammot Uttam Devi, his widow, and the plaintiffs continued to be in possession of the said house. The lady, Musammot Uttam Devi, having also died on the 9th May 1913 the plaintiffs continued in possession as before. In December 1914 the defendant having taken unlawful possession of the house during the absence of the plaintiffs the latter lodged a complaint under section 443 of the Indian Penal Code, but the dispute being of the nature cognizable by a Civil Court the defendant was discharged. The plaintiffs thereupon instituted the present suit claiming possession of the house under the terms of the Will of their grandfather, Rai Bahadur Lala Gopal Das, dated the 12th January 1912.

The suit was resisted principally on the grounds that, under clause 3 of the Will, the house in suit was given absolutely to Musammot Uttam Devi with full power of alienation, that she had acquired full ownership thereof on the death of the testator, and that the provision in respect of gift over in favour of the plaintiffs being opposed to law was void and unenforceable. It was further pleaded that in any case the plaintiffs could not succeed as the entire house had been gifted by Musammot Uttam Devi in favour of the defendant's father Bishen Das, who in his turn had by a Will, dated the 7th October 1914, devised it in favour of the defendant.

By way of a reply to the pleas in defence the plaintiffs filed a replication in which they raised a plea of estoppel against the defendant to the effect that the latter having previously realized Rs. 1,209 from the plaintiffs under the first clause of the Will in enforcement of a similar provision, it was not open to the defendant to challenge the condition in respect of the remainder over as being null and void.

Five issues were struck by the learned Subordinate Judge with reference to the allegations arising on the pleadings.

The first issue related to the factum of the alleged gift of the house by Musammot Uttam Devi in favour of the defendant's father.

The second issue raised the question whether she was competent to make the gift or whether she had only a life-interest in the house.

The third issue related to the question whether the provision "if my wife does not give or alienate it to any person it will remain the joint property of Niranjan Das, and Narsingh Das my grandsons," is null and void according to law.

The fourth issue raised the general question as to who would be legally entitled to the house in suit in case the alleged Will in favour of the defendant's father was not established and the claim of the plaintiffs to succeed after the widow under clause 3 of the Will was not made out.

The fifth issue raised the question of the estoppel against the defendant as stated above.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the defendant had failed to establish by evidence the alleged gift of the house by Musammot Uttam Devi to his father Bishen Das. He considered the question of the Will in favour of the defendant by Bishen Das immaterial, but held the evidence as to the Will to be unsatisfactory. The evidence as to the possession of the defendant was also held to be worthless. The Issues Nos. 2 and 3 relating to the nature of the interest created in favour of Musammot Uttam Devi and as to the legality of the remainder over were found in favour of the plaintiffs. The Issue No 5 was also found against the defendant, who was held to be estopped from questioning the legality of the provision as to the gift over. In view of the above findings, the property in question was held not to be the istridhan of the widow and not, therefore, heritable by Musammot Bishen Devi, her daughter, as such. The finding on Issue No. 4 was also in favour of the plaintiffs. In accordance with the above findings, the claim of the plaintiffs was allowed and a decree for possession of the house in suit was given in their favour.

MOHAN LAL V. NIRANJAN DAS.

The defendant has come up in appeal to this Court and the pleas raised by him in the Court below have been reiterated in the memorandum of appeal to this Court and the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge has been impugned upon all points. Mr. Tek Chand has read the evidence bearing on the question of the gift by Musammatt Uttam Devi in favour of the defendant's father, the Will in favour of the defendants by his father and their possession under the gift. As regards the value of the evidence we are in entire accord with the learned Subordinate Judge. The first witness as to the alleged gift is Rai Sahib Lala Devi Das. On the face of his evidence, it is clear that he is an interested witness and not well disposed towards the plaintiffs with whom he has been at feud. We have no hesitation in rejecting his evidence.

The next witness on the point is Mrs. Maroof. Her evidence is altogether vague and indefinite. Moreover, a case of cheating was pending against her and she was involved in debt and appeared to be under the influence of the defendant, who was a Naib-Tahsildar, in the District of Lahore, at the time. Having regard to her status and position it is not at all safe to rely upon her evidence and it was rightly rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The evidence of Dr. Ram Jas and Mr. Brij Lal also is not of much value, having regard to their connection with Lala Devi Das whose evidence has already been rejected on grounds mentioned above. The learned Subordinate Judge has given cogent reasons for disbelieving the evidence of Ram Chand, and we entirely agree with him.

The evidence of Ishar Das, Diwan Chand and Atma Ram has not been much relied upon in the argument before us and does not possess much value. Much stress was not laid upon the evidence on the question of possession and the Will by Lala Bishen Das in favour of the defendant. It is, therefore, unnecessary to discuss it in this judgment.

The main and the most important question on which lengthy arguments were addressed by the Counsel for both the parties was the question of the construction of the Will by Rai Bahadur Lala Gopal Das, and we will now deal with the several questions raised in the argument relating to the respective rights of the parties under the said Will. A translation of the Will is printed at pages 57-60 of the paper-book, and it is admitted by the Counsel of the parties to be fairly accurate. As indicated above, the learned Subordinate Judge has held that, according to the construction put by him on the third clause of the Will, only a life interest was created in favour of the widow, Musammatt Uttam Devi, and the clause "if my wife does not give or alienate it (Garhiwala house) to any person it will remain the joint property of Niranjan Das and Narsingh Das, my grandsons" was not opposed to law and operated to confer the house on the plaintiffs as the lady had not given or alienated it to any person. After a careful consideration of the contents of the Will and the authorities cited by the Counsel, we are constrained to come to a different conclusion from that of the learned Subordinate Judge for the following reasons. After reciting the preamble, the Will proceeds to lay down the conditions. It is divided into three clauses. The first clause relates to moveable property and may be stated here in full, as on the provision of this clause the question of estoppel was raised. It runs thus :

"My moveable property of every description, whether cash, ornaments, clothes, utensils, or anything else, shall be entirely owned by my wife till her lifetime, if she survives me (is sab jaedid manqul ki malik meri aurat ta hayat hogi). Whatever is left after her death shall be owned by my two grandsons, Niranjan Das and Narsingh Das, sons of Lala Narain Das, deceased, in equal shares. If this property, left at the death of my wife, is worth more than Rs. 1,500, then my two grandsons, Niranjan Das and Narsingh Das, shall pay Rs. 1,500, out of it to my third son, Lala Bishen Das. No other descendant of mine shall have any concern whatsoever with this moveable property of mine. If my wife predeceases me, then whole of this moveable property shall be owned by my aforesaid grandsons Niranjan Das and Narsingh Das, and they shall pay Rs. 1,500, out of it to Bishen Das, provided the value of the property exceeds Rs. 1,500."

Now in this clause it is clearly provided that the widow would own the property till her lifetime (ta hayat). Here the testator intended to create a life interest only and gave effect to it by making use of appropriate, clear and unmistakable words.

The clause 2 relates to immoveable property. The first three items of properties are given to Niranjan Das and Narsingh Das, and it is provided that "all these three houses shall be owned by Niranjan Das and Narsingh Das, sons of Lala Narain Das, deceased. Other descendants of mine shall have no concern whatever with the said house." The words in vernacular are (in har seh makinat ke malikan Niranjan Das aur Narsingh Das pisan Lala Narain Das mutw fi honge).

There can be no possible doubt as to the intention of the testator as regards the nature of the interest given. Similar words are employed with regard to the houses allotted to Lala Kishen Chand, Lala Bisen Das and Lala Devi Das. Keeping in mind the expression "ta hayat" used in clause 1 and the words "malikan" or "malik" as used in clause 2 we have now to discover the intention of the testator with regard to the interest created under clause 3. The clause 3 opens with the significant words that "the house known as 'Garhiwala,' situate at Lahore, Kucha Muteaddi Mal, is my self-acquired property." Evidently, by describing the property as his self-acquired property the testator intended to convey that he had full right of transfer over the property. Then the testator goes on to provide that "my wife, Musammnat Uttam Devi shall be its proprietor" (is ki malik meri Zauja Uttam Devi hogi). Evidently, he intended to employ the word "malik" in this clause in the same sense in which he had used it in clause 2. "Malik" means a full or absolute owner. In order to emphasize his intention further the testator went on to say, "she is at liberty to transfer it or dispose it of in whatever way she likes" (us ka ikhtiyar hai keh jis tarah chahé ba maré khul us ko intikal ya sarf karé): "None of my descendants shall have any concern whatever with this house during her lifetime." The ownership of Musammnat Uttam Devi is not limited by the expression "ta hayat" as it was done in clause No. 1.

The farther provision as to her unlimited power of transfer left no room for speculation as to what sort of interest the testator intended to create. A large number of rulings and commentaries have been cited before us laying down rules to be observed in construing a Will. It is not necessary to refer to those authorities specifically, as the following passage in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge fairly and accurately describes the law on the subject:—

"That in interpreting a Will the whole of it must be read, that its language shall receive its literal construction, that its wording will be construed in its plain ordinary meaning in its plain and obvious sense, that no portion of it is to be treated as redundant and contradictory, and that the ambitions and wishes of the testator with respect to the devolution of his property will be taken into consideration."

In the Court below reliance was placed on behalf of the defendant on Norentra Nath Sarcar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (1) and Lala Ram ewan Lal v. Dal Koer (2), and it was argued that, under section 111 of the Succession Act, 1865, applicable under the Hindu Wills Act, 1800, the legacy to the plaintiffs could not take effect and the original gift to the widow was absolute and indefeasible on the testator's death. In rejecting this argument the learned Subordinate Judge observed that the case of a son being the beneficiary under a Will stands on quite a different footing from that of a widow who ordinarily has a life interest. Whatever at one time might have been the view with respect to an estate which a female took under a Will giving her that estate as a malik, there is no doubt left as to the nature of such an estate and the meaning of the word malik in the light of authoritative pronouncements on the question by their Lordships of the Privy Council and the decisions of the various High Courts in this country. In the case of Surajmani v. Erbi Nath Ojha (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that "the use of the word 'malik' implies 'absolute ownership' unless there is anything in the context or surrounding circumstances to qualify such meaning and it was not so qualified by the fact that the donee was a widow."

The distinction pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge between the cases of a male and a female donee under a Will, therefore, has no force, in the light of the authoritative pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

In the case of Thakur Parshad v. Jamna Kunwar (4), a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court, following the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Suramani's case (3), held that "unless there is something in the context qualifying it the word 'malik' used in a Will bears its technical meaning."

In the case of Wazir Devi v. Ram Ohand (5), decided by a Division Bench of the Lahore High Court, "A Hindu executed a Will bequeathing his moveable and immoveable property in equal shares to his mother and widow using the words 'kulli ikhtiyar wa milkiat' in the document. After his death his mother made a gift of her share to her daughter and daughter's son. The next heir of the testator then brought a suit for a declaration that the gift should not affect his reversionary right." The learned Judges held that a Will by a Hindu in favour of a female must be interpreted in the same way as if it was in favour of a male, and that the word 'milkiat' implies an absolute estate unless there is something in the context to qualify it. It was argued in that case, on the authority of Rallia Ram v. Musammatt Fed Kaur (6), that it may be presumed, in the absence of clear indication to the contrary, that a devise of immoveable property to a Hindu widow does not give a state of inheritance, but only a life-estate or a widow's estate as understood by Hindu Law. The learned Judges held that this view, however, could no longer be held to be good after the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Suramani v. Rabi Nath Oha (3). On the authority of these rulings, we must give effect to the contention of the appellant that the provision constituting Musammatt Uttam Devi, the 'malik' of the house in dispute conferred an absolute and full proprietary interest on her. We have, however to see whether anything can be discovered in the context which may have the effect of cutting down the absolute state to a state for life only. On behalf of the respondent reliance is placed upon the very clause which is impugned as null and void, creating a gift over after creating an absolute state. That clause, as already mentioned, run thus :—

"Ba shart i ke meri aurnt kisi ko makan na de jaye ya intikal na kare to phir makan mere har dopoton Naranjan Das aur Narsingh Das ka mustharka hoga", that is, if my wife does not give this house to anybody or does not alienate it, then this house shall remain the joint property of both of my grandsons, Naranjan Das and Narsingh Das.

If effect cannot be given to this provision according to law, as we shall presently state, it cannot have the effect of cutting down the absolute state to a state for life only. Reliance has also been placed by the respondent upon the following words in clause 3, namely, "none of my descendants shall have any concern whatever with this house during her lifetime", and it has been contended that it was contemplated by the testator to limit Musammatt Uttam Devi's right to a life only. In order to construe the Will, according to the well recognised canons of construction, we must construe these words in such a manner that no portion of it may be redundant and contradictory. In our opinion, while making use of the above expression, the testator had in contemplation the clause by which he was going to provide for a gift over in favour of his two grandsons. He evidently intended to lay down that his two grandsons would have no concern whatever with the house during his widow's lifetime. We are clearly of opinion, after reading the clause 3 as a whole, that an absolute and complete ownership was conferred by the testator on Musammatt Uttam Devi. The clause provides "ke us kark kar kar keh jistarah chah ba meri ikhad us ko intikal ya sarf kare." It is difficult to conceive what more could have been done by the testator to secure to his wife a full and heritable interest.

The next question we have to decide is, whether the clause conferring the house on the plaintiffs after the death of Musammatt

MOHAN LAL V. NIRANJAN DAS.

Uttam Devi is null and void, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim it. The question of the construction of a Will containing almost identical provisions came up for decision before a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sures Chandra v. Lalit Mohan Dutta (7). A very exhaustive judgment was delivered by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mookerjee, in which all the authorities both English and Indian pro and con were considered and discussed. Most of the cases cited before us by the Counsel for the respective parties have been discussed and criticised by that eminent Judge. The facts of that case, as summarised in the head-note, were these:—A Hindu testator appointed his wife as his executrix. A clause in the Will vested in her whatever might remain, after the payment of debts and expenses, absolutely and with complete power of alienation. Other clauses provided for the adoption of sons and in case of there being no adopted son or no son or wife of the adopted son at the time of the death of the widow, the heir, according to the Hindu Shastras, who should be alive at the time, should get the properties which should remain after disposal by the widow by way of gift or sale.

The following rules were laid down in that case:—

(a) That the testator gave an absolute interest in his estate to his widow with full powers of alienation; that the gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her was void and inoperative in law.

(b) If an estate is given in terms which confer an absolute estate to a named donee, and, then further interests are given merely after or on the termination of that donee's interest and not in defeasance of it, his absolute interest is not cut down and the further interests fail.

(c) When an absolute interest has been given to the first taker followed by a gift over, of what may not be required by him, the gift over, though couched in the most direct and precise words, is void for uncertainty.

An attempt was made by the Counsel for the respondent to distinguish that case from the case before us on the ground that in the reported case along with the word malik the word "nirbuyadha" was used, which indicated an absolute ownership. The Arabic word malik, according to its true import, also carries the meaning of full and complete ownership. In fact, after the decision of their Lordships in Suraimani's case (8) no possible doubt can exist as to the exact meaning of the word malik, granting for a moment that the learned Judge, who decided the Calcutta case, attached some importance to the word "nirbuyadha". We find in this case an equally emphatic and significant provision which clearly indicates that what the testator intended to confer upon his wife was a complete and absolute interest. A full owner has the right to transfer his property as he may wish without any control or limitation. In the present case, as already pointed out, full authority is given to Musammatt Uttam Devi to transfer the house or dispose it of in whatever way she may like. If the testator had intended to limit the power of transfer in order to keep the property intact for the benefit of his grand-sons after the life of the widow he would have made suitable and clear provision enjoining upon the widow to keep the property intact to be left by her for the benefit of these two grandsons. The decision of the Calcutta High Court, therefore, fully applies to the facts of this case.

Similar rule has been laid down in the cases of Nistarini Debya v. Behari Lal Mukhopadhyaya (9) and Sulochana Debi v. Jagattarini Debi (10). It is clear from the explicit provision of the clause 3 that the plaintiffs were to get the house only in the case of the widow not exercising her power of alienation. The element of uncertainty as to the devolution of the property on the plaintiffs makes the gift null and void as held in various cases.

The learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon three cases in support of his view that only a life interest was conferred upon Musammatt Uttam Devi under the Will, namely, Lallu v. Jagmohan (10), Ram Chand

v. Dewan Chand (11) and Hara Kumari Dasi
v. Mohim Chandra Sarkar (12).

The first case was decided by the Bombay High Court before the decision of the Privy Council in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (3). Moreover, there was element of uncertainty as to the devolution of the property in that case as the whole property was kept intact to be handed over to Mahalaxmi, see page 413.

The second case, Kam Chand v. Dewan Chand (11), is also clearly distinguishable. In the Will construed in that case power of alienation was not given to Musammot Darga Davi. It was clearly understood that the whole property was to go intact to Hukam Davi.

The third case, Hara Kumari Dasi v. Mohim Chandra Sarkar (12), lays down a rule somewhat different from that laid down in Sures Chandra v. Lalit Mohan Dutta (7), but, as observed by Mr. Justice Mookerjee, where it can be clearly gathered from the provisions of a Will that only a life-interest was intended to be conferred upon the first donee, a gift in remainder can validly be made in favour of a second donee after the life of the first donee.

Each case must be decided according to the special features of its own. Having regard to the construction we have placed upon clause 3, we are of opinion that the rulings in Sures Chandra v. Lalit Mohan Dutta (7), Sulochana Debi v. Jagattarini Debi (9) already referred to and Tripurari Pal v. Jagat Tarini Dasi (13) are more applicable to this case.

The decision of the Court below on the question of estoppel, in our opinion, also cannot be supported. The defendant claimed and took Rs. 1,500 provided by clause 1 of the Will. The interest in the moveable property was created only for life. Therefore, the condition providing the payment of Rs. 1,500 to the defendant out of the residue was not void or inoperative. We fail to see how the defendant is estopped from taking exception to the condition as to the gift over in clause 3 of the Will.

In the view we have taken of the case the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain this suit under the Will. It is not necessary to decide in this case as to who else is legally entitled to the house in dispute. The plaintiffs having failed to establish their title the suit must be dismissed. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs with costs in all Courts.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Tenant permitted by landlord to continue after termination of lease—Landlord, right of, to eject.

A landlord who permits his tenant to hold on after expiration of the term of the lease is not thereby precluded from ejecting the tenant.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 21st June 1918.

JUDGMENT.

LOVETT, S. M.—(December 9, 1918).—In this case the respondent held the land in suit under a seven years' lease which expired in 1321 Fasli. The landlord allowed him to hold on for another year and then caused a notice of ejectment to issue.

The Commissioner holds that by not ejecting immediately, the landlord re-admitted the tenant to a fresh and statutory tenure. I cannot take this view.

The first plea urged by the respondent before the Commissioner is to the effect that after 1324 Fasli "he remained in possession by virtue of the same patta." This conclusively shows that there was no re-admission or fresh agreement.

The circumstances of this case differ widely from those of Ramdatt v. Raja Muhammad Ali Khan (1) referred to by the Commissioner. I would accept the appeal and uphold the ejectment notice. I would give the appellant costs and Pleader's fees in all Courts.

FERRARD, J. M.—I concur. This case is clearly distinguishable from Ramdatt v. Raja Muhammad Ali Khan (1), which lays stress on the length of the period, vis., three years, during which the appellants were accepted and treated by the respondent as his tenants after the expiry of their lease. The inference of admission to a fresh statutory period of tenancy was clear. The present case is very different. The period for which the tenant has stayed on after the expiry of his term of lease is only one year, which in itself is hardly sufficient to warrant such an inference here, and it is further negatived by his own plea that he was in possession by virtue of his expired lease.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 14, 20—Arbitration—Award—Order refusing to file award, nature of—Arbitrator omitting to decide matter which parties have settled—Misconduct.

An order rejecting an application to file an award is not a decision that the award is in law a bad award. [p. 628, col. 2]

Where, after a reference to arbitration and before the making of an award, the parties interested arrive at an agreement as to one of the matters in controversy, and the arbitrator omits to decide that matter, or to record as part of the award the agreement of the parties, the omission does not amount to such misconduct on the part of the arbitrator as would necessarily make the whole award bad. [p. 630, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 16th of June 1917.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Radha Kant Malaviya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this litigation are members of the same family. In 1911 a dispute arose and it was decided to submit all matters in controversy to arbitration out of Court. On the 21st of April 1913 the arbitrator made his award. The history of what occurred in the interval between these two years is fully stated in the judgment of this Court in Hari Kunwar v. Lakshmi Ram Jani (1), and we shall have to refer to that decision later on. Within six months of the award being made, two of the plaintiffs applied to the Subordinate Judge, under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have the award filed. The Court took appropriate action under that paragraph and issued notice to the other side. They appeared and objected but their objections were overruled and the Court passed an order under paragraph 21 of the Schedule for filing the award and ordered a decree to be prepared in accordance with its terms. From that order the defendants appealed and raised in their appeal substantially the same objections which they had taken in the Court below and which are taken again here. We will refer to them later. This Court, on appeal in the case already mentioned, held that the lower Court should not have ordered the award to be filed. It appears that after the award was made the parties obtained possession of the property involved according to the terms of the award. After the decision of this Court the plaintiffs filed the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration that the award of the 21st of April 1913 was a good and valid award and one which bound all the parties, and asked to be maintained in their possession. They did this, because the defendants had taken steps to recover possession of property of which the plaintiffs had taken possession under the award. The defendants-appellants here raised two main contentions. One was that, under the law as amended by Act V of 1908, the suit was not maintainable because the decision of this Court in Hari Kunwar v. Lakhmi Ram Jani (1) operated as res judicata; and, secondly, that on the merits, there was misconduct on the part of the arbitrator such as would vitiate the award, and that there were other defects also in the submission to arbitration. The Trial Court, after hearing evidence, has decreed the suit and the defendants come here in appeal. The same two grounds again are pressed but the only misconduct on the part of the arbitrator that has now been pressed is, that he omitted to determine at least one of the questions submitted to him for decision.

As regards the plea of res judicata the argument is as follows. Section 89 of the new Code of Civil Procedure introduces a new legal position, and by that section it is enacted that the procedure to be adopted in all arbitration proceedings is that laid down in the paragraphs contained in the Second Schedule of the Act, unless otherwise provided for by special legislation. It is urged that the result of this amendment was to overrule all the older cases, such as Kunji Lal v. Durga Prashad (2), in which it had been held that an order under section 525 of the old Code, refusing to file an award did not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit to enforce the award. It is said that now the only course open to a party who has obtained an award in his favour, and who wishes to avail himself of it, is to make an application within six months of its date under the terms of paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code. If he does not do so, then, the argument is, that the award becomes mere waste paper and is ineffectual for any purpose either by way of attack or of defence. Similarly, or rather, a fortiori, it is argued that if a Court acting under paragraph 21 refuses to make an award a rule of Court that decision is final, and the finality of that decision is emphasised by the fact that a new paragraph has been introduced in clause (f) of subsection (1) of section 104 of the new Code. It seems to us that this contention is not well-founded. The framers of the new Act took all the sections in the old Act which referred to arbitration out of the body of the Code and re-enacted them in very much the same language as before in the Second Schedule. Some changes in language were made, but only, apparently, with the object of getting rid of the conflict which existed in the various Courts in India in the interpretation of the old sections. Having done this; it seems to us, it was necessary for the framers of the new Act to enact some such section as section 89 in the body of the Act, to show that the procedure to be adopted in arbitration proceedings was to be found in the Second Schedule and that the rules in that Schedule would govern all such proceedings unless otherwise provided for by some special Act. We do not think that this 89th section made any new substantial innovation of law. It left matters practically as they were before.

When we turn to paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Schedule, it is not very easy to follow the language used. Thus, in paragraph 15, it is said "an award remitted under paragraph 14 becomes void on failure of the arbitrator or umpire to reconsider it." From this it would seem that an award which contained a flaw in it, inasmuch as the award had left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration, referred to in paragraph 14, was not in itself void, but that it only became void if, after it had been remitted to the arbitrator or umpire, he had refused or failed to amend it. Be that as it may, these sections are found in that part of the Schedule which refers to the procedure to be adopted in arbitration made in pending suits. The rules which govern arbitrations made out of Court are to be found in paragraphs 20 and 21. In paragraph 20 the words are that "any person interested in the award may apply to any Court having jurisdiction." It does not say that the "person interested" shall or must apply. It does not say that if he does not apply under that paragraph, then the award ceases to have any effect. If this had been the intention of the Legislature, as argued, we think it would have been very easy for it to have used suitable words. Now, where such an application has been filed under paragraph 20, the Court after issuing notice as laid down in that section can pass only one of two orders. If it "is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon and where no ground, such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15, is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed." If, on the other hand, it finds that, for reasons mentioned in paragraphs 14 and 15, there is a flaw in the award, it cannot remit it, according to the rulings of this Court, and unlike the English Act of 1889, but must confine itself to dismissing the application. An appeal can be made from such an order specifically under section 104 (1) (f) of the present Code. It is argued that this implies that the Code meant to give finality to a decision under paragraph 21, and that the arguments which appeared to have found favour with the Judges of this Court in Kunji Lal v. Durga Prasad (2) and which they seemed inclined to adopt, but were prevented from adopting by reason of the cursus curiæ of this Court, applied with great force. In our opinion, however, the object of enacting clause (f) was to remove the conflict of opinion which prevailed in the various High Courts in India as to whether an appeal lay under the old section 525. Incidentally, also, it cleared up another matter that was open formerly to debate, namely, whether an order under section 525 was not really a decree and appealable as such. It is made quite clear that an order under the corresponding section, that is paragraph 21, is not a decree but is an order from which an appeal has been allowed. In our opinion, the amendments made in the new Act have in no way affected the law as it stood and, therefore, on this part of the case we think the appeal fails. We may note that, just as the lower Court could only pass one of two possible orders as stated above, so this Court in appeal could only decide whether the lower Court was right in passing the order which it made. It had no wider jurisdiction. The only point which it could, and which, in fact, it did, decide was that the proper order for that Court to have made, was to reject the application, and to that extent, and to that extent only, is the decision authoritative and binding.

(2) 6 Ind. Cas. 127; 32 A. 494; 7 A. L. J. 425.

It did not find, and could not have found, decisively that the award was in law a bad and inoperative award. In fact, the learned Judges are careful to say so, vide page 389* of the report, and, therefore, any observations which they have expressed as to the validity of the award, are only to be read as their reasons for refusing to file the award, having regard to paragraph 14 of the Schedule, and are not binding on us as a decision that the award was in law a bad award. Now, on the merits it has been argued that the award is vitiated by the misconduct of the arbitrator; and we agree that, if the defendants could prove that there was misconduct which in law would vitiate the award, then they were entitled to establish it. Now, in the present case the misconduct which is said to vitiate the award is the allegation that the arbitrator failed to determine one of the questions submitted to him. That question related to the future residence of Musammât Hari Kunwar. The Trial Court has taken evidence on the matter and has come to a finding with which we agree; and the facts appear to be these. At the time when the submission to arbitration was made, this question, as to the future residence of the lady, had not been decided and it was submitted to the arbitrator as one of the matters which he had to determine. The arbitrator has sworn that before he came to make his final award on the 21st of April 1913, that is, two years after the submission to arbitration, he had an interview with the lady and she expressed her desire to continue to reside in the house in which she was then living and had been living before. Thereupon, the arbitrator went to Rabi Ram Jani, the owner of the house, and told him of the lady's wishes. He said that he was perfectly willing to allow her to live in his house as long as she liked, and the other parties to the arbitration offered no objection. It was a matter which did not concern them. As the only two parties who were concerned in the matter, namely, the lady and Rabi Ram Jani, were agreed on this point the arbitrator came to the conclusion that that matter was no longer in controversy, and, therefore, he said nothing about it in his award. On this state of facts we have to see whether his omission to record a finding to the effect that the parties interested had agreed amongst themselves as to the residence of this lady in the future, did really amount to an omission by him to decide a matter in controversy which required his decision. We are inclined to think that it did not. Reliance has been placed on the general rule in England, as set out in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, page 469, in paragraph 185, which is based on the case of Randall v. Randall (3) and other cases which are collected there, to the effect that the failure of an arbitrator to decide one out of several matters referred to him vitiates the award. In that case it appears that there were three matters in sharp conflict between the parties and the arbitrator was asked to decide each one of them. He failed entirely to decide one and, therefore, one point in controversy remained entirely undecided in spite of the arbitration. It was held that, under those circumstances, the whole arbitration award was bad. In the view which we take in this case of the action of arbitrator, we think this case can be distinguished on the ground that no question really remained undetermined at the time the award was made. It appears, however, that the rule so broadly stated has been to some extent modified by Indian decisions. We were referred by the appellants to the case of Ganes Narayan Singh v. Malida Koor (4). In that case, similarly, the Court below had ordered an award to be filed under paragraph 21 of the Schedule although one at least of the matters in controversy had not been decided. In dealing with this point, the learned Judges, after stating the law as laid down in Randall v. Randall (3) and other English cases, and going on to say that the same rule had been adopted in the American Courts, state that in their opinion the arbitrator had failed to adjudge on all the matters in question "for the award, upon a reasonable construction of the whole of the instrument, must be taken to have left undecided one of the cardinal points in controversy, namely, whether the testator belonged with the present appellants to a joint Hindu family."

It seems to us that in that particular case the omission to decide a point which went to the root of the matter, as that did, was in itself quite enough to vitiate the award. But another case of the same Court has been relied upon. It is to be found in Ramji Ram v. Salig Ram (5). But if it is examined carefully it seems to us to be a complete answer to both parts of the appellants' argument. In that case an award was made by the umpire on the 18th of April 1909 in an arbitration out of Court, that is to say, it was an award which was made after the present Code (Act No. V of 1908) came into force. It was patent on the face of that award that the arbitrator had entirely failed to decide one of the most important matters which had been referred to him, namely, how much money was due by one party to the other. Within six months from the date of the award Salig Ram commenced that suit. It was a suit, according to the plaint, for the establishment of his rights and for partition of the estate. The foundation of the claim was unquestionably the arbitration award but the plaintiff prayed in the alternative that if, in the opinion of the Court, the award of the umpire was not for any reason a valid award the suit might be treated as one for partition, for accounts and for incidental reliefs. The claim was resisted on every conceivable ground, among others, that the arbitrator had been guilty of misconduct. No less than 20 issues were fixed by the Trial Judge. It would seem to be obvious that that was not an application made under paragraph 20 of the Schedule, nevertheless the District Judge, in spite of the comprehensive character of those issues, treated the suit as one under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule and, having heard objections, overruled them and ordered the award to be filed and a decree to be prepared in accordance with it. This naturally satisfied neither party. The decree on the award as it stood failed to give the plaintiff the relief he sought, namely, the money which he claimed was due to him, and the defendant objected to the award on the ground of various allegations of misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, quite apart from the fact that he had omitted to decide one of the questions submitted to him. The Calcutta High Court allowed both the appeals and, when dealing with the question as to how far the failure of the arbitrator to decide one of the matters referred to him vitiated the award, again referred to the English rulings which we have already discussed. The learned Judges in the end go on to say that "an award will not be set aside if the question undecided was not notified to the arbitrator as a matter in difference, or the parties showed by their conduct that they did not mean him to decide it." Now, in this case, as we have said above, the parties had agreed and, therefore, it may be said, that they did not intend the arbitrator to decide a matter which was already settled by the time when he was to make his award. However, in remitting the case back for trial to the Court below it is instructive to note the direction which they gave to that Court. "The case will be remanded to the District Judge in order that he may first take up the question of misconduct of the arbitrators and the umpire raised in the 15th paragraph of the written statement. The parties will be allowed to adduce evidence upon this matter. If it is decided in favour of the defendants, the whole of the award must be treated as invalid and inoperative in law. The questions in controversy between the parties will then be decided upon evidence as if no award had ever been made. If, however, the objection taken by the defendants on the ground of misconduct fails, the suit will be tried out on the merits on the footing that the questions raised in the first four issues before the arbitrators have been definitely settled by them. These questions, and these questions alone, will be taken to have been finally decided by the arbitrators, all other questions which arise on the pleadings in this suit and are covered by the issues must be determined on evidence and a final decree made." It appears from this decision that it is not necessary for a party to an award to make an application under paragraph 20 and also that if an award fails to determine a particular matter it does not necessarily make the whole award bad, but that in a suit between the parties so much of the award as is good will be taken as such and so much as is not covered by the award will be left for decision.

It would be lamentable if we were forced now, seven years after it has been carried into effect, to upset the award on the ground simply that the arbitrator failed to record as part of his award the agreement under which this lady who was living in the house has continued to live in it ever since and which is not really a matter in issue.

On all these grounds we think that the appeal fails, and it is accordingly dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Evasion of arrest, whether fraudulent prevention of execution—Limitation, fresh starting period of.

The wilful evasion by a judgment-debtor of arrest under a warrant taken out by the decree-holder, in order to avoid payment of the decree-amount, amounts to fraud within the meaning of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code so as to give a fresh starting period of limitation, and is a fraudulent prevention of the execution of decree within the meaning of clause 2 of that section.

Appeal against the order, dated 26th February 1919, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Execution Petitions Nos. 1518 and 1524 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 11 of 1902, (Tinnevely Sub-Court).

GEORGE HENRY HOOK v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar (with him Mr. K. V. Sessa Aiyangar), for the Appellant.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—There can be no doubt, upon the facts as found by the lower Court, that the judgment-debtor, appellant before us, has been evading arrest for a long time. No less than 6 warrants were taken out for his arrest, and there is no difficulty in coming to the conclusion, as the lower Court has done, that he has been wilfully evading arrest in order to avoid payment of the decree-amount.

According to the rulings of this Court and also of the Allahabad High Court, those facts would amount to fraud within the meaning of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, that is, wilful evasion of arrest under warrants taken out by the judgment-creditor, is fraudulent prevention of the execution of the decree, within the meaning of section 48 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. It is not necessary for the judgment-creditor to prove by positive evidence that, but for the conduct of the judgment-debtor, he would have realised the decree. The law on the subject was first laid down in Annamalai Goundan v. Rangasami Chetti (1), although in that case there were other fraudulent acts as well on the part of the judgment-debtor. This ruling has been followed in Abdul Khadir v. Ajiyur Ahammad (2), and Nathuram Sivagi v. Krishna Kommolthy (3). The same view of the law is taken in the Allahabad High Court in Mohsen Ali v. Masoom Ali (4). There is no doubt a dictum of Shephard, J., in Seshachalam Chetty v. Rajam Chetty (5), to the contrary. But it does not appear that the authorities on the point were brought to the notice of the learned Judge. Following the decisions mentioned above, we must hold that there was fraud in the sense of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code so as to give a fresh starting period of limitation. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ODGERS, J.—I agree, and I would only add a word as to the case in Seshachalam Chetty v. Rajam Chetty (5), cited by the learned Vakil for the appellant. It was a case before Mr. Justice Shephard and I think it is important to notice that, as I understand the case, there was no evidence of fraud and that the decision turned on that finding. In this case I agree with my learned brother because there is ample evidence of fraud within the meaning of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is quite clear to my mind that the case in Seshachalam Chetty v. Rajam Chetty (5), can have no bearing on the point before us. I also agree as to the effect of the Madras and Allahabad decisions cited before us.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

February 10, 1921.

Present:—Lord Buckmaster, Lord Phillimore, Sir John Edge, Mr. Ameer Ali and Sir Lawrence Jenkins.

GEORGE HENRY HOOK—APPELLANT

versus

THE ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF BENGAL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Res judicata—Previous decision in same suit, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, whether exhaustive.

When a question at issue between the parties to a suit is heard and finally decided, the judgment given on it is binding on the parties at all subsequent stages of the suit. Its binding force depends not upon the Code of Civil Procedure, section 11, but upon general principles of law: if it were not binding, there would be no end to litigation. [p. 634, col. 2.]

Ram Kripal Surtal v. Rup Kuari, 11 I. A. 37; 6 A. 269; 4 Sar P. C. J. 483, 3 Ind. Deco. (N. S.) 718, followed.

Appeal from an order of the Calcutta High Court, (Lanslot Sanderson, C. J., and Woodroffe, J.), dated July 1st, 1918, reversing an order of Chaudhri, J.

FACTS of the case are stated in their Lordships' judgment. It may be added that the appellant, the Reverend G. H. Hook, was Pastor of the Lal Bazar Baptist

GEORGE HENRY HOOK V. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF BENGAL.

Church: the Reverend B. Evans, Pastor of the Howrah Baptist Church, was respondent No. 4 and supported the present appeal. The Appellate Bench of the High Court held that the question whether the gift over to charities infringed the rule against perpetuities was not res judicata; and that such gift over was invalid under section 101 of the Indian Succession Act. Hence the present appeal.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. O., and R. B. Hodge, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Tomlin, K. O. and A. A. Uthwatt, for Respondent No. 1, (the testator's next-of kin).

Mr. Turnbull, for Mr. Dube, for Respondent No. 4.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O., for the Appellant, submitted that section 101 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, did not apply to bequests to religious or charitable uses; alternatively, that it did not apply to the bequest in question, which was valid in law. But, further, the matter was res judicata; Chaudhri, J., had decided once for all that the bequest was good. The contention before him was that the gift over might not operate within perpetuity limits: he held that this was not so, and that the vesting was immediate. The Appellate Bench had erred in allowing the question to be raised again. A decision between the parties in the same suit operates as res judicata.

Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Rup Kuari (1).

The next-of-kin could have appealed from the 1912 decision of Chaudhri, J., but failed to do so.

Mr. Tomlin, K. O., for Respondent No. 1, (he was asked to confine himself to the question of res judicata) submitted that the frame of the Will was that during lives certain annuities should be paid and the surplus income dealt with in a particular way: after that, there was a definite gift of corpus: a condition imposed on a gift to one charity: and a gift over.

The Court which dealt with the case in 1912 dealt only with the first gift. The question how the corpus should go could not be determined and was not determined.

With regard to the first gift no question of perpetuity arose; as to the second gift, it did.

Under the decree the question as to the disposal of the corpus was left over in the widest terms, with liberty to all parties to apply.

The reason there was no appeal was that the parties thought the question was left over.

Mr. Uthwatt followed.—The two gifts were quite independent, and the judgment of Chaudhri, J., decided nothing as to the second.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O., in reply.—It is clear from the judgment of Chaudhri, J., in 1912, that the contention before him was that the gift over might not take effect till after the period when vesting must occur, and that he overruled that contention.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—On the merits of this controversy their Lordships are not called upon to decide, for, in their opinion, the respondents are estopped from raising the contention they desire to advance by reason of the judgment that has already been given between themselves and the appellant upon the point.

The dispute arises under a Will and four codicils made by one Dr. Henry Wilkin Jones, who died on the 8th July 1909.

By his Will the testator appointed the Administrator-General of Bengal as executor and trustee, and bequeathed to him his real and personal estate upon trust for sale and investment, and directed, after payment of debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, that the residue should be held to apply the income as therein provided, during the life of his wife. On the death of his wife, he directed payment of certain legacies and then created trusts of the income of the fund to endure during the lifetime of certain named persons. By paragraph 17, he directed that, on the death of the survivor of these named persons—and such survivor was Miss Eliza Humphreys—a further trust should be imposed upon his trustees to sell and convert his real property, apparently forgetting that that had already been done. He also again provided for the investment of the proceeds of sale and declared that the trustees should hold the same;—

GEORGE HENRY HOOK v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

"For the full sum of Rs. 30,000 if the said trust funds shall amount to so much or exceed that sum but not otherwise and if the said trust funds shall not amount to so much then to hold the whole thereof upon trust to pay the income thereof quarterly to two of the Deacons for the time being of the Circular Road Baptist Church to be by them applied in manner following, namely, as to a moiety thereof for the Poors' Fund in connection with the said Church for the sustenance and support of the poor belonging to the said Church or the congregation usually worshipping in the said Baptist Chapel and as to the other moiety for the General Fund in connection with the said Church for the following purposes, namely, the support of the Pastor for the time being the expenses of the religious services held in the said Chapel repairs to the Chapel Pastor's dwelling-house and out-offices connected therewith and also for keeping my grave in decent order which shall be a duty imperatively incumbent on the Deacons for the time being of the said Church to perform."

If the trust fund exceeded the sum of Rs. 30,000, and this in the event has happened, he declared that as to all the balance thereof the trustees were to hold the same on the trust declared in respect of the sum of Rs. 30,000.

By his first codicil (22nd May 1901) the testator revoked a number of provisions in the Will, gave new directions with regard to the payment of the income, and provided that if Miss Eliza Humphreys should survive her sister, Miss Anne Humphreys, her annuity should on her death be paid to two Deacons of the Lower Circular Road Baptist Church to be applied by them in the manner mentioned in paragraph 17 of his Will and by clause 20 of this codicil he gave the balance of the income in the same terms.

By his second codicil, dated the 2nd March, 1903, the testator imposed certain conditions upon the gift made in favour of the Lower Circular Road Baptist Church, and provided that if the conditions should be broken,—

"Then, and in that case one half of the interest, dividends, etc., that I have set aside for the said Lower Circular Road Baptist Church shall be made over and paid to the Pastor for the time being of the Howrah Baptist Church for the benefit of the said Church generally and the other half thereof to the Reverend Arthur Jewson's Faith Orphanage at present at No. 117, Dharamtalla Street (if then existing) or if not in existence to the Pastor of the Lal Bazar Baptist Church for the benefit of the said Church and of the poor of the Church."

His third and fourth codicils are not material for the purpose of this appeal.

The testator's wife predeceased him, and died on the 25th July 1907.

The Lower Circular Road Baptist Church did not comply with the conditions set out in the codicil and on the 17th February 1911 the Administrator-General of Bengal instituted a suit asking, among other things, what would be the destination of the funds in the event of the provisions in favour of the Circular Road Baptist Church being forfeited and whether the gift over in the second codicil would take effect or whether there would be an intestacy. To this suit the present respondents, Joseph Henry Jones, and Emma Adelaide Jones, were parties as representing the next of-kin of the testator and they contended in favour of the intestacy on the ground that the period in which the gift-over might take effect would be beyond the period in which vesting must occur.

The case was heard on the 16th July 1912,* before Mr. Justice Chaudhri. He decided that the Baptist Church had not conformed to the conditions, and he held that the gift over to the other charities was valid. He then dealt with the contention which he said was strenuously urged on behalf of the next of-kin that the whole gift to the Baptist Church and other charities failed for the reasons already mentioned. He carefully examined the authorities and held that the contention was unsound. He concluded this part of his judgment in these words:—

"The vesting in this case is immediate, but the Lower Circular Road Baptist Church is debarred because certain conditions cannot be fulfilled by them."

He then continued:—

"I also hold there is no intestacy as to * See Administrator-General of Bengal v. Hughes, 21 Ind. Cas. 163; 40 C. 192[Ed].

the surplus income or any part of it during the lifetime of Eliza Humphreys."

Finally, he dealt with the question as to whether a gift of income, without more, was a gift of corpus, and he stated that that question did not then arise as Miss Eliza Humphreys was still alive, but he stated definitely that the question would arise upon her death. In the same way he dealt with the contention that the Lower Circular Road Baptist Church might finally comply with the conditions, and that also was left over. The decree that was drawn up contained an express declaration that the gift over in the 2th clause of the second codicil was valid, and concluded by a provision in these words—

"And this Court doth not think fit at present to determine the destination of the income of the said Residuary Trust Funds or of the corpus thereof or the rights of parties therein and thereto respectively after the death of the said Eliza Humphreys and doth defer the determination of the said questions until after the death of the said Eliza Humphreys"— and liberty to apply was reserved.

Miss Eliza Humphreys died on the 10th April 1917 and on the 8th September 1917, the Administrator-General of Bengal presented a petition for the further construction of the Will and codicils.

Upon the hearing the respondents, representing the next-of-kin, contended that the reservation in the decree enabled them to re-raise all the questions that had formerly been discussed. They urged that the gift of the surplus income during the life of Miss Eliza Humphreys must be treated as distinct from the gift after her death and that as to the former no question as to a perpetuity could possibly arise, and that such question was consequently one of the matters that was left over for subsequent decision.

The learned Judge held that this matter had already been definitely settled and, in addition, gave reasons why he adhered to his former opinion. This was, in fact, superfluous. The question as to the perpetuity had been definitely and properly before him on the former hearing, and was, in fact, decided without any reservation, as is made plain by the terms of the judgment itself, which show that the determination of the dispute as to the perpetuity was the foundation of the whole judgment and that the questions left over were those to which attention has been directed and which themselves are abundant to explain the meaning of the passage in the decree on which reliance is placed. It is not, and indeed it cannot be disputed that, if that be the case, the matter has been finally settled between the parties, for the mere fact that the decision was given in an administration suit does not affect its finality [see Peareth v. Marriott (2)]. The Court of Appeal, however, took a different view, and regarding the question as still open decided it against the appellant, but the error in their judgment is due to the fact that they regarded the question as completely governed by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section prevents the re-trial of issues that have been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, and this question obviously arises in the same and not in a former suit, but it does not appear that the learned Judge's attention was called to the decision of this Board in Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Rup Kuari (1) which clearly shows that the plea of res judicata still remains apart from the limited provisions of the Code, and it is that plea which the respondents have to meet in the present case. In the words of Sir Barnes Peacock, at (page 41*)—

"The binding force of such a judgment in such a case as the present depends not upon section 13, Act X of 1877, (now replaced by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure) but upon general principles of law. If it were not binding there would be no end to litigation."

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the appellant in this case is right, and that this appeal must be allowed. They have accordingly humbly advised His Majesty to this effect and also that the appellant should receive his costs here and in the Court of Appeal out of the estate; the Administrator-General and the fourth respondent also to have their costs in the Court of Appeal out of the estate, and the order of the Judge in the Court of JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff (appellant) purchased two houses, Items Nos. 1 and 2 in schedule B attached to the plaint, from the 1st and 2nd defendants who are reversioners to the estate of one Sabapathy Chettiar. The deed of purchase is Exhibit A, dated 27th November 1914. The 3rd defendant purchased Item No. 1 under Exhibit XI (a) on the 20th December 1913 from one Munusamy Mudali who had bought the property from one Marimuthu Chetty, his sister Thangachiammal and Sivakami, the widow of one Pakkiriswamy Chetty, under Exhibit XI in 1908. Marimuthu and Pakkiriswamy derived their title under a deed of gift or settlement, Exhibit VIII, dated 1901 from one Karuthan. Defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10 are interested in Item No. 1 along with the 3rd defendant, Item No. 2 is in the possession of the 6th defendant the widow of one Muthusawami Chetty, her son, the 7th defendant and a lessee, the 8th defendant. Sixth defendant's husband, Muthuswami Chetti, had bought this property under Exhibit XIII (a) on the 28th September 1882 for Rs. 562 from one Nilambal.

First defendant, Rayappa Chetty, and Karuthan alias Muthayan Chetty are grand-sons by two daughters of Sabapathy Chettiar. Neelambal, who died in 1882, was the third daughter of Sabapathy Chetty. Sabapathy Chetti had left two other daughters, Meenakshi and Visalakshi. Meenakshi died in 1890. Visalakshi, who was the survivor of the five sisters, died on 5th February 1909. The property in dispute along with another house was first inherited by Sivakami, the widow of Sabapathy Chetty. When she died in 1899 there were only three daughters then living, Meenakshi, Visalakshi and Neelambal, the mothers of Rayappa Chetty and Karuthan having predeceased their mother Neelambal, the 2nd defendant's mother, had another son called Veerappan, who died in 1905. At the time of Visalakshi's death the only surviving grand-sons (daughter's sons) of Sabapathy were defendants Nos. 1 and 2. These are the material facts in regard to the history of the family.

In 1869, soon after the death of Sivakami, a suit was instituted by her eldest daughter Meenakshi against her sisters, Visalakshi and Neelambal, and the sons of her other two deceased sisters, Karuthan alias Muthayan, the 1st defendant, Rayappan, and his brother, Kanagasabai, for partition of her share. By the decree in that suit she got 1/5th share in three houses including the two houses involved in this suit. The decree apparently gave her an absolute right to a 1/5th share in the family properties. Then the parties by the documents Exhibit III series, dated 26th April 1873, effected a partition of the properties. Meenakshi, Payappan, his brother, and Karuthan got one house, Item No. 1; Neelambal got another house, Item No. 2; the third going to Visalakshi. The next transaction in order of date was a partition in the family of Karuthan and Rayappan, who were the sons, as we have already stated, of two sisters. In 1874 Karuthan instituted a suit for partition to which Meenakshi was a party and obtained a decree for 1/3rd share in Item No. 1. It appears that Meenakshi sold her 1/3rd share in that item to Karuthan in the same year. Afterwards, in 1875, there was a further arrangement in Karuthan's family by which Karuthan got Item No. 1 solely to himself, the 1st defendant, Rayappan, and his brother, Kanagasabai, having transferred their 1/3rd share to him and Karuthan having already obtained by purchase the 1/3rd share of Meenakshi. Thereafter, in 1901, Karuthan who possessed the entire rights in Item No. 1 made a gift of it to or settled it by Exhibit VIII on his wife's brothers and cousins, Marimuthu and Pakkiriswami, as already stated, through whom the 3rd defendant derived his title. The second item having fallen under the arrangement evidenced by Exhibit III series to Nilambal, she transferred it to the husband of the 6th defendant, as above mentioned, in 1882. Visalakshi died in 1909 and upon her death the 1st and 2nd defendants, the only surviving grand-sons, daughter's sons, of Sabapathy Chettiar succeeded to the estate as reversioners, and the plaintiff having purchased their rights instituted this suit to recover these houses.

The suit has been dismissed, firstly, on the ground of limitation. On that point the Subordinate Judge has clearly erred and Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar, who appeared for the respondent, has hardly made an attempt to support the judgment on this ground. Whatever the law might have been on that point under the Act of 1859, under the present Limitation Act, the right of suit for possession accrues to the reversioner on the date of the death of the Hindu female. Visalakshi having died in 1909, the suit which was instituted in 1917 was within 12 years as allowed by law and it is difficult to see how it could be held to be barred. All that the alienees from the females would be entitled to is to enjoy the property during the lifetime of the females but on the death of the females, the estate vests in the reversioner and he becomes entitled to the property unless it can be shown that the alienation made by the female is binding on the reversioner. The law is settled that a Hindu female, whether a widow or a daughter, can make a valid and binding alienation for necessity or can surrender her estate by renouncing it in favour of the nearest reversioner. None of the alienations in question have been attempted to be supported as a surrender; they could not be so supported as they were not of the entire estate.

The main ground on which the 3rd and 6th defendants have sought to support their title is estoppel as against the 1st and 2nd defendants, vendors of the plaintiff. We may say, so far as the 2nd defendant's share is concerned, that he was not even born at the date of the various transactions which have been recited above and there could be no estoppel as against him. The question has to be considered with reference to the share of the 1st defendant, Rayappa Chetty.

We will deal first with Item No. 1. The 1st defendant was a party to Exhibit II and to the suit of 1869 by which Meenakshi obtained a 1/5th share. Exhibit III series are deeds of partition. Exhibit V (a) is a judgment in the suit between Karuthan and the members of the family, 1st defendant being a party to the suit. Exhibit VI is a deed of partition by which Rayappa Chetti, the 1st defendant Kanagasabai and Karuthan Chetty divided their family properties and under which Karuthan became solely entitled to Item No. 1. He then made a settlement on the persons who sold Item No. 1 to the vendor of the 3rd defendant. The question of law is, whether the 1st defendant, having been a party to all these transactions, can now, when the reversion has fallen to him, turn round and claim the same property against the person who derived title under those transactions. It is not contended before us that, if the 1st defendant is estopped the plaintiff would not also be estopped. There seems to be only one decision which is strictly in point and that is a ruling in Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row (1). That bears out the case of estoppel against the 1st defendant. It was strenuously contended that, before the death of the last surviving female Visalakshi, the 1st defendant had no vested interest in the properties but merely a contingency expectant on the death of Visalakshi which is nothing more than a  spes successiois, and it is well-settled that a presumptive reversioner whose interest is nothing better than a  spes successiois cannot deal with such an interest so as to pass any title to transferee. The decisions in Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi (2), Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (3) and the judgments of this Court in Dhoorjeti Subbayya v. Dhoorjeti Venkayya (4), Jaganada Raju v. Sri Rajah Prasada Rao (5) establish this proposition. The ruling most relied on by the appellant is Bahadur Singh v. Mohar Singh (6). But there the plaintiffs were not parties to the arrangement made between the widow and the ancestors of the plaintiffs, the then presumptive reversioners. Their Lordships point out that there could be no estoppel against the plaintiffs who claimed in their own right as heirs of the last male owner when the succession opened simply because some of the persons through whom they traced their descent had been parties to the arrangement relied upon by the alienee. The ruling in Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi (2) is also distinguishable. It was held there that the father of the person against whom the principle of estoppel was sought to be applied did not assent to the conveyance of more than a widow's life-interest, and therefore, no question of estoppel could arise. It is further pointed out by the Judicial Committee that the provision in the document for devolution of the property after the death of the widow contrary to the rules of succession and inheritance was illegal and would not be binding. The doctrine of estoppel as laid down in the Evidence Act is a rule of pleading based upon a man's conduct who by his representation, made to a third party, has induced the latter to alter his position; such a person cannot turn round and plead that he is not bound by his own representation. The mere fact that the presumptive reversioner has no vested interest in the estate which he can effectively deal with does not prevent the application of the rule of estoppel, if he has by his conduct induced another person to alter his position, and the 1st defendant, having had the full benefit of the transaction under which the 3rd defendant derived his title, cannot now claim the same property saying that at the time of those transactions he could not pass any title in the property. The 1st defendant purported to deal with 3rd of Item No. 1, and it is with respect to that that he would be estopped from denying the title of the 3rd defendant.

It was also argued by Mr. Venkatarama Sastri that, under the Hindu Law, of Inheritance as understood at the time of the transactions in question, the three sisters and their nephews were justified in thinking that the nephews had also a share in the inheritance and that all of them were entitled to the property in absolute right. It was undoubtedly upon that basis that they proceeded to partition the property and deal with it. But it is difficult to understand how that can make any difference as to the real title to the property. We have not been referred to any authority to support his contention that if a Hindu female deals with the estate of her husband as if it was her Stridhanam that would give a good title to her alienees.

Another question was argued that the purchase of the plaintiff was champertous and, therefore, the suit ought to be dismissed. All that need be said with regard to this argument is, that there is no authority to support the proposition. The case referred to in Chedambaram Chetti v. Ranga Kristna

SHUNMUGHA VELAYUDHAM CHETTY V. KOYAPPA CHETTIAR.

Muttuvira Puchaya Nair (7) has no bearing on the facts of this case. There a stranger to a family tried to intervene in a certain litigation among the members of that family and to prevent a compromise being arrived at on the ground that he had advanced money to one of the litigants and was, therefore, interested in preventing the compromise. Their Lordships of the Privy Council point out that the transaction on which the plaintiff relied was an extortionate and unconscionable one and they considered that it was against public policy for such a person to intervene in a family dispute, the interest alleged by him being that he had advanced money to one of the litigants and wanted, on that ground, to carry on the litigation.

The only other question to be considered with reference to this item is, whether the 3rd defendant is entitled to the value of the improvements alleged to have been effected by him on this property. There can be no doubt, upon the evidence, that he has actually improved the property. He has built two shops which now fetch a rental of Rs. 61 while previous rent of the house was Rs. 19. As regards the value of the improvements the evidence undoubtedly is not as satisfactory and definite as one might desire. But no sufficient grounds have been made out for questioning the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this point which is based on the valuation made by the Commissioner appointed for the purpose. The finding is that Rs. 3,000 is the value of the improvements. It was argued by Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar that before these improvements were made by the 3rd defendant, his client gave notice of the purchase to the 3rd defendant and warned him not to make any construction or alteration in the premises. He has produced, in support of this allegation, a postal receipt for a letter purporting to have been sent to 3rd defendant. We do not know what the contents of the letter itself are, and we are unable to say that the Subordinate Judge was not right, under the circumstances, in not admitting in evidence a private copy of the alleged notice which the plaintiff wanted to produce at a late stage of the case.

As regards the oral evidence, it has been read to us and commented upon by the Pleaders on both sides; but we see no reason to differ from the Subordinate Judge who finds that he was unable to act upon this evidence.

As regards the 2nd item, the 1st defendant had nothing to do with the sale by Neelambal who got this property under Exhibit III series to the husband of the 6th defendant. But it is contended that the 1st defendant was a party to the partition under which Neelambal got this house and the 1st defendant and other persons got Item No. 1 and, therefore, it must be taken that he enabled Neelambal to make the disposition under which the 6th defendant claimed. But Neelambal got the house in her own right and we think that it would be going too far to hold that, under the circumstances of the case, estoppel operates against the 1st defendant so far as this item is concerned. As regards the 2nd defendant, as already mentioned, he was not born at the time of this transaction and there can be no question of any estoppel against him.

As regards both Items Nos. 1 and 2, an alternative argument was put forward that the alienation was made for necessity. In so far as Item No. 1 is concerned, there is really no evidence worth the name on which the case of necessity could be said to be made out. As regards Item No. 2 there is evidence of a general character that Neelambal was a poor woman earning a precarious livelihood by trading in oil. She borrowed Rs. 150 on a mortgage of this property for the purpose of this business and afterwards sold this and received the balance in cash, Rs. 200, or so, from the vendee, Muthuswamy Chettiar, for the purpose, it is alleged, of the same business. The evidence of the 1st defendant is not borne out by the recitals in the document; and 1st defendant, having regard to his conduct with reference to the properties in dispute, is not a man on whose testimony we should be justified in placing any reliance. Neelambal's husband was living at the time. There is really no definite evidence that he was unable to support her and that she was under the necessity to sell this property. It was sold for Rs. 562, a fairly substantial sum in those days. We are not satisfied that necessity has been proved. It is not necessary for us to consider whether a Hindu daughter is entitled to dispose of the inheritance derived from her father's estate of which she is in possession for the purpose of her own maintenance. That a married daughter is not entitled to maintenance from her father's estate has been laid down by Mr. Justice Ranade in Bai Mangal v. Bai Rukhmini (8). This decision is quoted with approval in the latest edition of Mayne's Hindu Law, at page 621, although in an earlier edition the learned author has stated the law in different terms, as pointed out in the judgment in Bai Mangal v. Bai Rukhmini (8). There is a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Lala Gunpat Lall v. Musammatt Toorun Koonwar (9) where it is laid down without discussion of any authority that the maintenance of grand-sons by daughters is a necessary purpose under the Hindu Law. Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar argued that even though a married daughter has no right to maintenance from her father's estate in the hands of his heir, it does not necessarily follow that when the estate has vested in her as an heir she cannot deal with it for the purposes of her own maintenance. The exact point is bare of authority though it would seem to follow from the fact that she is not entitled to maintenance from her father's estate, that she would have no right to deal with it for any such purpose when the estate has vested in her as an heir. We do not wish to express a final opinion on the question as, upon the facts, it does not arise for decision.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge will be modified. The plaintiff will have a decree for two-thirds of Item No. 1 and the whole of Item No. 2, subject to payment of two-thirds of Rs. 3,000, i.e., Rs. 2,000 as compensation to the 3rd defendant with respect to Item No. 1. Item No. 1 will have to be partitioned in the proportion mentioned above between the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant by the final decree. The final decree will also provide for mesne profits on the properties decreed to the plaintiff. Costs in proportion.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVII—Suit on promissory-note—Application for leave to defend—Court doubting sincerity of defence—Procedure.

Where in a suit on a promissory-note instituted under Order XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code, the defendant applies for leave to appear and defend, but the Court doubts the sincerity of the defence as disclosed in the affidavits filed with the application, the proper procedure is to grant leave to defend on condition of the defendant paying into Court the amount claimed. [p. 640, col 1]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 59 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, (Advocate-General), with him Mr. S. Aravamudu Aiyangar, for the Appellants.—The Court erred in refusing leave to defend altogether. Under rule 3 of Order XXXVII, Civil Procedure Code, leave may be granted on the defendant disclosing sufficient grounds by an affidavit. The suit is on a pro-note executed by the defendant to his wife in settlement of her maintenance-decree. It cannot be said that the defendants' affidavits disclosed no pretence for a defence. The summary procedure under Order XXXVII is taken from Order XIV, rule 1 of the Supreme Court Rules in England. Rule 3 is similar to the corresponding rule in the Bills of Exchange Act. The object of the rule is that the defendant cannot claim the right as a matter of course. In Agra and Masterman's Bank v. Leighton (1), the object of the rule is laid down. Where there is no pretence for a defence leave should not be granted. Where there is a real, though not a good defence and if the Court doubts it, leave should be ordered on terms of the defendant's paying the money into Court.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar, S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and V. Ramaswamy Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—The granting of leave is in the discretion of Court on sufficient reasons being shown that the defendant should be permitted to defend the suit. The Court was not satisfied, on the affidavits, that there was any true defence and it was entitled to reject the defendant's application.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree in a suit on a promissory note instituted under Order XLXVII of the Code of the Civil Procedure, in which leave to defend has been refused. Rule 3 of that Order requires the Court to give the defendant leave to appear and defend the suit upon affidavits which disclose such facts as would make it incumbent on the holder to prove consideration or such other facts as the Court may deem sufficient to support the application. This is paraphrased in the summons to be served on the defendant under rule 2 (1), Form No. 4 of Appendix B as follows:

"Leave to appear may be obtained on an application to the Court supported by affidavit...showing that there is a defence to the suit on the merits, or that it is reasonable that you should be allowed to appear in the suit," which would make the scope of the suit like that of the well-known Order XIV, rule 1 of the Supreme Court Rules. The language of rule 3 is taken from the Bills of Exchange Act, V of 1866, which was interpreted by Phear, J., in Vonlintzgy v. Narayan Singh (2), where he applied the rule laid down by Bramwell, Baron, in Agra and Masterman's bank v. Leighton (1), with reference to the corresponding section in England. The intention was, the learned Baron observed, "that, where there was no pretence for a defence, the parties sued should not be allowed to defend, and the holder should have judgment as of course; but that if the defendant had a real, I do not say good, defence, he should have leave to appear and set it up. As cases, however, sometimes occur where an apparently real defence is shown, but its sincerity is doubtful, there the defendant is let in to defend only on the terms of bringing the money into Court." The present suit was brought on a promissory-note for Rs. 17,000 given by the defendant to his wife in settlement of a suit brought by her for separate maintenance. We cannot say that the affidavits show that there is no pretence for a defence, and we think, that, instead of refusing leave to defend, the Subordinate Judge should have given leave to defend on condition of payment of the amount claimed into Court.

We accordingly direct that, on the payment of the amount claimed into Subordinate Judge's Court being certified to this Court within 6 weeks, the decree be set aside and the suit remanded for disposal according to law. Costs to abide, and in default of payment, this appeal do stand dismissed with costs.

ADAMI, J.—The defendants in the suit out of which the second appeal arises had mortgaged a part of their mal-raiyati interest of Mouza Roudih to one Golab Marwari. Golab Marwari obtained a mort.

gage decree and in execution of that decree, the plaintiff purchased the property at the auction sale and proceeded to take possession. The defendants, however, resisted the plaintiff's attempt to take possession of plots Nos. 2, 8 and 11, contending that they were the exclusive owners of the plots and were entered as such in the Record of Rights. The plaintiff then instituted a suit to recover possession of these plots.

With regard to plot No. 11, there is no contest, the plaintiff having given no claim to it. The mortgage of the properties was executed on 24th July 1903. The Settlement Record was finally published on the 14th June 1904 and the suit was instituted on the 6th January 1909. The Subordinate Judge found that the allegation made in the plaint that the entries in the Record of Rights were obtained by fraud of the defendants mortgagors, was not proved; he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge found that the entries in the Record of Rights were, under section 25 of the Regulation I.I of 1872, conclusive and that no evidence could be given to controvert them. He also found that the plaintiff purchaser should have examined the Record of Rights before his purchase and if he had done so, would have found that the plots in question would not pass by the sale. With regard to the allegation of fraud, he has stated that it is very doubtful if, in view of the wording of section 25, Regulation III of 1872, a suit could be brought to set aside the entry on the ground of fraud. He has not considered any evidence there may be on the record with regard to the allegation of fraud.

It is contended that the lower Appellate Court should have considered and come to a finding on the question of the alleged fraud, while, on the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondents contends that under sections 25 and 11 of the Regulation no suit lies to set aside an entry in the Record of Rights framed under the Regulation and that such entries have the force of a Civil Court decree. It is argued that the general law as to the competency of a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud will not apply to an entry in the Record of Rights under the Regulation. In my opinion, this contention cannot be upheld. Proof of fraud is sufficient to nullify a decree or order whether under the Civil Procedure Code or otherwise, and if the plaintiff in the present suit succeeds in proving that the entry was obtained by fraud he will be entitled to have the decree declared null. The record should, I think, be remanded to the lower Appellate Court to consider the evidence on the record with regard to the allegation made in the plaint as to fraud, and if it is found that fraud in securing the entries in the Settlement Record is proved, the plaintiff's suit should be decreed.

The ground on which the learned District Judge mainly dismissed the plaintiff's suit, namely, that the principle of caveat emptor must be applied, cannot properly be raised in this case. The mortgage was executed, and these plots were included in it before the Settlement Record was published and what the plaintiff purchased was the property of the mortgagor as it stood at the time the mortgage-bond was executed.

I would set aside the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and direct that after considering the evidence on the record as mentioned above the District Judge should decide the suit according to law.

The appellant is entitled to costs in this Court.

The costs in the Court below will abide the result.

DAB, J.—I agree.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1896), s. 30-II—Section, of—“Successors”, meaning of,

DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, HARDOI v. PURAI.

The wording of section 107-H of the Oudh Rent Act should be interpreted as it stands. The word "successors" in the section includes not only an heir, but a transferee also, and a Court is not competent to limit the meaning of the word to successors by right of inheritance only. [p. 643, col. 1.]

Third appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Lucknow Division, dated the 21st February 1918.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, J. M.—(October 25, 1918.)—This is a third appeal in a case under section 108 (5-A), Oudh Rent Act. The Court of Wards, Khajurabra Estate, is plaintiff-appellant. Purai, son of Mangli, rent free grantee, is defendant respondent. The original grantee was Durga Shukul who admittedly dates back to 1864, more than 50 years before the present suit, and the only point for determination in this appeal is, whether the Commissioner has decided in accordance with law that there have been two successors to the original grantee within the meaning of section 107-H, Oudh Rent Act. A third appeal is allowed on a point of law only under section 107-K, Oudh Rent Act, read with section 213, Land Revenue Act. The facts as found are that Durga Shukul, original grantee, transferred this plot of rent-free land to Mangli Dube, his sister's son. His sister had married Ambar Dube. There was no question of succession by inheritance here.—Durga had a son, his sister's son had no right of inheritance under Hindu Law; it was just a transfer by the original grantee to an outside member of the family with no pretence to any reversionary right in the future. The latter, Mangli, by private arrangement, transferred it to his brother, Atta, who was succeeded by his widow. Her name was on the record from 1301 to 1307 when the present defendant-respondent, Purai, son of Mangli and nephew of Atta, came in. His name was maintained in the papers after some litigation, under the Land Revenue Act, ending with Commissioner's second appellate order of the 2nd August 1915. There seems practical consonance of opinion between Counsel that the holding by Atta's widow should be regarded as a continuation of Atta's holding and not a separate succession within the meaning of section 107-H, owing to the limitation inherent in the right of a Hindu widow and I, therefore, accept this for the purposes of this case. So the position is that, between Durga Shukul, original grantee, and Purai Dube, present rent free holder, there have been two holders of the grant, first Mangli and then Mangli's brother, Atta, who both held by transfer and not by inheritance. It has come to Purai, respondent, by inheritance from his uncle Atta.

The two first Courts held that the word "successor," as used in section 107 H, means a successor by inheritance and does not cover a transferee. The Commissioner in second appeal has held, as I understand his judgment, that it does cover it in cases where the land-holder sees a transferee entered in the papers and in occupation of the holding and leaves him there over a long time of years. He implicitly accepts the transferee as rent-free grantee in succession to his predecessor. Proof of specific grant in their case, it may be argued, is not necessary any more than in the case of the original grantee, as held in Revenue Law Journal (Jacob's), Volume III, page 100.

I think the Commissioner's view is correct. Appellant's Counsel quotes two decisions of the Board of Revenue which, he thinks, point to the contrary, viz., (1) Petition No. 32 of 1913-14, Bara Banki District, Ram Singh v. Bisheshar Dayal (1), this is, however, not to the point, as it merely held that, when two brothers had equal right to inherit their father's rent-free holding, both were the first successors to their father though one brother alone occupied it till he died when the other brother took it on;—and (2) Petition No. 73 of 1913-14, Fyzabad District, Shah Hayat Ahmad v. Badri Pande (2). This is more to the point but does not quite cover the facts of the present case, and I do not gather that the meaning of the term "successors" in section-107-H was argued at any great length. The decision is an unselected one, of a single member of the Board.

The point has been dealt with at some length by the Hon'ble High Court in a case which is alluded to in the Deputy Commissioner's judgment in the present case, viz., in Sunder Singh v. Collector of Shahjahanpur (3). The learned Judges had before them section 158 of the Agra Tenancy Act, but the condition of 50 years and two successors to the original grantee is the same in that section as in section 107.H of the Oudh Rent Act. The learned Judges pronounced very strongly that the wording of the section is to be interpreted as it stands, and the word 'successors' is wide enough to include not only an heir but a transferee also. They were not competent, it was held, to limit the meaning to successors by right of inheritance only.

(1) 33 Ind. Cas. 163; 2 O. L. J. 711.

(2) 33 Ind. Cas. 286; 2 O. L. J. 718.

CHHABRAJI KUAR V. GANGA SINGH.

I would follow this ruling of the Hon'ble Allahabad High Court as sound. It closes the door to any attempt on the part of land-holders wishing to get rid of a rent-free grantee to travel back into the past and take up some technical flaw of title in one or other of the intermediate holders. The Deputy Commissioner has suggested that a practical objection to the finding of the Hon'ble High Court is, that the holder of the grant for the time being could defeat a contemplated resumption by making a sudden transfer, but surely the land-holder should counter this by immediate action to have the transfer declared invalid. If he does not do so, by contesting mutation or otherwise, and leaves the transferee in peaceful enjoyment of the rent-free grant, he should not be allowed afterwards to hark back and urge that the transferee was not a successor within the meaning of section 107.H. On the above view, I would, in the present case, hold that there have been two successors to the grant, viz., Mangli and Atta, between the original holder, Durga, and the present holder, the respondent Purai. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs to respondent.

LOVET, S. M.—(October 26, 1918).—I agree. Incidentally, I may note that a third appeal is not allowable merely on a point of law. Under section 107.K, Oudh Rent Act, read with section 213, Land Revenue Act, but only if the decision of the Court below is "opposed to some specified law or usage having the force of law." I note this, as I have pointed out the distinction in various cases which have come before me on third appeal.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 164 (2)—Profits, suit for—Decree, form of—Appeal, second—Negligence or misconduct of Lambardar—Question of law.

Where a plaintiff claims, under section 164 (2) of the Agra Tenancy Act, on the basis of gross rental for his share of the profits for any given year, he cannot also be given a decree for arrears of past years, collected in the year in question. If clause (2) of section 164 is not applicable, he is entitled to a decree on the basis of actual collections made in that year, whether in payment of the demand for that year, or as arrears from former years but collected in that year. But he cannot be given a decree both on the basis of the gross rental and the actual collections. [p. 644, col. 2.]

The question whether the acts or omissions of a Lambardar amount to negligence or misconduct under section 164 of the Agra Tenancy Act, is one of law and the High Court is not bound by a finding on that question, in second appeal. [p. 646, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant
Messrs. Satya Chandra Mukerji and Pearl Lal Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 164 of the N.W. P. Tenancy Act of 1901.

Thakur Ganga Singh (plaintiff-respondent) sued Musammam Chhabraji Kunwar, Lambardar, (defendant-appellant), for his share of the profits of the village for the years 1321 and 1322 Fasli. In his plaint he stated that the village was well irrigated and that the tenants were well-to-do; and, without alleging any specific misconduct or negligence on the part of the Lambardar, (except in one particular which has been abandoned), claimed to be paid a sum of Rs. 2,200, which included interest, on the basis of the gross rental. He went on, however, to state in paragraph 4 of his plaint that, "in the years in question the defendant Lambardar realised a considerable amount on account of arrears for the past years and the plaintiff is entitled to get the profits on the said amount, according to his own share."

GYHABRAJI KUAR v. GANGA SINGH.

The relief sought was (a) a decree for Rs. 2,400, principal and interest, and (b) "a decree for the amount which is found due in addition to the amount claimed may also be passed in his favour and an additional Court-fee charged."

To the plaint was annexed an account showing what was due for the two years in suit, 1321 and 1322 Fasli. It is, therefore, clear that the suit was mainly concerned with the profits of these two years. Court fees were paid only for the profits of these two years, and the accounts filed with the plaint referred exclusively to them. No details were furnished as to collections made for years before 1321 Fasli. The main defence was that there was no negligence or misconduct and that plaintiff was only entitled to a decree on the basis of actual collections.

The Trial Court held that the Lambardar defendant had been guilty of misconduct, and gave a decree for the two years in suit on the gross rental, and also a further sum for the years 1318, 1319 and 1320 for arrears which he found had been recovered by the defendant in the years in suit. In all, he passed a decree for Rs. 3,190 30 with costs and interest in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal the District Judge upheld this decree. Hence this second appeal.

Two main grounds have been argued:—

(1) That the decree should have been passed either on the basis of the gross rental for the two years in suit, or on the basis of actual collections during those two years, which would, of course, include collections of arrears of rent due in previous years, but that it was wrong to give a decree for the gross rental plus such arrears.

(2) That misconduct or negligence had not been established and that, therefore, the decree should be passed according to the actual collections.

It has been held, certainly since the decision in Naut Kishore v. Ram Ratan (1), that the divisible profits for any agricultural year mean, ordinarily, the net balance remaining in the hands of the Lambardar after deducting the land revenue, cesses, village expenses and Lambardari dues from his total realisations made during the year in question, whether on account of the demand of the year itself or on account of the demand of previous years. If a plaintiff claims under section 164, clause (2), on the basis of gross rental for his share of the profits of any given year, he cannot also get a decree for arrears of past years, collected in the year in question; because, to hold otherwise, might be to evade the law of limitation. Indeed, it was admitted by the learned Vakil for the respondents at a late stage of the argument, that as the suit was filed on the 20th November 1915, the arrears for 1318 and 1319 as such were certainly time-barred and probably most of the arrears of 1320.

This is evident from the limitation for suits under section 164 set out in the 4th Schedule, No. 16, appended to the Act. The limitation is three years, and the time from which limitation begins to run, is when the share of the profits becomes due.

We think, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree either on the gross rental of the two years in suit only, if clause (2) of section 164 is applicable, or on the basis of actual collections made in those two years, whether in payment of the demand of those years, or as arrears due from former years but collected in those two years.

This was the view adopted in Sham Lal v. Raj Bahadur*, by a Divisional Bench

*The judgment in Sham Lal v. Raj Bahadur, S. A. No. 162 of 1915, decided on the 27th June 1917 by Piggott and Ryves, JJ., is as follows:—

This was a suit by two plaintiffs against a Lambardar for profits. The claim was decreed in part by the Court of first instance. There was an appeal and a cross appeal to the Court of the District Judge, with the result that the sum decreed in favour of the plaintiffs was slightly increased. We have now before us an appeal by the defendant Lambardar and cross-objections filed by the plaintiffs. We dispose of the defendant's appeal first. The plaintiffs are brothers; but it is found that they are not living jointly. They are, therefore, presumably owners in severalty of their recorded shares. On this state of facts the contention has been based that a single suit by the two plaintiffs would not lie. There is no real force in this contention under the provisions of the Tenancy Act itself, and in any case the contention is sufficiently met by Order I, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiffs were entitled to join in bringing a single suit.

The second point argued before us is that there has been some error or miscalculation in the decree of the Court of first instance in the matter of costs. The point was not taken before the lower Appellate Court, and we are not satisfied that it is any business of ours to go into the question whether the decree of the first Court in the matter of cost is or of this Court of which one of us was a member. We see no reason to doubt that decision. We have, however, been pressed with the decision in Ram Dayal v. Seth Janki Prasad, S. A. No. 943 of 1906 decided on the 3rd January 1907, by Sanley, O. J., and Barkitt, J. which, it is argued, lays down the contrary. That decision, however, it seems to me, is based on the particular facts of that case, and has no general application. There a co-sharer assigned her share of the profits for two years only, i. e., 1307 and 1308, to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued the Lambardar for the profits of those two years, on the basis of gross rental under section 164 (2). The matter was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator awarded profits for the two years on the basis of actual collec-is not strictly in accordance with the judgment. At any rate, we are not satisfied that any mistake to the detriment of the defendant-appellant was made in that Court.

The third point argued was one of some little difficulty. It appears that there were two tenant holdings in the Mahal in suit the rent of which was not collected during the years in suit, and as a matter of fact the land lay fallow. The lower Appellate Court has, nevertheless, come to the conclusion that there is a fair inference that the Lambardar was guilty of negligence in not realising this rent during the years in suit. We shall have to point out presently, in connection with the cross-objections of the plaintiffs, the consequences which, in our opinion follow from the fact that the decree of the Court below in favour of the plaintiffs has been based upon the gross recorded rental demand on account of each of the years in suit. On the whole, we are of opinion that, though this question of the two uncultivated holdings is a very arguable one, sufficient cause has not been made out for interference on our part in second appeal with the findings of the District Judge.

The only other point to be considered in connection with the defendants' appeal is that the Courts below have estimated the rent of the sir land at Rs. 25 per annum. It is contended that, as a matter of fact, the land in question was let out on lease during the years in suit at an annual rental of Rs. 50 only. This question has been considered in both the Courts below, and there is a finding that the rent of the sir land during the years in suit was Rs. 12½ per annum. We are not prepared to say that this finding rests upon no evidence; so far, therefore, as the defendant's appeal is concerned, it fails and we dismiss it accordingly with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

In the cross objections by the plaintiffs a point is taken at the outset which has some general importance. The suit as brought is on account of the plaintiffs' share of the divisible profits for the years 1307 and 1308. At the commencement of this period there were arrears of rent amounting to Rs. 57.12.3 due from tenants on account of the years 1305, 1306 and 1307. During the year in suit a portion of those arrears was realised, amounting in all to Rs. 20.12.2. In the Court of the Assistant Collector the argument was apparently limited to the question whether the plaintiffs could claim in this suit their share of those realisations on account of the rental demand for years anterior to those in suit. Dealing with this question as a pure question of law, the Assistant Collector held that the collections on account of rental demand of previous years, if made within the years in suit, were liable to be taken into account in the total of collections made during those years for the purpose of ascertaining the divisible profits. For this finding the Assistant Collector referred to the authority of the case of Nand Kishore v. Ram Ratan (1) and there can be no question as to the correctness of this principle, in the case of a decree for profits passed on the basis of actual collections. However, the Assistant Collector went on to consider further whether the defendant Lambardar was not liable under the provisions of section 164, clause (1) of the Tenancy Act, No. 11 of 1901, to give an account of profits due on account of sums which had remained uncollected owing to negligence or misconduct on his part, and came to the conclusion that, upon the evidence before him, the only satisfactory method of adjusting the account for profits between the parties was to hold the defendant Lambardar liable to account for profits on the basis of gross annual rental. It is evident that, having come to that conclusion, the Assistant Collector no longer regarded the question of the realisations made during the years in suit on account of the arrears of 1305-1306 F. as of any consequence. He worked out his decree on the basis of the gross rental demand for each of the years in suit on account of the said years. When the plaintiffs presented their appeal to the Court of the District Judge, it would almost seem as if they had not considered the decree of the Court below, or appreciated the basis on which it proceeded. Their argument to the District Judge seems to have been based upon the assumption that they had been allowed their proportionate share out of the realisations of Rs. 240.12.2 already referred to. What they claimed was that they should have been allowed their share out of the gross outstanding demand on account of the arrears due at the beginning of the period for which the suit was brought. This contention the learned District Judge has dealt with in a carefully reasoned portion of his judgment and has repelled it. It is now contended before us that the plaintiffs should have been allowed one of the two things, either their share of the sum of Rs. 240.12.2 actually realised during the years in suit, or their share of the outstanding demand of Rs. 57.12.3. We are not prepared to accede to either of these contentions. Divisible profits of the agricultural year 1306 F. mean ordinarily the net balance remaining in the hands of the Lambardar after deducting the land revenue, cesses, village expenses, and Lambardar's dues from his total realisations made during the year, whatever be the amount of the demand of the year if set off on tions, and gave an award for such amount as had been collected; and declared that the plaintiff should recover in the future any arrears for those two years from the Lambardar if he realised them. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the balance of the arrears for 1307 and 1308 subsequently collected by the Lambardar. The suit was brought within three years of the date when the Lambardar realised them, and this Court held that he was entitled to a decree under the award, although the co-sharer herself could not have recovered them in an ordinary suit for profits for the year when the transferee brought the suit. That was altogether a special case. The arrears for 1307 and 1308 were, as it were, ear-marked as payable to the transferee and could be recovered by suit within three years of their realisation. It now remains to see whether the Courts below were right in applying clause (2) of section 164.

It is argued that in second appeal we cannot go behind the finding that there was misconduct or negligence on the Lambardar's part within the meaning of section 164, because it is a finding of fact. We do not think it is purely a finding of fact. What the Trial Court finds is that the Lambardar did or omitted to do certain things, and if the lower Appellate Court has come to the same conclusion, we are bound to hold that those things were done or that those omissions were made, but whether they amounted to negligence or misconduct within the meaning of the section is an inference of law. Now here the Trial account of the demand of previous years. If, however, the plaintiffs desire to invoke the provisions of section 164, clause (2), of the Tenancy Act, they cannot do more than claim an account on the gross rental demand for the year 1315 F., itself. To hold otherwise would be, as the learned District Judge has pointed out, to evade the law of limitation and go beyond the intention of section 164 of the Tenancy Act. The very utmost which a Lambardar can be required to do is to account to his co-sharers for profits on the basis of the total recorded rental demand of a given year. This contention on behalf of the plaintiffs, therefore, fails.

In one or two minor points, however, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs have reasons on their side. The first Court allowed the defendant to deduct, on account of his expenses of management during the year in suit, a total sum of Rs. 228 plus Rs. 45 or Rs. 273 in all on account of the expenses of certain litigation in which one Abdul Qayum was plaintiff and the parties to the present suit were jointly impleaded as defendants. The documentary evidence on this record as to the circumstances and result of this litigation is scanty; but so far as it goes it affords no basis for the contention that the expenses incurred by the defendant in this litigation were incurred by him in his representative capacity as Lambardar. In fact we would go so far as to say that there is no evidence on this point and that the documentary evidence shows the precise contrary. The suit brought by Abdul Qayum was not against Sham Lal as Lambardar of a Mahal, but against Sham Lal and his two nephews, the present plaintiffs, as the owners of the land about which the suit was brought. An appeal to the Court of the District Judge was lodged by Sham Lal alone. It is quite possible that Sham Lal, having satisfied Abdul Qayum's decree for costs, has now a valid claim for contribution against the present plaintiffs in respect of some portion of the costs paid by him; but it seems to us quite impossible, upon the evidence on the record, to treat those costs as forming any part of the Lambardar's expenses of management; still less so as expenses of management on account of the years now in suit, seeing that the entire litigation with Abdul Qayum was completed in the month of February 1906—two years before the period now in suit. In two other matters of detail the decree of the lower Appellate Court is not quite just to the present plaintiffs. By an obvious oversight the learned Judge has allowed the plaintiffs 3rd only out of a certain item of Rs. 40 whereas their share was 2th and they should have been allowed Rs. 67-8-0. He has also omitted to notice that interest from the date of the Assistant Collector's decree ought to run upon the sum of Rs. 245-8-6 awarded as costs to the plaintiffs by the decree of that Court. The learned Judge probably intended that interest should run upon this amount; but he has not made it clear in his decree and we think we ought to supply the omission. The result is as follows:—There will be, first of all, an addition of Rs. 7-8-0 to the sum decreed in favour of the plaintiffs. Then there will be a further addition of 2th of Rs. 273 (or Rs. 204-12-0) due to our expunging from the account of expenses the sum allowed to the Lambardar in connection with Abdul Qayum's suit. These sums will be added to the amount decreed by the learned Judge and the interest account must be proportionately increased, both prior to the institution of the suit and pendente lite. We leave undisturbed the orders of the Court below as to costs. As regards the costs of this Court, we have already ordered that the defendant shall pay all costs of his appeal. With regard to the cross-objections taken by the plaintiffs, parties will pay and receive costs in proportion to their failure and success. The decree must be prepared accordingly. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Decree modified.

UMRAO SINGH v. GAYA PRASAD.

Court based its finding of misconduct and negligence on three main grounds; (1) the actual collection in 1321 was very small compared with the demand. The demand was Rs. 5,718-12-9 and the amount actually collected in that year was Rs. 2,091-4-6. If that stood alone the Trial Court might have drawn an adverse inference from it, but he has overlooked the fact, that the actual collection was more than the demand it was Rs. 6,014-13-2, that is to say, arrears for former years to a large amount had been recovered. It is quite probable that the comparatively small amount realised in 1321 was owing to the large realisations of past arrears, and would have been made good in the future.

Then the Court finds, (2) that the Lambardar makes collections all the year round and, (3) instituted more than seventy suits to recover arrears. From this the Court infers that he was negligent in his duties; we infer exactly the opposite.

However, we need not press the matter further, because the learned Vakil for the plaintiff has frankly admitted that the decree should be on actual collections, having regard to our decision on the first ground of appeal.

That being so, it is admitted that this appeal must succeed in part. We have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to Rs. 870 3-0 for 1321 Fasli together with interest at 12 per cent. from the 8th of June 1914, up to the date of suit and thereafter at 6 per cent. up to the date of realisation, and he is further entitled to Rs. 394-7-11 together with interest at 12 per cent. from the 27th of June, 1915, up to the date of suit and thereafter at 6 per cent. up to the date of realisation. The office will prepare an account on the basis of this order. The parties will receive and pay costs in proportion to failure and success in all Courts. The costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court will be calculated on the value of the appeals and the extent to which either party has succeeded or failed. The decrees of the two lower Courts are set aside and a decree as indicated above will be substituted for them.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 42 OF 1920.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Antecedent debt, nature of—Alienation—Transaction, when should be upheld.

In order to render a debt antecedent there must not only be priority in time but real dissociation in fact from the mortgage sought to be enforced. Where, therefore, a person borrows money on a mortgage a little more than a fortnight after a prior mortgage there is not that dissociation which would render the latter a debt which was properly antecedent. [p. 648, col. 2.]

In order to validate an alienation either by sale or mortgage, two elements are necessary, namely, first, that the purpose for which the money was obtained is a purpose necessary by the law, and, second, that there is a pressure on the estate, sufficient to render the alienation necessary. [p. 649, col. 2.]

Where, if only that amount had been borrowed which the Court finds for legal necessity or antecedent debt, it would still have been necessary to execute the mortgage in suit, the transaction should be upheld. If not, it should be set aside on condition of the creditor being re-paid with interest the amount which he has validly advanced. [p. 650, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 23rd December 1919, upholding the decree of the Munsif, Utraula, dated 10th September 1919.

Mr. Basudeo Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Aditya Prasad, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for possession of 1-anna share in Patti Sheo Dat, Mausā Bambhni, by setting aside a usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 999 executed on 24th February 1903 by Mahabir Singh, respondent No. 4, who is the father of the plaintiffs, in favour of two persons who are now represented by the appellants for a term of thirty years. The property in suit was the joint family property, and the plaintiffs' case was based on the allegation that the mortgage was neither for legal necessity nor antecedent debt. The consideration was made up of three items:—

	Rs.
(1) Left with the mortgagees for payment to Beohu Singh in redemption of a prior mortgage, dated 14th May 1899 (The amount actually paid was Rs. 599)	600
(2) Left with the mortgagees for payment to Sanmukh Singh in redemption of a prior mortgage, dated 9th February 1903	300
(3) Received in cash before execution	99
Total	999

The first item is not in dispute. The Courts below have found that it was for redemption of a mortgage executed before the birth of the plaintiffs and that they were, therefore, not entitled to challenge it. The third item also is not seriously disputed. It was not antecedent debt and the appellants' Counsel was unable to contend that any legal necessity was shown for it. The two issues in second appeal are:—

(1) Whether the item of Rs. 300 was borrowed for payment of antecedent debt within the meaning of the Privy Council ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1)?

(2) What is the nature of the decree which should be passed when it is found that the consideration for the mortgage consisted partly of items binding on the sons and partly of items which are not so binding?

The decree actually given by the lower Court is one for possession of the share in dispute on payment of Rs. 599 by the plaintiffs to the defendants-appellants. The contention of the latter is, that they should have been allowed to retain possession for the full term of the mortgage in lieu of the amount which has been found to be binding on the property.

It was argued by the appellant that the finding on the first issue would depend on whether this Court held that antecedent debt within the meaning of the Privy Council ruling could include a debt secured by a mortgage. That point has just now been decided in Bharat Singh v. Narsuti Singh (2). We have held, affirming the ruling previously laid down in Rammun Lal v. Ram Gopal (3), that a mortgage-debt might be antecedent debt provided there was also a personal liability to repay. The respondent rightly contends that this decision does not affect the issue in this case. Whatever the view may be taken of the Privy Council judgment in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), it does lay down most emphatically that, in order to render a debt antecedent there must not only be priority in time but real dissociation in fact from the mortgage sought to be enforced. If a man borrows money on a mortgage on the 7th February and then on 2nd of the same month executes another mortgage in order to redeem the first the Court is justified in inferring that there was no real dissociation in fact, and that the debt was not properly antecedent. This is the finding at which both the lower Courts arrived in this case, and the only reason urged for my disregarding it is that the mortgage of 7th February was in favour of the different mortgagees. Where the second mortgage was executed a little more than a fortnight after the first I do not regard it as sufficient to establish real dissociation in fact to set aside the finding of the Courts below. I, therefore, uphold the lower Courts' finding in regard to this item.

On these findings of facts I am asked to dismiss the suit and relegate the plaintiffs to the right of redemption at the end of thirty years on payment of Rs. 599 found to be binding on the estate. The argument is that, if any part of the mortgage is found to be for legal necessity, the whole should be upheld. The ruling of the learned Judicial Commissioner in Gya Din v. Triloki Nath Singh (4) is cited in support of this contention. That was a case of a mortgage for fifty years by a Hindu widow for a sum of Rs. 500 of which Rs. 675 was for legal necessity. The learned Judicial Commissioner said:

"It has been suggested that it was not competent to the widow to make a mortgage for so long a period but if she might sell the property outright for legal necessity she could surely make a mortgage even for 50 years. As for the argument that a finding to the effect that only Rs. 675 were taken for legal necessity does not involve the conclusion that there was a necessity to borrow Rs. 500 on a fifty years' mortgage it is sufficient to say that the Courts uphold transactions of this nature to the extent to which necessity is proved and that the length of the period of the mortgage does not affect the question. As I have already said, if a sale of the estate can be justified then so can any other form of transfer which falls short of a sale."

There is another case of Bharath Singh v. Murnu Singh (5) not contained in the author's reports, but printed at page 151 of Volume V 1, of the Oudh Law Journal, in which a mortgage by a Hindu widow for Rs. 2,500 of which Rs. 2,154 were for legal necessity was upheld. The Court remarked at the conclusion of its judgment:—

"The propriety of the terms on which the loan was taken cannot be considered till a suit is filed by the plaintiffs for the redemption of that mortgage, which is binding on them to the extent of Rs. 2,154. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Girdhar Lal v. Kantoo Lal (6), where the entire consideration, with the exception of a small portion, is shown to have been taken for legal necessity, the vendee cannot be deprived of the benefit of his purchase. In Burayad Husain v. Mata Din Singh (7) and Gur Sahai v. Girahar Lal (8) a similar view was taken. The court below has directed the vendee or his legal representatives to pay to the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 218 1-1 with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem to recoup them for the portion of the consideration for which no legal necessity was found to have been proved. In the case of a mortgage no such question arises, because it is open to the plaintiffs to sue for redemption on payment of the amount for which they may be held liable. If the mortgage contains onerous terms the propriety of those terms can be challenged when the suit for redemption is brought."

This remark does seem to lend some colour to the argument put forward, but two things may be observed. First, in both the cases referred to above the transaction was one which the Court would have upheld had it been a sale. Secondly, in the latter of the two cases the mortgage was made in 1858 and the widow had died before the suit was brought, so it was open to the reversioners to bring a redemption suit at once. I lay no stress on the further distinction that in both these cases the mortgage was made by a Hindu widow because except that an alienation by her is valid for her lifetime the principles by which the Courts are guided in upholding or setting aside the transaction would appear to be the same.

It is not clear that in the case first cited Mr Lindsay intended to make a distinction between a mortgage and a sale. If it was intended to make any distinction in the second case the remark was obiter. I do not think that the learned Judges intended to lay down, or that any Court would lay down, that if the father of a joint family executed a mortgage for 30 years for Rs. 1,000 of which only Rs. 50 were for legal necessity it would be bound to uphold the transaction and relegate the sons to a suit for redemption at the end of this period. On the other hand, if Rs. 950 out of the Rs. 1,000 were for legal necessity it is equally certain that the transaction would be upheld. Two elements are necessary to validate an alienation either by sale or mortgage. The first element is that the purpose for which money was obtained must be a purpose recognised by the law. The second element is that there must be a pressure on the estate sufficient to render the alienation necessary. I need only refer to the well-known passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in Hunoomanpersaud Pandey v. Musumet Babooee Munraj Aonweres (9), which runs:—

"(1) M. I. A. 393 at p. 423; 18 W. R. 81n; Sevestre 15 n; 2 Suth P. C. J. 29; 1 Sar. P. O. J. 552; 19 E. R. 147.

TANGUTOORI KODANDARAMAYYA v. TANGUTOORI RAMALINGAYYA.

"Where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded."

To take a simple example, the payment of land revenue is sufficient to constitute legal necessity but it cannot be contended that a Hindu father would be entitled to mortgage his estate every time that land revenue fell due for payment. The test in each case would be this. If only that amount had been borrowed which the Court finds to be for legal necessity or antecedent debt would it have been necessary to execute the mortgage in dispute? If so, the transaction should be upheld. If not, it should be set aside on condition of the creditor being re-paid with interest the amount which he has validly advanced. It has been held in many cases that a high rate of interest on the loan must be justified by legal necessity. It appears to me that similar justification is required to validate a very long term or any other conditions in a mortgage, which, having regard to the nature of the security, are exceptionally onerous.

In this case only Rs. 599 out of Rs. 999, i.e., 3/5ths of the entire sum borrowed has been found to be binding on the estate. Under these circumstances, the lower Court was justified in setting aside the transaction.

I vary the lower Court's decree by allowing the appellants simple interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the mortgage in suit till payment, in addition to the Rs. 599 allowed by the Courts below. In other respects, the appeal is dismissed. As the respondents have been substantially successful they will be allowed their costs of the appeal.

Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895), ss. 13, 21—Newly created village office, appointment to, suit respecting—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Limitation for suit—Terminus a quo.

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit respecting an appointment to a newly created village office. It is only where jurisdiction is conferred on a Revenue Court by section 13 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, that section 21 bars the jurisdiction of a Civil Court. [p. 652, col. 1.]

The starting point of limitation for such a suit is the date of the publication of the Collector's notice. [p. 652, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 127 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ongole, in Original Suit No. 137 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar (with him Mr. B. Somiah), for the Appellant.—The suit is not cognizable by the Civil Court. Its jurisdiction is barred by section 21 of Madras Act III of 1895. The claim or right in respect of a Karnam's office is covered by the opening words of the section. It would be meaningless to confer jurisdiction on Civil Courts in respect of newly created offices while older offices are exempted from such jurisdiction.

Messrs. T. Prakasam and O. Sambasiva Row, for the Respondents.—It is only where jurisdiction is conferred on Revenue Courts under section 13 that Civil Courts' jurisdiction is taken away under section 21. not a case in which the plaintiff has a right of suit under section 13. That section specifies claims under section 10, clauses (2) and (3) or section 11 (2) and (3) or section 12. An office newly created in consequence of the grouping of villages is not within the section. Those sections lay the principles to be followed in filling a vacancy to an existing hereditary office.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—First respondent in this case was appointed Karnam of the grouped village of Vallur in the Venkatagiri Zemin-dari by the Sub-Divisional Officer under section 15 (3) of Act II of 1894. He sued for a declaration that he was the legally appointed Karnam and for an injunction restraining first defendant (the proprietor of the estate) and second defendant (the person appointed as Karnam by the first defendant) from interfering with his tenure of office. The District Munsif decreed the suit as prayed for. The Subordinate Judge set aside the injunction but confirmed the declaration.

In second appeal Mr. Krishnasawmy Aiyar has argued, (1) that plaintiff not being in possession of the office his suit is not maintainable under section 42, Specific Relief Act; (2) that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is barred by section 21 of Madras Act III of 1895.

The first objection may be summarily disposed of. The Subordinate Judge finds that at the date of suit plaintiff was in possession of the office; and his finding must be accepted. We may remark that most of the evidence to which Mr. Krishnasawmy Aiyar wished to refer us relates to proceedings after its institution.

The objection to the jurisdiction calls for more serious consideration. Section 21 of Madras Act III of 1895 runs thus:—"No Civil Court shall have authority to take into consideration or decide any claim to succeed to any of the offices specified in section 3 or any question as to the rate or amount of the emoluments of any such office or, except as provided in proviso (ii) to sub section (1) of section 13, any claim to recover the emoluments of any such office: Provided that if, in any suit instituted under this Act the defendant has pleaded before the Collector that a Revenue Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, on the ground that no emoluments, as defined in this Act, appertain to the office in respect of which the suit is brought and if on appeal preferred from the decree in such suit, the appellate authority has decided adversely to such plea, the defendant may, within six months from the date of the appellate decree, institute a suit in a Civil Court to set aside such appellate decree on the said ground and on that ground only."

The opening words with which we are concerned are no doubt of a very general character, and it is quite possible to interpret them as barring the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to try any suit brought to establish a claim to any of the offices specified in section 3, which would include the Karnam's office with which we are concerned. A much narrower interpretation has, however, been adopted in two reported cases of this Court, that of a Full Bench in Kesiram Narasimhulu v. Narasimhulu Patnaidu (1) and of a Division Bench in Manoulu Seetharam Naidu v. Doddi Rami Naidu (2). The Court in each case held that section 21 only took away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in cases in which jurisdiction was conferred on Revenue Courts by section 13 of the same Act. The dictum in the Full Bench case may be impugned as obiter, but this cannot be said of the decision in Manoulu Seetharam Naidu v. Doddi Rami Naidu (2), all that can be urged against the latter is that another line of reasoning might be suggested to support the decision, which, however, was not what the learned Judges relied on.

I do not feel at liberty to refuse to follow these decisions which have, moreover, been followed by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in a recent case Krishnaswami Naidu v. Akkulammal Avergal (3).

We have, therefore, to see whether plaintiff had a right of suit in a Revenue Court under section 13. I think it is clear that he had not. Section 13 only gives jurisdiction to the Revenue Courts to decide suits brought on the ground that the person suing "is entitled under sub-section (2) or (3) of section 10 of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Services Act, 1894, or under sub section (2) or (3) of section 10 or sub-section (2) or (3) of section 11 or section 12 of this Act, as the case may be, to hold such office and to enjoy such emoluments."

BARHAM DEO RAI v. RAM KISHUN MAHTON.

Now, the present suit cannot be brought under one of the sections or sub-sections specified. Section 10 of Act II of 184 is the only one which could be relied on, but sub-sections (2) and (3) thereof have no application to the present plaintiffs' claim to the office. They lay down the principles to be observed in filling a vacancy to an existing hereditary office. Where, as in the present case, a new office has been created in consequence of the grouping of two or more villages, that office has to be filled on different principles as laid down in the last sentence of section 15 (1). "Where the claims of more than one family have to be considered the determination of the next heir according to the general custom and rule of primogeniture is obviously impracticable and the proprietor (or Revenue Officer, as the case may be) is simply enjoined to select the best qualified persons from among the families of the last holders of the abolished offices."

It is quite true that the opening words of section 10 refer to section 9 which deals with appointments to newly created village offices such as the one in question but this makes no difference. The three sections (sections 9, 10 and 15) must in fact all be read together; and the general qualifications laid down in sub-section (1) of section 10 no doubt apply to appointments under section 15. But the principles to be observed in making selection between two or more qualified applicants are different, and the claim of the present plaintiff is not based on sub-sections (2) and (3).

That a suit should lie in a Civil Court regarding a newly created village office and its emoluments, whereas it would not lie in the case of an older office, is anomalous and may be the result of oversight in drafting; but I cannot see that it involves any injustice or real inconvenience and, however it may be, it seems to be the only proper interpretation of the two Acts. I hold that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is not barred by section 21 of Madras Act III of 1895.

The only other point argued for appellant is that the six weeks time allowed by sub-section (3) of section 15 of Madras Act II of 1894 has been wrongly calculated. This contention must be disallowed. The time must be held to run from the date of publication of the Collector's notice (Exhibit XVII) which is 19th May 1913, and plaintiff's appointment by the Sub-Collector was only on 27th December 1913. I would dismiss the second appeal with costs and also the memorandum of objections, as I think the injunction sued for was rightly refused.

COURTS-TROTIER, J.—I agree.

Where a document which ought to be stamped, bears an adhesive stamp the cancellation of which has not been effected as prescribed by section 12 (1), (2) (a), (b) and (3) of the Stamp Act, it is inadmissible in evidence under section 25 of the Act [p 653, col 1.]

Appeal from a decision of Small Cause Court Judge, Chupra, dated the 16th April 1920.

Mr. Shi eswar Dayal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Hanuman Sahay, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act against the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge of Chupra, dated the 16th April 1920. By his decision the Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim for recovery of money said to have been lent by the plaintiff to the defendant. The loan was said to have been made on the 2nd Chait 1325 and a hand note was said to have been executed by the defendant bearing his thumb impression. The hand note was produced in Court.

The defendant denied the loan, disputed the genuineness of the hand note and also denied his thumb impression upon it. The thumb impression expert examined in this case proved that the impression was that of the defendant. The Court accepted that evidence and held that the hand note in question was genuine and was executed by the defendant.

As regards the actual loan having been given, the plaintiff examined three witnesses. The Court came to the following finding: "The fact that the defendant has borrowed has sufficiently been proved." Accordingly, the plaintiff's suit was decreed.

The principal point taken in revision on the basis of which the rule was issued was that the hand-note upon which the plaintiff's suit was brought, was not duly executed and was, therefore, inadmissible in evidence. The hand-note bears an adhesive stamp of one-anna but it was not cancelled by writing on or across it the name or initial of the executant of the bond in the manner prescribed by section 12 (1) (a) and (b) and (3). Clause (2) of section 12 enacts that, "any instrument bearing an adhesive stamp which has not been cancelled so that it cannot be used again, shall, so far as such stamp is concerned be deemed to be unstamped." The document in question will, therefore, be deemed to be unstamped. This is concluded by the authorities Banarsi Prasad v. Fazal Ahmad (1), Chenbasapa v. L. Kishnan Ram (2) and Vernon Allen v. Meera Pulay (3). The law is clear upon the point. The document in question was, therefore, inadmissible in evidence under section 35 of the Act which says that: "No instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence or shall be acted upon, registered or authenticated by any such person or by any public officer, unless such instrument is duly stamped." The document in question required one anna stamp and, therefore, no payment of penalty would make it admissible under the proviso to section 35. The learned Small Cause Court Judge was, therefore, wrong in admitting this document in evidence. The admission of an inadmissible evidence might be overruled by an Appellate or Revisional Court, but the statutory provision in the Stamp Law fetters the right of the higher Court to question the right of a Subordinate Court to admit a document in evidence on the ground that it was either understamped or was not duly stamped, vide section 35 of the Act. The learned Vakil on behalf of the applicant contends with some force that section 35 which prevents the same Court or the Appellate or higher Court to question in such of the suit or proceeding, the admissibility of a document in evidence on the ground that it was not duly stamped, is inconsistent with section 35 which makes it imperative upon every Court in any proceeding not to receive a document in evidence for any purpose unless it was duly stamped. The anomaly, however grave it may be, I am unable to go against the letter of the law on the question of stamp. I must give effect to the law as it is. Section 35 enacts: "Where an instrument has been admitted in evidence, such admission shall not, except as provided in section 61, be called in question at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that the instrument has not been duly stamped." "At any stage" in the aforesaid section includes the stage of appeal. The Calcutta High Court has taken this view in two cases, Sitaram v. Ram Prasad Ram (4) and Punchanand Dass Oh.achary v. Taranmoni Chowdhari (5). The latter is a case which exactly applies to the present one. In that case the document in question was one which required an adhesive stamp of one-anna. The first Court illegally admitted the document in evidence on payment of penalty treating it as a bond. The Appellate Court held that the Munsif was wrong in admitting the document in evidence. The learned Judges, Field and O'Kinealy, J.J., held that the lower Appellate Court was precluded, by section 36 of the Stamp Act from questioning the admissibility of the document when it was already admitted by the first Court. Upon the law as it stands, I am bound to follow the aforesaid decisions. I would, therefore, reject the contention of the learned Vakil on the question.

There was, as observed above, evidence to prove the debt taken and the Court, in the passage quoted above from its judgment, has distinctly held that it was satisfactorily proved that the defendant borrowed the money in question from the plaintiff. No doubt, the case appears to have been based upon the hand-note in the sense that it has been stated in the plaint that money was advanced and a hand note was executed and the cause of action was stated to have arisen on the date the hand-note was executed. Reading the plaint as a whole, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff wanted to recover the money that he paid. The hand-note was executed and was sought to be used only with a view to bind the defendant in order to afford evidence of the loan having been given. A large number of authorities have been placed before me; Golip Chand v. Thakurani Mohokoom Kocree (6), Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (7), Damodar Jagannath v. Atnaram Babaji (8), Balbhadar Prasad v. Maharaja of Betia (9) and Pramatha Nath v. Dwarka Nath Dey (10) as well as the cases already referred to above. Upon a careful consideration of all these authorities, I am of opinion that it was open to the plaintiff to prove his case by other evidence which he has done even if the hand-note in question be held to be inadmissible in evidence. Taking any view of the case, the plaintiff's claim was rightly decreed.

The application must, therefore, be rejected. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 10 (ii), 12, 17—
Suit for specific performance and possession—Court-fee payable—Court-fee, deficiency of, order for payment of, form of.

Inasmuch as in a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale, and for possession of the property agreed to be sold, the relief for specific performance is the main relief and is not ancillary to the claim for possession, a separate Court-fee is, under section 17 of the Court Fees Act, payable on such relief both in the Original Court and the Court of Appeal. [p. 655, col. 1.]

Where in an appeal by the defendant it is discovered that there is a deficiency in the amount of Court-fees paid both on the plaint and the memorandum of appeal, the proper order is to direct the parties to make good the deficiency, and to direct that, in the event of non-compliance with such order, the suit or appeal or both do stand dismissed under section 10 (ii) read with section 12 of the Court Fees Act. [p. 655, col. 2.]

First appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki dated the 25th February 1920.

Meesra. A. P. Sen and Haidar Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Biseshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—On this appeal coming up for hearing it appeared to me that the Court-fees paid in the lower Court and also on the memorandum of appeal to this Court were deficient. I have heard Counsel on the point, and I am still of the same opinion. The suit was for specific performance of a contract of sale and for possession of the land agreed to be sold. Court-fees were paid on the relief for possession only, instead of both reliefs under section 17 of the Court Fees Act. An objection on this ground was taken in the lower Court but apparently was not pressed and the lower Court overruled it, remarking that the relief for specific performance was ancillary to the claim for possession. With this remark I cannot agree. The prayer for specific performance is the main relief. Unless and until this is decreed the plaintiffs could not by any possibility obtain a decree for possession. Two rulings have been cited to me. The first is Krishnasami v. Sundarappayyar (1) which appears to be in favour of the view taken by me. The judgment is not very clear, but from the remark at the end that the decree is clearly irregular in directing that in default of payment of the deficiency in fees the prayer for possession alone would be disallowed instead of saying that the suit would be dismissed it would seem that the plaintiffs had paid Court fees on the relief for specific performance but had failed to pay them on the relief for possession—whereas they should have paid on both. The other case is an unreported case of the Calcutta High Court Madan Mohan Singh v. Gaja Prasad Singh (2)] and is somewhat in favour of the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge. The main question was one of jurisdiction but the judgment holds that the suit was in substance one for possession and ought to be valued under section 7, clause (v) (b). With great respect, I cannot concur in this remark. The two reliefs, though they may be joined in one suit, are entirely distinct, and a separate Court-fee is chargeable on each of them.

There is a third case, not cited at the Bar, in which the Madras and the Calcutta decisions were considered. It is that of Nihal Singh v. Sewa Ram (3). This also was a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale and for possession. Court-fee was paid on the latter relief only. The Taxing Officer considered that a separate fee should have been paid on each relief, and referred to Krishnasami v. Sundarappayyar (1) in support of his view. Mr. Justice Tudball held that the real relief was that of specific performance and that in both reliefs the plaintiffs were merely seeking to force the vendor to do what he was bound to do under his contract, namely, to execute and register the sale-deed and to hand over possession of the property. He accordingly required them to deposit the difference between Rs. 26.4.0 already paid on the relief for possession and Rs. 170 payable on the relief for specific performance. This view was thus the exact opposite of that taken by the learned Subordinate Judge in this case. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that the relief of specific performance is ancillary to that of possession. He held, on the contrary, that the relief of possession was included in that of specific performance.

If I found that it was part of the plaintiffs' case as stated in the plaint that the seller had contracted to deliver possession and that possession was asked for in performance of the contract, I should be prepared to follow this ruling. I find that this is not the case. Defendants are said to have received Rs. 50 earnest-money and to have agreed to complete the sale within a month the plaintiffs paying the balance. There is no allegation of an agreement to put the plaintiffs in possession. No doubt, the law, as laid down in section 55 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act, imposes an obligation to put the buyer or his representative in possession, but it is a conditional obligation taking effect on the request of the latter and in favour either of the buyer himself or such other person he may direct. A claim to possession is not a necessary incident of a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale. The property may already be in possession of the vendee under some other title; or it may be in possession of a third person, such as a mortgagee; or the parties may have stipulated that possession should be deferred. In this case, therefore, I hold that a separate Court-fee is payable on each relief. There is, therefore, a deficiency of Rs. 465 both in the lower Court and in this Court. In the lower Court it is payable by the plaintiffs-respondents, and in this Court by the defendants-appellants.

I accordingly allow the parties one month within which to make up the deficiency of Rs. 465, respectively due from them. If the appellants fail to comply their appeal will be dismissed but the plaintiffs will not be allowed to execute their decree till they pay the additional amount due from them. A question arises as to the nature of the order to be passed in the event of the appellants complying with the order and the respondents failing to do so. Should it be an order under section 10 (ii) read with section 12 (ii) of the Court Fees Act directing that their suit be dismissed, or should it be an order merely preventing their executing any decree which may be passed in their favour till the Court fee is paid? The latter course has, I am told, been followed in several cases, and it has the support of a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court, Mohan Lal v. Nand Nishore (4), but it is open to the drawback that it leaves it open to the plaintiffs to wait and see whether a decree is passed in their favour in appeal and to file or not file the Court-fees according to the result. The former course is more in accordance with the language of section 10 (ii) of the Court Fees Act and it was followed by the Judicial Commissioner in Second Civil Appeal No. 354 of 1912. In that case the learned Judicial Commissioner, by his order of 20th March 1914, directed that if the deficient Court fee in the Court below were not made good by the respondent the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court in his favour would be discharged. The same view has recently been taken by the Patna High Court in a case which is precisely on all fours with that now before me [Brij Krishna Das v. Murli Rai (5)].

I prefer to follow these two authorities in preference to the Allahabad ruling. If, therefore, the appellants make good the deficiency but the plaintiffs fail to do so the suit of the latter will be dismissed without costs and the appeal will be decreed with costs.

The case should be put down for final hearing at the earliest possible date after August 12th.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XVI, r 1—Witnesses, application to summon—Court, duty of—Court, whether can refuse to summon witnesses.

It is the duty of a Court to summon the witnesses for whose attendance an application is duly made by a party. A Court cannot reject such an application on the ground that it has been made too late.

Petition, under section 2, of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Munsif, First Class, exercising the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, Rawalpindi, dated the 16th June 1920.

Mr. Zafull Khan, for the Petitioner.
Khwaja Feroz ud Din Ahnati, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to this petition for revision are simple. The plaintiff came into Court claiming to be a son of Fazi Din, father of the defendant, and asked for a decree for half of Rs. 140 which the defendant had realised from the Post Office. The defendant denied that the plaintiff was the legitimate son of Fazi Din, his father. The suit was instituted on the 13th of May 1910; 22nd of May 1920 was fixed for the first hearing when issues were struck. 16th of June 1920 was the date fixed for taking evidence. On the 7th of June the defendant put in a list of witnesses whom he wanted to be summoned and asked the Court to summon them. The Court, however, refused to summon the witnesses on the ground that the time was too short. The case was then taken up on the 16th of June 1920 and was disposed of on such documentary evidence as was placed on the record on behalf of the plaintiff. Relying upon the documentary evidence put in by the plaintiff, the Court found in favour of the plaintiff and decreed his claim.

The defendant has come up in revision and it is contended on his behalf that the documents placed on the record were neither admitted by the defendant nor proved by evidence. It is further contended that the Court below has exercised jurisdiction wrongly in rejecting the petition for summoning the witnesses. There is force in this argument. In my opinion, it was the duty of the Court to have summoned the witnesses named by the defendant. The condition of the record shows that there has been practically no trial of the issues arising between the parties.

I set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and remand the case for a re-trial under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code. Costs will abide the result. The Court will give to the parties sufficient opportunity to adduce such evidence as they may wish to produce.

The mere fact that a Magistrate, in whose Court a case is pending trial, is in his executive capacity subordinate to the District Magistrate who has taken a strong view with regard to the merits of the case, is, by itself, not a sufficient ground for transferring the case, under section 528 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to some other Magistrate outside the district. [p 605, col 1.]

Application by the complainant for the transfer of his case from the file of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Chapra, on the main ground that the District Magistrate in his executive capacity had interfered and expressed strongly in favour of the accused at various stages of the enquiry before the Police, who had ultimately reported the case to be maliciously false.

Messrs. Yunus and P. C. Rai, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This is an application by Chandi Missir, a Pleader, practising in the District of Chapra, for the transfer of a case from the file of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Chapra to the file of some other Magistrate outside that District. The petitioner on the 16th June last filed an information before the Police charging one Shyama Charan Ghosh and others with theft of timber, stone pillars and other property alleged to have belonged to a ward in whom the petitioner is interested, and whose property is being managed by Shyama Charan Ghosh under the direction of the Court of Wards. The information was duly recorded and investigated and a final report was submitted by the Police stating that it was maliciously false and that the informant should be prosecuted under the Penal Code for having maliciously laid a false charge. Before the report of the Police reached the Sub-Divisional Magistrate the petitioner on the 28th June filed a complaint before him making various allegations against the Police as well as the District Magistrate. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed that the complaint should be considered on the 12th July along with the Police report. On the 2nd July, by which time the Police report seems to have reached the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, the date of hearing was, however, changed from 12th July to the 8th July. On this latter date the complainant was examined by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and his statement was recorded in accordance with the provisions of section 200 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Not being satisfied that process should issue the Sub-Divisional Magistrate decided to hold an enquiry under section 202 of the Code and directed the complainant to file a list of witnesses. The complainant thereupon filed a list of 49 witnesses. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate thought that it was not necessary to examine so large a number at once and suggested to the complainant that he should submit the names of those witnesses who saw the accused actually removing the timber. This the complainant declined to do and finally, on the 27th July, which was the date fixed for hearing, he requested that proceedings should be stayed in order that he might move the High Court under section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code for a transfer of the case. The proceedings were thereupon stayed and on the 12th August the petition out of which the present case arises was made to this Court.

In the body of this petition a number of allegations have been made against Mr. Luce, the District Magistrate. It is alleged that he sent for the officer who had recorded the first information and reprimanded him in the following words:—

“This is really a case against me. Would you venture to draw up a first information against me? You ought to have informed me beforehand. You did this in haste. I know Rai Sahab is an innocent man. This case is false”.

It is suggested that as the Rai Sahab, namely, the accused Shyama Charan Ghosh, is a favourite of the District Magistrate's and also his subordinate, being a manager of the Court of Wards, the District Magistrate is particularly interested in securing his discharge.

It is next suggested that the Deputy Magistrate being, in his executive capacity, subordinate to the District Magistrate, will be so influenced by the attitude of the District Magistrate that he will not do justice in the case.

The District Magistrate in his letter of reply has denied the allegations made in that part of the petition which sets out the grounds for the transfer of the case.

With regard to the allegations made in the body of the petition, he says that he has not considered it necessary to submit separate denials, but he is ready to make a reply to them if called upon by the Court to do so.

He has also forwarded to us a reply by the trying Magistrate and we have to consider, first of all, whether there is any substance in the main ground, namely, that the District Magistrate's conduct raises a reasonable apprehension that the trying Magistrate will not do his duty fairly and impartially.

In my opinion, there is no foundation whatsoever for any apprehension of this sort. The District Magistrate, as the head of the Police of the District, is competent to advise the Police in the performance of their duties, and in this case this is all that he appears to have done.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate denies that the District Magistrate used the particular words which he is alleged to have used, while Mr. Yunus demands that the denial should be on affidavit. If it had been necessary to come to a finding on this point I should have said that the petitioner's allegation had not been established, but assuming that the allegation is true, the question is, what effect, if any, the words will have on the trying Magistrate?

In my opinion, the mere fact that the trying Magistrate is in his executive capacity subordinate to the District Magistrate ought not to debar him from trying a case even though the District Magistrate may have taken a strong view with regard to the merits of that case. It has not been shown that the trying Magistrate is even aware of the District Magistrate's views, but even if he is I cannot agree that it is reasonable to fear that he will permit himself to be influenced by them in the discharge of his judicial duties. The Legislature having chosen to combine executive and judicial functions in certain officers, we are bound, until the contrary is shown, to assume that the duties imposed will be rightly performed.

But it is contended that the trying Magistrate has already shown bias against the petitioner, firstly, in not recording the complaint in a sufficiently full manner; and, secondly, in not recording orders upon the various petitions filed before him either promptly or at all. Now, with regard to the first of these grounds, it seems to me that the Magistrate has recorded the substance of the complaint and that, if anything has been omitted, it will be easy for the complainant to make a supplementary statement during the enquiry which the Magistrate has decided to make.

With regard to the second ground, I do not think there is much substance in it, and I am quite satisfied that the Deputy Magistrate is in no way prejudiced or under the control of the District Magistrate.

The result, is that this application for transfer will be dismissed and the case will be sent back to the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate with a direction that he will proceed to hold the enquiry which he has decided to hold upon the petitioner's complying with the directions given by him.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree.

In convictions for manufacturing liquor contrary to law and being in possession of it, deterrent sentences are absolutely necessary. [p. 651, col. 1.]

1142 reported by Mr. Sessions Judge, Sialkot, with his No. 13-J of 10th August 1920.

RAMESHWAR SINGH v. EMPEROR.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are contained in the following grounds for revision:—

GROUND.—This is one of seven cases from village Dipoke, in Tahsil Zafarwal of this district, (i. e., Sialkot) in which the accused were found in possession of lahn, or illicit liquor, when the raid was made on the village by the Revenue Assistant with the help of Police Officers on 3rd April 1920; and the fact that a large quantity of liquor was found, shows that extensive distillation was being carried on, and a deterrent sentence is, therefore, absolutely necessary.

There can be no doubt whatever as to the guilt of the accused, as the raid was carried out by a Magistrate and other officers of position.

The present Excise Act was passed evidently because the old law was not sufficiently deterrent; and, for the reasons given in Emperor v. Sujan Singh (1), a much severer sentence is called for.

Government has been put to heavy expense over these cases, including the rewards which are always granted, and the fines which have been imposed are not likely even to cover that expense.

The accused in this case was found in possession of 14 seers and 8 chitaks of lahn.

Sardar Bahadur Sardar Mehtab Singh,
Public Prosecutor, for the Petitioner.

Lala Bishan Nath, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The Sessions Judge of Sialkot has referred seven cases of conviction, under section 61 of the Excise Act, for the possession of a large amount of illicitly distilled liquor, owing to the inadequacy of the sentences awarded. In each of these cases the accused persons were sentenced to fines varying between Rs. 30 and Rs. 65. The Sessions Judge has referred to Emperor v. Sujan Singh (1) in which Sir Donald Johnstone held that in convictions for manufacturing liquor contrary to law and being in possession of it, deterrent sentences are absolutely necessary, and that this was also the intention of the Legislature when passing the new Excise Act. I agree with the Sessions Judge that the sentences awarded were ridiculously inadequate, and should enhance the sentences and award substantial periods of imprisonment if the convictions had not taken place some seven months ago. In these circumstances, I do not think it necessary to award any period of imprisonment, but enhance the fine in each case to Rs. 200, or in default six months' rigorous imprisonment in all seven cases except that of Sundar and Faqir, two brothers, who were found jointly in possession. In their case I enhance the fine to Rs. 100 against each of the convicts, or in default three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The examination of an accused person before all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined is illegal, as it contravenes the provisions of section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the illegality is sufficient to vitiate the trial. [p. 660, col. 1.]

under the provision of section 342 on the same day. On the 2nd August the complainant and his witnesses were cross-examined, and on the 13th September the Medical Officer was examined on behalf of the prosecution. It was urged before us, in the first place, that the Trial Court should have examined the accused not only after the examination-in-chief of the complainant and his two witnesses but after their cross-examination and re-examination; and, in any case, the Court should not have put any questions to the accused until all the witnesses, including the Medical Officer, had been examined in the case. It is, in our view, unnecessary to deal with the first question which is of some doubt and difficulty, but in view of the decision in the case of Raghu Bhumij v. Emperor (1), the conviction is liable to be set aside in view of the fact that the Trial Court put questions to the accused persons before the Doctor was examined. It was urged on behalf of the opposite party that the whole object of putting questions to the accused person is to enable him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, and the Trial Court substantially performed its duty in putting questions to the accused persons after all the material witnesses for the prosecution had been examined. It was further urged that the medical evidence is purely formal evidence and as there is no circumstance in that evidence against the accused person, the Court was within its rights not to wait for that evidence. We do not think that this argument is admissible in view of the decision to which we have already referred. Apart from that, we cannot say, as a general rule, that medical evidence is always formal evidence and where the Legislature says definitely that the Court shall put questions to the accused person generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence, it is not an admissible argument that the Court may do so before all the prosecution witnesses have been examined. We would, therefore, set aside the conviction of the petitioner and direct that he be re-tried according to law.

The test as to whether the confession of an accused person can be used as against his co-accused is, whether the person making such confession could have been convicted on that confession of the crime with which he and his co-accused were charged. [p. 66, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 16th October 1920.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellants.

Lala Jai Lal, R. B., Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The two appellants in this case, Tara Chand and Chuni Lal, have been convicted of the murder of their sister, Musammât Rakho, on or about the 1st of May last, and have been sentenced to death subject to the confirmation of this Court. The Assessors were unanimous in finding them guilty of the murder. We have heard their appeal argued by Mr. Sheo Narain and the sentences of death are before us for confirmation. The facts as given for the prosecution briefly are that Tara Chand, who is a Patwari of Pindi Kalu, was living there with his three sisters, of whom Musammât Rakho, aged 13, was the eldest. His brother, Chuni Lal, who is an apprentice Patwari, used to live with him from time to time. The brothers had heard rumours regarding the character of their sister, and it is stated that they were also unable to afford the necessary money for effecting her marriage. They, therefore, decided to do away with her. Early in the morning they persuaded her to come out with them on the pretence that they were going to their own village, and when they had reached a well about a mile from their village, they made her dismount from her pony and Tara Chand proceeded to kill her with a tola. After doing so, her head was severed from the body and the latter was thrown into the well. The head was taken to a sand-hill about a mile away and buried there. The hatchet with which the murder was committed was thrown into a canal. There was no trace of the murder till the 10th of May when the body was found in the well and a report was made to the Police, but no clue was forthcoming. On the 20th of May Sultan Khan, Lambardar, informed the Police that he had heard that Tara Chand and others had killed Mu-am-nat Rakho. An investigation then commenced and Tara Chand took the Police first to the spot where the skull was buried, then to the canal where the toki had been thrown and, finally, he showed them some blood-stained earth near the well in which the corpse had been found. He first appeared willing to make a confession but changed his mind when brought up before a Magistrate.

CHUNI LAL V. EMPEROR.

His brother, Chuni Lal, was arrested on the 26th of May and made a confession before a Magistrate on the 28th. In this confession he stated the facts as described above. The head and the body were not capable of identification.

We have first to consider the confession of Chuni Lal. In this he stated the annoyance to himself and his brother at the immorality of their sister. He stated that Tara Chand proposed to do away with her, that he agreed, that they took her out on the early morning of the 1st of May on the pretext that they were going to their own village, that, when they had reached the well, Tara Chand killed her with a hatchet, and that they then both proceeded to conceal the body and the head. This confession was retracted before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge, and Mr. Shao Narain urges that, being a retracted confession, it should not be considered as against either of the appellants. He next urges that it cannot be taken in evidence against Tara Chand on the ground that Chuni Lal did not inculcate himself in the crime equally with his brother. Neither of these arguments appears to us to have any force. It is true that in several judgments it has been held that it is unsafe to base a conviction merely upon a retracted confession, but this proposition does not apply to the present case, as there are other strong circumstantial pieces of evidence inculcating both the appellants. As for the contention that the confession cannot be used as against Tara Chand under the provisions of section 30 of the Evidence Act, we again do not agree with the learned Counsel. The test in such cases is, whether the person making such confession could have been convicted on that confession of the crime with which he and his co-accused were charged. In this case Chuni Lal clearly admitted a previous conspiracy to murder his sister; he also clearly admitted that on the day of the murder she was taken out under a false pretext by himself and his brother and finally he confessed that he was present while his brother actually killed the girl. As Mr. Jai Lal for the Crown points out, it was not necessary for both the brothers to commit the fatal assault, and, moreover, they appear to have had only one hatchet between them. We hold, therefore, that the confession of Chuni Lal can be taken in evidence against Tara Chand.

There is good circumstantial evidence which leaves no doubt as to the truth of Chuni Lal's confession. In the first place, there are two witnesses, Diwan Chand and Ladha Mal, who state that they saw the two brothers taking out the girl on or about the 1st of May after which she was not seen alive. There is next good evidence that Tara Chand when questioned about the disappearance of his sister gave a false account, namely, that she had gone off to her own village and died there. Moreover, neither of the brothers took any steps regarding the disappearance of their sister. Next, there is good evidence of the discovery of the skull, the hatchet and the blood-stained earth at the instance of Tara Chand. This evidence by itself is of great weight as against Tara Chand as, knowing the whereabouts of the skull, etc., he had no motive whatever, as might be the case with an ordinary stranger, to conceal his knowledge. It is impossible also to understand how he could have obtained his knowledge except by participating in the crime.

Mr. Shao Narain addressed other arguments to us regarding the prosecution case. In the first place, he pointed out that it was admitted that the body and skull had not been identified as of the murdered girl. This is correct, and was due to the decomposition which had set in. The point, however, is of small importance in the present case in the presence of the confession of Chuni

SHIVADHIN SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Lal which we hold to be a true one and of the other evidence in the case. Regarding this confession, Mr. Sheo Narain brought it to our notice that Tara Chand also was brought before a Magistrate to confess but that it being explained to him that his confession would be used against him he withdrew. Counsel urges that if Chuni Lal had also been made to understand the result of his confession, he would also have refused to make a statement. It is clear, however, from the evidence of Sheikh Ali Muhammad, Magistrate, that all proper precautions were taken, that Chuni Lal was given a period of 15 or 20 minutes to think over his action after the departure of the Police and that he made his statement voluntarily.

We consider that there cannot be the slightest doubt that the two appellants conspired together to murder their sister and did so as has been found by the Sessions Judge. We, therefore, confirm their convictions for murder, and, being unable to find any extenuating circumstance in the case of Tara Chand, we confirm the sentence of death. In the case of Chuni Lal, however, we must take into consideration the fact that he is a youth and was probably led away by his elder brother, and in his case we alter the sentence to one of transportation for life.

Sentence altered.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS CASE No. 66
OF 1920.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 284, 526
—Application for transfer—Error of judgment, whether ground for directing transfer—Assessors, choosing of—Objection, whether can be taken.

More errors of judgment, as,—refusing to summon a prosecution witness for cross-examination and insisting on his being summoned as a witness for the defence, or disallowing objections as to the fitness of a person to serve as an assessor, or permitting the prosecution to examine a witness in chief on the substantive case of the prosecution after the defence has disclosed its case in the cross-examination of the witness,—are insufficient, in the absence of prejudice in the Judge, to direct a transfer of the case for trial by some other Court; in such circumstances as the foregoing, however, the accused is entitled to a trial de novo. [p. 665, col. 2.]

Section 284 of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers a Sessions Judge to choose such assessors as he thinks fit from the persons summoned to act as such and there is no express provision for objecting to the selection of an assessor. But there is no reason why an objection of presumed or actual partiality should not be allowed, particularly when it is urged at the time of the selection of the assessor. [p. 665, cols. 1 & 2]

Application for the transfer of a Sessions case pending in the Court of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. N. Sahay (with him Babu J. N. Maitra), for the Petitioner.—The assessors chosen are both tenants of the Goenka Estate, whose Tahsildar was killed, and, therefore, the Court is not impartial. The opinion of the assessors is entitled to great weight and in case of conviction it will be difficult to induce the superior Court to take a different view—see Queen v. Ram Dutt Ohowdhry (1).

The prosecution tendered P. W. Bansilal for cross-examination and after he was cross-examined by the defence the learned Judge allowed the Public Prosecutor to examine this witness-in-chief. This is illegal and has seriously prejudiced the defence.

Mr. Manohar Lall (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown, reads section 284, Criminal Procedure Code. The assessors have to be chosen as the Judge thinks fit. But here the Judge considered the objection of the accused as to the partiality of the assessors and overruled them. The High Court cannot interfere with that decision. Compare section 279—even a decision by a Judge as to the objection to a Juror is final, in a case where the verdict of the Jury is binding on the Judge, a fortiori in trial by the aid of assessors, where their opinion is not binding on the Judge. The assessors chosen are respectable men and their being tenants of small areas of land in a large estate should be no disqualification. They must be presumed to give honest opinions.

(1) 23 W. R. 35 Cr.

SHIVADHIN SINGH v. EMPEROR.

As to the objection to the examination-in-chief of witness Bansilal, reads section 138, Indian Evidence Act. The Judge can allow any question to be put in re examination, which is practically an examination-in-chief. The accused have not been prejudiced. They can cross-examine the witness if any new matter is introduced.

In any event, these are mere errors of procedure and cannot justify a transfer.

Mr. S. N. Sahay in reply.—I admit section 234 says that the assessors shall be chosen as the Judge thinks fit, but this section does not control section 526, Criminal Procedure Code. If the High Court is satisfied that the assessors are not impartial, then I am entitled to a transfer. The accused can have no confidence in such a tribunal.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for transfer of a Sessions Trial pending in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Monghyr.

The petitioner, Shivadhin Singh, along with others was placed on his trial before the Sessions Judge of Monghyr for having committed riot in the course of which one Rajdhar Lal, Tahsildar of the Goenka Estate, was killed. There was, therefore, a charge also under section 304, Indian Penal Code.

The trial commenced on 27th August. The Civil Surgeon, as Superintendent of the Monghyr Jail, reported that one of the accused, Basha Tiar, was ill and was unable to attend the Court. The remaining accused applied for an adjournment of the case so that there might not be a separate trial and consequent double expense and harassment to them. This petition was rejected and the trial proceeded.

Six assessors were summoned for the day: (1) Baij Nath Mahto (2) Jamna Mahto, (3) Krishan Dayal Bhagat, (4) Mahadeo Choudhury, (5) Professor P. G. Dutt and (6) Ram Prasad Singh. Nos. 1 and 6 did not appear. Professor P. G. Dutt did not understand Hindi. Out of the remaining three assessors, the learned Sessions Judge selected Jamna Mahto and Krishna Dayal Bhagat. The accused objected to the selection of Jamna Mahto as an assessor on the ground that he was on intimate terms with Kedar Nath Goenka, proprietor of the Goenka Estate, and master of the man who was killed, and that another assessor out of those present be selected. The learned Sessions Judge asked the assessor about this. He denied being intimate with Kedar Nath, but admitted that he was a tenant of the Estate. The learned Sessions Judge overruled the objection.

The petitioner then applied for postponement of the case to enable him to move the High Court for a transfer. This petition also was rejected with the observation "Shivadhin Singh has plenty of time to move the High Court before I reach the stage (if I ever reach it) of calling upon him for his defence."

The trial proceeded on. In the course of the trial the Public Prosecutor tendered a prosecution witness, Bansi Lal, for cross-examination. The witness was cross-examined on behalf of the accused. Instead of confining himself to questions arising out of the cross examination, the Public Prosecutor was permitted by the learned Sessions Judge to examine the witness de novo as a principal witness on behalf of the prosecution with leave to further cross-examination by the accused.

On the 4th of September the medical witness, Charu Chandra Sur, failed to attend though summoned by the Sessions Court. His evidence was admitted under section 509 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in spite of the objection by the accused that no opportunity was given to them to cross-examine the witness. The Court directed that the witness be summoned for the defence on the 13th September, but the accused refused to have him as their own witness.

The prosecution evidence closed on the 4th of September and the accused were called upon to enter on their defence.

The petitioner filed another petition impugning the impartiality of the second assessor Krishna Dayal Bhagat upon the ground that he was also a tenant of the Goenka Estate. It was further stated that both the assessors were putting up in the Dharamsala of Kedar Nath Goenka and were having communication with the opposite party.

The petitioner was granted time by the learned Sessions Judge to move this Court for a transfer of the case. The application was prepared on the 3rd September and was filed on the 6th. The allegations made in the petition of the 11th September before the learned Sessions Judge were subsequently set forth in a supplementary petition filed on the 11th September. On the aforesaid allegations the petitioner asks the Court to transfer the case from the file of the learned Sessions Judge.

The learned Sessions Judge has submitted a report upon the allegations made in the first petition for the transfer. No report could be had from him on the supplementary petition, as that was filed on the 11th September after the report of the Sessions Judge was transmitted. The learned Assistant Government Advocate was given a copy of the petition of the 11th September.

The allegations set forth in the first petition are almost admitted, except that the learned Sessions Judge could not verify the allegation as to the Assessor Krishna Dayal Bhagat being a tenant of the Guenka Estate, inasmuch as that witness was not present in Court having been summoned for the 13th of September, the date fixed in the case.

The principal allegations set forth in the second petition of the 11th September are borne out by the order-sheet and, therefore, do not require any further investigation.

The grounds urged for the transfer on behalf of the petitioner may be summarised as follows:—

(1) That the assessors are not impartial and are interested in the result of the case in favour of the prosecution, they being tenants of the Estate whose Tahsildar was killed. The constitution of the Court was, therefore, illegal and irregular.

(2) That the learned Sessions Judge committed grave irregularity in allowing the prosecution witness, Bansi Lal, to be examined-in-chief by the Public Prosecutor after he was cross-examined on behalf of the accused on being tendered by the Public Prosecutor. This has prejudiced the accused in the defence.

(3) That the learned Sessions Judge has illegally admitted the evidence of the medical witness, Charu Chandra Sar, under section 509 of the Code of Criminal Procedure without giving an opportunity to the accused to cross-examine him.

The consideration of the aforesaid grounds becomes immaterial in view of the fact stated by the learned Sessions Judge in his letter of the 9th September 1920 that the defence have given a list of 50 witnesses and that it would not be possible for the learned Sessions Judge to finish the trial as he is about to go on leave on October 1st and the attempt of the accused to secure de novo trial will doubtless succeed. This apprehension was also felt by the learned Sessions Judge on the 27th August when he commenced the trial, for he noted in the order-sheet of that date when Shivadhin applied for time to move this Court for a transfer, that Shivadhin had ample time to move the High Court before he would ever reach the stage of calling upon him for his defence. This is also obvious from the third objection of the accused referred to above which must prevail for the Doctor will have to be cross examined by the accused. No doubt, section 509 of the Code permits the deposition of a medical witness taken in the Commitment Court to be given in evidence at the Sessions trial, but that is subject to the condition that the accused should have been given full opportunity to cross-examine the witness and the Court may, if it thinks fit, summon and examine such a witness as to the subject-matter of his deposition. In the present case the accused reserved the cross-examination of the witness in the Commitment Court which apparently was allowed and the witness was summoned by the Sessions Court to give evidence on behalf of the prosecution. Although, therefore, the accused had an opportunity of cross-examining the witness, they reserved it with the leave of the Magistrate for the Sessions Court. The Sessions Court also apparently confirmed this, inasmuch as it summoned the witness which would not have taken place if his evidence in the Commitment Court was to be accepted without any opportunity of cross-examination being given to the accused. Though, therefore, the evidence already recorded might have been rightly admitted under section 509, the accused had a right to cross-examine the witness and the Court was apparently in error in refusing to summon the witness when he did not attend on the 4th September and insisted upon his being called as a defence witness.

As to the second objection, namely, that Bansi Lal should have been allowed to be examined-in-chief by the Public Prosecutor, a reference may be made to section 133 of the Evidence Act which lays down the order in which the witness should be cross-examined and re-examined. After the cross-examination of the witness on behalf of the accused the re-examination would ordinarily be directed to the explanation of the matter referred to in the cross-examination. No doubt, a new matter may by the permission of the Court be introduced, with leave to the other side to cross-examine the witness upon that matter. But this cannot possibly entitle the prosecution to examine in-chief on the substantive case of the prosecution after the defence has disclosed its case in the cross-examination of the witness. The procedure adopted by the learned Sessions Judge was, therefore, irregular and prejudicial to the accused.

As to the first ground referred to above, namely, that the assessors were not properly selected, in spite of their having been challenged by the accused then and there, I think there is much substance in it. Great weight is attached to the opinion of the assessors and the accused is entitled to an impartial and unprejudiced opinion. In the case of Queen v. Ram Dutt Chowdhry (1) Jackson, J., in agreement with the opinion of Woodroffe, J., held that the assessors should be selected judicially and with great caution. The opinion of the assessors in that case was discarded upon that ground. The learned Judge himself is conscious of this principle when he says that he is always ready to listen to any reasonable objection to the selection of an assessor. The assessors in the particular case may not be intimate personally with the present proprietor Kedar Nath Goenka, it is admitted that the manager of the Estate, who is a relation of the proprietor, is naturally taking keen interest, as stated by the Judge, on behalf of the prosecution inasmuch as the Tahsildar of that Estate was killed in the riot. The assessors are the admitted tenants of the estate. This in itself is a sufficient ground for the accused to mistrust the impartiality of the assessors and the relationship of landlord and tenant, or of master and servant creates an incapacity in a person to sit as a Judge or an assessor in a case. No doubt, section 284 empowers the Judge to choose such assessors as he thinks fit from the persons summoned to act as such, and there is no express provision for objecting to the selection of an assessor as is in the case of jurors under section 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. But there is no reason why an objection of presumed or actual partiality should not be allowed, particularly when it is urged at the time of the selection of the assessor. I am fully alive to the distinction made in the Code between the selection of the assessors and the jurors which is based upon the principle that the opinion of the jurors is final and binding upon the Judge, whereas that of the assessors is not. Yet, as observed above, the opinion of the assessors is of great value both to the Judge who tries the case and to the superior Courts. It is, therefore, necessary as an elementary principle that they should be above suspicion. The reason stated by the learned Sessions Judge why the third assessor, even if selected, would have been incapable of acting as such would apply with equal, if not greater, force to the other assessors selected by him. The learned Sessions Judge reports that he has now discovered that the third assessor, Mahadeo Chondhury, was a caste-man of the accused and hence it would have been a valid objection to his being appointed as an assessor. This connection is disputed by the defence. Accepting it to be correct, if it was a valid objection on behalf of the prosecution to Mahadeo Chondhury acting as an assessor, the fact that the other assessors were tenants of the Goenka Estate was still more objectionable from the accused's point of view.

There is, however, no prejudice in the mind of the learned Sessions Judge himself, who appears to have been compelled by the circumstances to select the assessors who were present on the date; nor is there any prejudice in him shown from some of the irregularities noticed above in the conduct of the trial. They were mere errors of judgment. It further appears that the learned Sessions Judge permitted the accused to cross-examine Bansi Lal after the examination by the Public Prosecutor and that he directed the medical witness to be summoned for the defence. I do not, therefore, think that a sufficient case has been made for taking the case out of the hands of the learned Sessions Judge and to transfer it to some other district. But I do think that the accused are entitled to be tried de novo after the selection of independent assessors, and, if the learned Sessions Judge will not be able to complete the trial, as it is apprehended on account of his going on leave on October 1st, the case will be tried de novo by his successor.

*Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 451—House

Consent or connivance of husband—Presumption.*

A man who enters the house of another at night with intent to commit adultery with his wife is guilty of an offence under section 451 of the Penal Code, and if, in such a case, it is shown that the husband was at the time of the occurrence absent from the house in the legitimate pursuit of his occupation, it may safely be presumed that he neither consented to nor connived at any adultery or immorality on the part of his wife.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 20th March 1920, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Alipur, dated the 23rd February 1920.

Lala Har Gopal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. H. A. Herbert, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Khan Noon Ram was tried on a charge under section 457, Indian Penal Code, it being alleged that, on the night between the 31st January 1920 and 1st February 1920, he had broken into the house of Ghulam Haider at Dadarwala and had stolen therefrom certain ornaments. Khan Noon Ram pleaded that he had gone to the house of Ghulam Haider on the night in question at the invitation of Musammât Phulo, the wife of the said Ghulam Haider, in order to have sexual intercourse with her. The Trial Court found that Khan Noon

Ram had gone to the house in question to visit Musammât Phulo, and held that, by so doing, he had committed an offence under section 451, Indian Penal Code, and convicted him accordingly. Khan Noon Ram then preferred an appeal to the Sessions Judge who, however, agreed with the Trial Court and maintained the conviction. Khan Noon Ram then preferred this petition under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code to this Court through Mr. Har Gopal.

The learned Vakil relied on Brij Basi v. Queen-Empress (1), and contended that before a conviction under section 451, Indian Penal Code, could be had, it was essential to prove that the husband of the woman had neither consented to nor connived at the adultery, the commission of which was the object of the visit.

It appears that the husband of the woman, Ghulam Haider, is a Havaladar Major, and when this occurrence took place was away on duty at the Dhond Cantonment. In these circumstances, we do not think it necessary to express any opinion as to the correctness or otherwise of the decision in Brij Basi v. Queen-Empress (1). In our opinion, in a case where it has been shown that the husband was absent in the legitimate pursuit of his occupation it may safely be presumed that such husband neither consented to nor connived at any adultery or immorality on the part of his wife. It seems obvious that he would be wholly ignorant of what was going on in his house and that, therefore, he could neither consent to nor connive at the same. We, therefore, see no reason to interfere with the conviction. With regard to the sentence, in the circumstances we consider that the period already undergone by the petitioner will suffice, and we accordingly reduce it to that period. Khan Noon Ram will be discharged from his bail.

In order to substantiate a charge of arson under section 436, read with section 149, of the Penal Code, it is necessary to find that either from the inception or at any stage of the occurrence the accused were actuated by the common motive to set fire to a house, or that they knew that such an offence would be committed in prosecution of the common object. Their mere presence, unless they did something to aid and assist the principal culprit, would not make them guilty. [p. 668, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Saran, dated the 19th July 1920, in a trial with the aid of two Assessors.

Messrs. G. C. Pal and Ram Prasad, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner No. 1, Hardeo Singh, has been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Saran under section 436, and the other petitioners under section 436, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code. Hardeo has been sentenced to 4 years rigorous imprisonment under section 436, and the rest to 4 years' rigorous imprisonment under section 436, read with section 149. No separate sentence has been passed under section 147. The origin of the occurrence is said to be an indecent behaviour of the accused, Banarasi Bherihar, in having out jokes with one Musammât Deokalia, and assaulted her while she was scraping grass in a field on the morning of the 28th February. She complained of it to her cousin, Alam Dhunia, P. W. No. 1, who went to Banarasi for remonstrating with him. He found Banarasi and his father, Lal Behari, and the other three accused, Hardeo Singh, Isri Singh and Bishun Dayal Singh. Alam remonstrated. The accused did not like the remonstrance and abused and assaulted Alam. Alam came away. The accused then are said to have gone to the house of Alam in the afternoon and found Musammât Khedia, sister of Alam, at the door feeding the cattle. Now, comes the real part of the occurrence which is stated by Musammât Khedia in the following words:—

"On a Saturday about 4 months ago, or a little over, in the afternoon I was at my door feeding my cattle. At that time Hardeo Singh, Bishundeo Singh, Isri Singh, Lal Behari Bherihar and Banarasi Bherihar came to my door. They were all armed with lathis. Hardeo asked me where Alam had gone. I said he had gone to the factory. Then Hardeo exclaimed "Betichode kothi gelaye, set fire to his house." Then, he took a handful of straw from my bundle lying there and lighted it at the Bhushar close by. He then set fire to the south west corner of of our palani. The other four persons stood near with lathis in hand.....Khobari, Walait, Jokhan Singh, Bhulai Jolha were present when Hardeo asked me where Alam was. Hardeo asked me that much and nothing further. I told him that he had gone to kothi and I did not tell them anything further. This was the only conversation that passed between me and the accused. The accused had no talk with any of the four persons named above (Khobari and others) The four persons did not stop Hardeo. I did not tell Hardeo to desist. The four persons thought that Hardeo might not actually put the fire. The four persons first threw dust to put out the fire. They went to fetch water vessels but the palani was burnt down in the meantime. Many people came after. The five accused had run away immediately after the fire was set. The fire had not extended, say, beyond 1 and 2 cubits or so when they ran away. I did not particularly notice on which side Hardeo was facing when he set the fire; nor which side the other four were facing just at that time. The four persons aforesaid raised a hulla that Hardeo and the rest ran away setting the house on fire."

The learned Sessions Judge has accepted it, and I have no hesitation in agreeing with him. It is supported by reliable evidence and is corroborated by circumstances. It is not necessary, therefore, for me to enter into a detailed discussion of the evidence in the case, nor will it be profitable to answer in detail the criticisms of Mr. Pal impugning the probability of the story. I am not impressed with Mr. Pal's criticisms and I would, therefore, take the story of the prosecution to be true in the main.

The case against Hardeo Singh, no doubt, is definite and has been clearly established. The conviction under section 436 is accordingly unassailable and must be upheld.

As regards the other four accused, the evidence set forth above by Musammât Khedia falls short of bringing the charge home to them. The learned Sessions Judge has convicted them of rioting with the common object of committing the offence of arson under section 147 and also the offence of arson itself under section 436, read with section 149, of the Indian Penal Code, they themselves not having taken any direct part in setting fire to the house of the complainant. In order to substantiate the charges against the accused, it was necessary to find that, either from the inception or at any stage of the occurrence, they were actuated by the common motive to set fire to the house of the complainant or that they knew that such an offence would be committed in prosecution of the common object.

The learned Sessions Judge has devoted his entire judgment to the discussion of the assault on Daokalia, the subsequent remonstrance by Alam and to his house having been set fire to. He has repelled all suggestions made by the defence impugning the veracity or probability of all the incidents connected with the arson. The result of his deliberation has no doubt led to the conclusion to quote his own words "this case.....bears the stamp of truth." But there is not a single word in his judgment touching the part taken by any of the four accused, except Hardeo, in the incendiarism. He has not said that they came with Hardeo with the intention of setting fire to the house of the complainant nor that they in any way encouraged, aided or abetted him in his nefarious act. He has not given any data for his finding which he has recorded at the conclusion of his judgment in the following words:—"I am convinced that all the five accused persons formed themselves in an unlawful assembly and determined to commit arson." What was the motive of the accused until Hardeo exclaimed to set fire to the house, is enveloped in mystery. All that we know is that the five accused persons came to the house of Alam, and their motive, if it is to be gathered from the first overt act of theirs, was simply to enquire as to where Alam was, for that was the first question put to Khedia by Hardeo. We do not definitely know for what purpose that enquiry was. It might be to punish him further for his insolence and impertinence in going to them and remonstrating against the misbehaviour of Banarasi and that they were not contented with the assault already dealt to him in the earlier part of the day. It might be, as suggested by the learned Assistant Government Advocate, that, somehow or other, they got scent of Alam's having gone to the factory to complain to Mr. Wintle of the ill treatment he had received at the hands of these persons and hence they went there to ascertain the truth. We shall never be able to find out what their real object was. Be that as it may. Certainly, their object was not to set fire for we do not find them having gone there prepared to set fire to the house. No material for setting the house on fire, nor even a match-stick was with them as usually is expected when one goes to set fire to the house of another.

The prosecution case is that they came, enquired of Alam, and when they learnt that he had gone to the factory, Hardeo was exasperated, for he took it as an insolent act on the part of Alam having gone to complain to Mr. Wintle against him. In the excitement of the moment, he suddenly exclaimed "set fire to the house." Whatever might have been their motive in accompanying Hardeo to the house of Alam either to punish him further than what they had done in the morning or to enquire of what he was doing there is certainly nothing to show that they participated in the motive that suddenly seized Hardeo, namely, to set fire to the house. That it was a sudden impulse of Hardeo himself is clear from the fact that he had not with him the accessories to carry into execution his incendiary intention, which certainly would have been the case, if he had come with the deliberate motive of setting fire to the house of the complainant. There is nothing to show that the companions of Hardeo, the appellants before us, in any way encouraged Hardeo or took part in it.

The act of Hardeo was so sudden that all present were stunned. Khobari, Walait Jokhan Singh, Bhulai Jolha were interested in stopping the nefarious act of Hardeo, remained at a distance standing where they were, and they did not realize that Hardeo was really serious in his exclamation. Why should not the same benefit be given to the companions of Hardeo. They, like the four persons of the complainant's side named above, might not have taken Hardeo to be serious in his intention. They did not in any way, not even by gesture, or said to have approved the action of Hardeo. All that they did, was to run away after the house was set fire to. This was not an unnatural conduct on their part as they were the companions of Hardeo. Even if they did not disapprove of the act of Hardeo or prevented him from carrying it out, they could not be held guilty of abetting the offense of setting fire to the house. They cannot be guilty by their mere presence unless they did something to aid and assist Hardeo in his act. The weighty words of Glover, J., in the case of Khaijah Noorul Hossein v. O. Fabre Tonnerre (1) would seem to exactly fit in with the facts of this case. The words are: "From anything to the contrary to be found in the evidence, Nurul Hossein might have been unable to interfere from want of time as well as from want of inclination." These persons have not been charged with the abetment of the offence; nor, as shown above, they could be convicted of abetment even if they were charged with it; far less then they can be convicted of having a criminal intent and a common object of setting fire to the house of the complainant along with Hardeo. Hardeo was only responsible for the act committed by him in the heat of the moment. They could not possibly know that he would set fire to the house. The case against the others is not proved. The assessors were doubtful as to whether the case is true or false. Their verdict will, therefore, be construed in favour of the accused as one of "not guilty" and the learned Sessions Judge ought to have given the benefit of that verdict to the accused, other than Hardeo. Disagreeing, therefore, with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge, I set aside the convictions under all the heads of charges of the aforesaid four persons, Isri Singh, Bisundep Singh, Lal Behari and Banarasi Bherihar. They will be acquitted and set at large.

The conviction and sentence of Hardeo are affirmed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110, proceedings under, when to be taken

Proceedings under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, are not intended to enable the Police to get a person sent to jail where sufficient evidence is not forthcoming to prosecute him for any specific offence. Such proceedings should be taken with great care and caution [p. 67C, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Amritsar, dated the 5th June 1920, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 31st March 1920.

Messrs. Ganpat Rai and Badri Nath Kapur, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mackay, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Harnam Singh, petitioner, has been convicted under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and has been ordered to give security to the extent of Rs. 3,000, with two sureties in the like sum.

The evidence against him consisted of ten persons. The witness No. 1 is a Sub-Inspector of Police; witness No. 3 is also a Sub-Inspector of Police; Bodh Raj is also a Sub-Inspector of Police; witness No. 2, Kashmira Singh, is a Professor of the Khalsa College, Amritsar; witness No. 5, Sher Singh, is a Zaildar; Sushet Singh is a Lambardar; Said Ahmad is a Sub-Inspector of Police; Ajamal Singh is a Zaildar; Jawala Singh is a Lambardar; and Mihan Singh is a Sufedposh. Now the witnesses Nos. 10, 9, 8 and 7 practically say nothing which may establish a case under section 110. They all speak to the incident of a theft of buffaloes at the Khalsa College and in connection with that incident they say that they had heard that the buffaloes had been taken to the petitioner, Harnam Singh. They profess no personal knowledge and can swear nothing specific against the petitioner. The several Sub-Inspectors also depose to the theft incident at the Khalsa College and state in connection with it that they also heard that Harnam Singh had had reputation of being the receiver of stolen property. Karm Ilahi and Bodh Raj, witnesses Nos. 3 and 4, certainly speak as to certain other matters in connection with which it was rumoured that the petitioner was suspected as Receiver of stolen property. Only one witness has deposed to a case in which some stolen horses were recovered back through Harnam Singh on payment of bhunga.

The evidence of Professor Kashmira Singh has been mostly relied upon by both the Courts below in convicting Harnam Singh under section 110. I have carefully examined the evidence of the Professor and all that he stated was that a number of buffaloes were stolen from the dairy of the Khalsa College and that the dairy-men told him that servants of Harnam Singh had stolen them. The Professor also stated that he had heard rumours about Harnam Singh being a receiver of stolen property. Questioned as to the source of his knowledge he found himself unable to give any definite information. He could not name the persons from whom such information had been received by him.

The prosecution mostly depended upon the evidence of the Police witnesses. Even they were not able to make out a satisfactory case under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. It has not been shown that Harnam Singh was ever convicted of theft or even tried for such an offence. It is not shown that any stolen property was ever recovered from his house. Is it possible upon this evidence to hold that he is a habitual offender and receiver of stolen property? It may be said that the witnesses Nos. 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10 being Zaildars and Lambardars are respectable and independent witnesses but what have they deposed? Their evidence practically comes to nothing. On the other hand, a large number of witnesses were examined for the defence, including Lambardars and Sufedposhes. They were equally respectable and men of position. There is no reason why their evidence should not be accepted as against the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. This was not a case in which the Magistrate should have passed orders under section 110. If there was any truth in the allegation that a theft of buffaloes in the Khalsa College had been committed by the servants of Harnam Singh or by Harnam Singh himself, why were not these people prosecuted for committing theft? Proceedings under section 110 are to be taken with great care and caution. They are not intended to enable the Police to get a person sent to Jail where it cannot find sufficient evidence to prosecute him for any specific offence.

For the reasons given above, I allow this petition for revision and set aside the order passed under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, against the petitioner. The security-bond, if already executed by the petitioner, shall be cancelled.

Order set aside.

NEPAL BAGDI v. EMPEROR.

A point not urged in the lower Court, and not taken in the grounds of an application for revision, cannot be raised at the hearing of the application.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Devacotta, in Criminal Appeal No. 14 of 1919, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Special Second Class Magistrate, Ramnad, in Calendar Case No. 11 of 1919.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. Narasimha Aiyar, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Messrs. R. Sadagopachariar and V. K. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Complainant.

ORDER.—This is a dispute between neighbouring villagers. There is a supply channel (A2 and A5) flowing from the Terbogi "Kanmoi" to the Konjani "Kanmoi". The ryots of the Sathamangalam "Kanmoi" and the accused in this case are charged with damming A2—A5 at place B in the plan and clearing or making a channel B—B1 and thereby diverting the water flowing in (A2—A5) and so guilty under section 430 Indian Penal Code.

Dr. Swaminathan, for the accused (appellants) urges that the channel, A2—A5 is not a supply channel, secondly, that this is a matter for the Civil Courts, and, thirdly, that the elements of the offence of mischief are not present here.

There is no doubt that A2—A5 is a supply channel, that is found by both Courts and is also established by Exhibit A whereby the Konjani villagers were to enjoy the water flowing along A2—A5. The Exhibit is dated 9th March 1914 and in it the channel is called Ku'aikal (supply channel). There is no substance in the suggestion that this is a spurious document. It, therefore, seems to me that the petition on the point of claim of right in the petitioners fails.

As to the point that this is a civil dispute, the point is not taken in the ground of revision to this Court and it should have been urged below. The case has been carried to two Criminal Courts, and the acts done by the accused do, in my opinion, amount to an offence under the Indian Penal Code. I am, therefore, unable to say at this stage that the case is one for the Civil Court alone.

As to the legal point, I think the accused here must be taken to have intended wrongful loss, they not only dammed up the channel A2—A5 but opened a diverting channel. In Ramakrishna Chetti v. Palaniyandi Kudambar (1), a case of this sort, it was held that the intention is properly held to be such, i. e., wrongful when the accused takes it (the water) without any sort of right.

This is further supported by the case reported as Queen-Empress v. Jagannath Bhikaji Bhave (2).

I am, therefore, unable to find any ground for interference in the present case, and the criminal revision case must be dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 262
—Summary trial of warrant cases—Procedure.

In summary trials under Chapter XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the procedure prescribed for warrant cases should be followed in warrant cases, and in such a case the accused is entitled to have process issued for compelling the attendance of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Bardwan.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Birlhusan Dutt, for the Petitioner:—
This is a reference under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sessions Judge of Bardwan. He has recommended the setting aside of the conviction of the petitioners under sections 457, 380 of the Indian Penal Code. The petitioner was tried summarily on the said charges. The evidence for the prosecution was given but the petitioner did not immediately thereafter cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution. My point is, the Magistrate has overlooked the provisions of section 262, Criminal Procedure Code. Under that section a Magistrate is bound in a summary trial, to follow the procedure laid down for warrant cases if the case under trial be a warrant case. I am entitled to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses when I have entered my defence. I applied for processes for attendance of the prosecution witnesses. But this was refused and I was convicted. I submit this a clear violation of the provisions of section 262, Criminal Procedure Code. A fresh trial should be held before a different Magistrate as I do not expect a fair trial from the same Magistrate.

No one appeared for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Bardwan recommending that the conviction of the accused under section 457 read with section 380, Indian Penal Code, and the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for three months passed upon him be set aside on the ground that he was not allowed to summon witnesses for the prosecution to cross-examine them.

It appears that the witnesses for the prosecution were not cross-examined before the petitioner was called upon to enter upon his defence; he was tried summarily. But in trials under Chapter XXII, the procedure prescribed for warrant cases shall be followed in warrant cases. This was a warrant case. The accused, therefore, was entitled to have process issued for compelling the attendance of witnesses for the prosecution for cross-examination and he applied accordingly to the trying Magistrate. The application was refused and the accused convicted and sentenced as stated above.

The conviction and sentence passed upon him are accordingly set aside and we direct that the case be re-tried by some Magistrate other than the Magistrate who tried him.

The accused will continue on the same bail as before.

Sardar Kharak Singh, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners in this case, who are own brothers, have been convicted of being in possession of illicitly manufactured liquor and have been sentenced each to one year's rigorous imprisonment. I admitted Mehr Singh to bail as I considered that the decision could not be upheld as against him. Briefly, all the facts proved against him are that two bottles of illicit liquor were found in a house occupied by himself and his elder brother and that he pointed out some broken pieces of a pitcher in the field of another person. The latter point is of no importance, and, as to the former, the possession was presumably that of his brother against whom there is other evidence that he had been concerned in the manufacture. I accept the petition of Mehr Singh and order his acquittal.

As for Mehr Singh, the evidence against him is clear and was not criticised before me. He is, however, only 26 years of age and this is his first offence. He has already undergone some seven months' imprisonment and I reduce his sentence to the amount already undergone.

Where a substantive charge is made against a person, and that charge breaks down, it is improper for the Court to make use of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code and bind him over in security. [p. 673, col. 1.]

The mere fact that a person is suspected of particular crimes is no justification for demanding security from him. Evidence that a person had been suspected and named in a large number of cases extending over a considerable interval may, however, be very useful corroboration of general evidence of bad reputation. [p. 673, col. 2.]

Conversely, in a doubtful case the fact that a person has never been suspected of any offence may weaken the general evidence of reputation which is given against him. [p. 673, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Hardoi, dated the 7th June 1920, confirming the order of the Honorary Magistrate, First Class, Bilgram dated the 20th May 1920.

Mr. Mohammad Yusuf Ali, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision by two persons, Raja Ram and Jodha Singh, who have been bound over under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, by the order of a Magistrate of the First Class. An appeal was preferred from this order under section 406 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the District Magistrate who upheld it. Under such circumstances this Court will not ordinarily interfere, but the present case involves an important question of principle. That principle is, that Courts must not make use of section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, in order to secure the conviction of persons against whom a substantive charge has been made, but has broken down. A dacoity occurred in the village of Mundia Khera in February last. In that dacoity the applicants were suspected of being concerned & fact, they were named in a confession made by one of the accused, named Asharfi. They were arrested on that charge, but the Police, believing that the evidence against them was insufficient to secure a conviction, sent them up under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, instead. It is admitted that, prior to the occurrence of that dacoity, the Police had nothing against them. They were not under surveillance; no history sheet had been prepared of either of them; they had never been named in any report of crime as persons likely to have been concerned.

It is sometimes said that evidence that persons had been suspected of particular offences is no evidence of bad livelihood in cases under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. This is true in this sense that no one could be bound over under that section merely because he had been suspected of particular crimes. Evidence that a person had been suspected and named in a large number of cases extending over a considerable interval may, however, be very useful corroboration of general evidence of bad reputation. A person known or reputed to be a habitual thief is a person on whom suspicion is likely to fall when thefts are found to be occurring. Conversely, in a doubtful case the fact that a person has never been suspected of any offence may weaken the general evidence of reputation which is given against him.

This being the state of facts, it was most important to ascertain whether the alleged bad reputation of the accused had existed before they were mentioned in connection with the dacoity case. I have examined the whole of the prosecution evidence. It is quite clear from a reading of the depositions that the fact of the accused having been mentioned in that case bulked largely in the minds of the witnesses, and it was certainly in some cases largely responsible for the evidence which they gave. The fact has also influenced the minds of both the Magistrates who have dealt with the case. The learned District Magistrate, in summing up his reasons for upholding the case of Raja Ram, gives it the first place. He says:—

"There is, in my opinion, sufficient evidence on the record to warrant the order of the Honorary Magistrate demanding sureties in this case. The villagers of their own and neighbouring villages are evidently fully convinced that the gang among whom Raja Ram was convicted (there seems to be some misprint here) were actually concerned in the February dacoity at Mundia Khara and there is further evidence of previous bad character on the part of the appellant."

SAJAN LALL V. EMPEROR.

I have examined the evidence particularly with a view to ascertaining how far back this evidence of previous bad character goes. Not more than three or four of the witnesses (apart from the Police Officers) were questioned on the subject at all. Not more than one or two of them have said that they had heard anything against these accused before the dacoity case, and at least two of them distinctly say that they had never heard anything prior to that time. One of the Police Officers examined declared that he had known Jodha Singh's reputation for a long time, but the fact that he had never made any report about him, or suggested the preparation of a history-sheet, or known any case in which the accused was suspected or his house searched, entirely discredits his testimony. It is safe to say that, but for the accused having been named by Ashraf Lal in the dacoity case, these proceedings would never have been thought of.

I accept the application for revision and set aside the orders of the Court below. The accused, if in Jail, will be released. The security, if furnished, will be discharged.

Application accepted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 471—Forged document tendered to Police during investigation, whether amounts to "use" of forged document.

Where a person during the course of a Police Investigation tenders a forged document to the Investigating Officer, and thereby causes that officer to do something which he would otherwise not Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Purneah, dated the 28th September 1920, dismissing the appeal of the accused against his conviction and sentence by the Magistrate, First Class, Araria, dated the 31st July 1920.

FACTS appear fully from the judgment of Mullick, J. and from 55 Ind. Cas. 288.

Babu Gour Chandra Pal and Mr. Hasan Imam, for the Petitioner, after arguing on facts submitted that there is no 'User' within the meaning of section 471, Indian Penal Code—relies upon Asimuddi v. Emperor (1).

Mr. Manohar Lal (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The facts upon which the petitioner has been convicted of an offence under section 471, Indian Penal Code, are as follows: Mr. P. O. Lall was the proprietor of an estate within which one Janardan Prasad held a patni tenure. He brought the patni to sale for arrears of rent and purchased it himself on 15th March 1915 delivery of possession being taken the following October. When he attempted to take possession of certain lands in Mouzah Mohania, which lies within the patni, he was resisted by the petitioner, Sajan Lall, who claimed that he had a raiya interest therein which he had obtained from the patnidar, Janardan Prasad. The Zemindar then informed the Police that the dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace and asked that action should be taken with a view to restraining the opposite party.

The Police held an investigation, and, in the course of that investigation, the petitioner filed a taslimnama alleged to have been executed by the patnidar, Janardan Prasad, in his favour in the year 1912 giving him a raiya settlement for the term of one year. The Police Officer sent this document, together with his report, to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate requesting that proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be taken against the Zemindar on the one side and Janardan Prasad, the petitioner,

SAJAN LALL v. EMPEROR.

Sajan Lall, and one other person who claimed as an under raiyat on the other.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate thereupon called upon both parties to prove their respective claims to possession, but when the case came to trial, the second party, that is to say, the petitioner's party, filed a petition withdrawing from the case and agreeing that the first party should be confirmed in possession.

After this, at the request of the first party, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate appears to have passed an order impounding the taslimnama and commenced an enquiry into its genuineness.

This took place in 1918. In 1919 a complaint was lodged before the Magistrate against the petitioner charging him with an offence under section 471, Indian Penal Code, in regard to the taslimnama. It was alleged that the petitioner, knowing that the document was a forged document, had used it dishonestly in the Police investigation.

It is necessary to explain that the delay in lodging the complaint was due to certain proceedings which took place in 1918 and 1919. It appears that the first party thought that their remedy was to ask for sanction to prosecute the petitioner; but after they had obtained sanction from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, it was held by the High Court that no sanction was necessary and that the proper course was by complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Upon the complaint being filed, the petitioner was put upon his trial and he was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year. He appealed to the Sessions Judge without success, and he now applies to us to exercise our powers of revision in his favour.

The learned Sessions Judge in appeal finds that the taslimnama is a forgery and that it was filed before the Police Officer in order to establish the possession of the petitioner in the lands in dispute. It is quite clear that this finding cannot be attacked; but it is urged that the petitioner did not use a forged document within the meaning of section 471, Indian Penal Code. Now, although the petitioner may not have based a claim to present possession upon the document, it was clearly his intention by producing the document to make the Sub-Inspector believe that he was in possession and that he had in 1912 acquired a good title to the land. If the Investigating Officer had accepted the petitioner's version he would probably have asked the Magistrate to bind down the first party. The essential point is, whether the petitioner's intention was to get some advantage by filing the document which he would not have got if he had not filed it. Having regard to the circumstances, it was clearly his intention to make the Sub-Inspector believe that the document was evidence of present possession. Whether the petitioner's claim was well-founded and whether he had good grounds for hoping that he would succeed in deceiving the Sub-Inspector is immaterial. It is sufficient if the petitioner thought that the document would be useful to him, and that he would thereby get the Sub-Inspector to do something which he would not otherwise have done.

It is next urged that, even if the petitioner did file the document in order to gain some advantage, he did not in the first instance do so voluntarily. It is suggested that the Sub-Inspector practically compelled him to produce the document by asking both parties to prove their respective claims. There is no evidence that there was any compulsion and it was open to the petitioner, if he had any suspicion regarding the genuineness of the document, not to produce it before the Police Officer. He appears to have realised the position when the matter came before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. It is significant that, immediately the case came on for hearing, the petitioner should have hastened to give up his claim and agreed to a declaration in favour of the first party.

Some argument was addressed to us as to the admissibility of a former statement made by the petitioner in a Criminal Court some years previously which was used in the present trial for the purpose of proving that the taslimnama was a forgery; but this objection was not pressed, and it is quite clear that the statement made by the petitioner on that occasion was legally admissible at his trial in the present case.

There is, finally, the question of sentence. Having regard to the fact that the petitioner may have acted under the influence of Jagan, his master, and that he withdrew his claim as soon as the case came before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, we think that a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment will meet the ends of justice in this case.

LACHHMI NARAIN v. EMPEROR.

The conviction is maintained and the sentence is reduced accordingly.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree.

Sentence reduced.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 106—
Security, power of Court of Appeal or Revision to demand, in case tried by Second or Third Class Magistrate.*

The fact that a case is tried by a Second or Third Class Magistrate, does not deprive a Court of Appeal or Revision of the power to demand security under section 106, of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Partabgarh, dated the 12th July 1920, modifying the order of the Magistrate, Second Class, Partabgarh, dated the 28th June 1920.

Mr. O. F. S. Oehme, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision arises out of a case in which four persons waylaid the complainant on his way back from Court and attacked him with lathis and a hatchet inflicting grievous hurt. The first Court convicted one of them under section 325 and the remainder under section 323, Indian Penal Code. The Appellate Court altered the conviction under section 325 to one under section 323 and, in addition, required the applicants to furnish security under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code. The only substantial points taken in revision are directed against the illegality of this order. It is urged, first, that the lower Appellate Court has not come to a distinct finding that the offence involved a breach of the peace; and secondly, that as the case was originally tried by a Second Class Magistrate who could not have acted under section 106, therefore, the Appellate Court had no power to do so. As to the first point, there appears to me no doubt that the offence under section 323, in the circumstances in which it was committed in this case, did involve the breach of the peace. It was on the second point that I admitted the revision, on the strength of a ruling in Baij Nath v. Emperor (1) which supported the applicants. I find, however, that that decision has been overruled by a later Bench decision in Bharat Singh v. Emperor (2). In this latter case this Court has held that there is nothing in the language of section 106 which either suggests or implies that the powers of the Appellate Court or revisional authority should be controlled by those of the original Court. The result is that, even when the case was tried by a Magistrate of the Second or Third Class, a Court of Appeal or Revision has power to require security under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code. I accordingly reject the application.

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, First Class, with powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Ludhiana, dated the 31st August 1920.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Appellants.

Kanwar Dalip Singh and Sheikh Niaz Ali, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Harnama, Waryama and Jodha have been found guilty of having caused the death of one Jaimal Singh and, under section 304 (II), Indian Penal Code, have been sentenced as follows:—Harnama to seven years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement, Waryama and Jodha to five years' rigorous imprisonment each including three months' solitary confinement. They have preferred this appeal and on their behalf I have heard Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, while the Crown has been represented by Mr. Dalip Singh.

The facts of the case are given in detail in the judgment of the Court below. Briefly stated, the story is that a singing jalsa had been going on at the village from the 14th to the 16th March 1920. On the evening of the 16th March Jaimal Singh, deceased, went to where the singing was going on after sunset with a lamp in one hand and a stick in the other. He is said to have been in a state of intoxication. He gave a rupee to the singers and then is said to have called out that anybody who spoke again would be the brother-in-law of a tailless bull. The three appellants are admittedly on very bad terms with the family of Jaimal Singh, notably with Harnam Singh (P. W. No. 11), an uncle of Jaimal Singh. It is said that they were present at this jalsa and on hearing this remark made by Jaimal Singh abused him. Jaimal Singh returned the abuse and an altercation ensued which ended in the three appellants attacking Jaimal Singh with lathis striking him on the head and knocking him down.

This story is deposed to by Peshawara Singh (P. W. No. 1) who is a cousin of the deceased and.....who is supported in his statement by Battan Singh (P. W. No. 8), a second cousin of the deceased, and Bachittar Singh (P. W. No. 15) who is also a collateral of the deceased. The statements of Hamir Singh (P. W. No. 5) and Bhola Singh (P. W. No. 14) are also corroborative of Peshawara Singh's story. That Harnam Singh (P. W. No. 11) was on very bad terms with the appellants is beyond question, and undoubtedly the existence of this enmity necessitates a careful scrutiny of the evidence of the witnesses who are all related to the deceased, more especially as no report was made till the morning of the 18th. This delay is due to the fact that Harnam Singh himself was not in the village when the occurrence took place and did not return till the 17th. The deceased was lying in an unconscious state in Peshawara Singh's house and it was only on the morning of the 18th when it was thought that the matter was a serious one that it was considered expedient to make a report of the occurrence. The Lambardars of the village knew what had happened and they are to blame for not having made a report.

I have been taken through all the evidence on the record by Mr. Ram Chand, who has commented on the statements made by the witnesses, and has pointed out the fact that some of the prosecution witnesses have resiled from their statements and say that they know nothing about the occurrence. It seems to me clear that the whole of this unfortunate occurrence is due to the fact that both the appellants and the deceased were in a state of intoxication. At the same time, intoxication by itself is not an excuse in a case of this kind, although it may to some extent be taken into consideration in mitigation of the offence. After a careful consideration of all the evidence for the prosecution I have no doubt that the story told is substantially correct. There seems no doubt that Jaimal Singh went to where the jalsa was going on flushed with drink and that he said the words attributed to him. I equally have no doubt that the three appellants, being also flashed with drink, resented Jaimal Singh's remarks and abused him. Jaimal Singh returned the abuse and then the three appellants attacked him. Two of the appellants have also received slight injuries while Jaimal Singh's injury was chiefly on the head. According to the evidence, Harnama was the first one to strike the deceased on the head. There are, however, three distinct injuries described by the medical evidence on Jaimal Singh's head and when three persons set to work to beat a fourth with sticks the blows being directed at the head of that fourth, it seems to me that they must be fixed with the knowledge that they were likely to cause death. I have no doubt in my mind that the injuries to Jaimal Singh were caused by these three persons. Mr. Ram Chand took me partly through the evidence for the defence which, however, amounts to nothing. A large number of witnesses have come forward who profess to have been present at the jalsa and have witnessed the attack. They, however, say that they did not see the three appellants there. Individually, they all stood on one side, and it is said that the entire assembly fell on to Jaimal Singh causing him injuries from which he died, although not a single one of the witnesses is able to say who it was who joined in the attack.

It was next contended by Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda that, inasmuch as it was difficult to say which of the three appellants struck the blow which caused death, the conviction under section 304, Indian Penal Code, could not be sustained, and that at the most the offence committed by his clients fell within the purview of section 325, Indian Penal Code. In support of his contention he drew my attention to Agra v. Emperor (1), in which Emperor v. Bhola Singh (2) was followed. The Allahabad ruling proceeded on Queen-Empress v. Luma Baidya (3). Now, in these decisions it appears that only one blow was struck on the head and this to my mind very materially distinguishes these cases from the present one. The evidence in this case is to the effect that

Harnam Singh struck the first blow on the deceased's head and that the other appellants then followed their companion and struck the deceased on the head as well as on the arms and back and that it was not till 2 or 3 blows had been struck on the deceased's head that he fell. It is also in evidence that all the three appellants continued belabouring the deceased after he had fallen. According to the medical evidence, the skull was so extensively fractured that, in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon, P. W. No 13, at least two blows caused the injuries to the skull. As has been said above, when three persons set upon a fourth and belabour that fourth, all three inflicting injuries on the head of that fourth, they should, I think, be fixed with the knowledge that death would be a likely result of their action. In these circumstances, it seems to me that section 304, Indian Penal Code, applies in the case of all the appellants. In any event, I am unable to see that the offence could be one less than that of grievous hurt, and, having regard to all the circumstances, so far as the injuries themselves are concerned, there would be no occasion to interfere with the sentences inflicted. Before, however, definitely deciding this question I think it necessary to refer to another point raised by the learned Vakil for the appellants. It appears that on the close of the case for the prosecution, Counsel for the appellants stated that he wished to file in written statements on behalf of his clients. Time was accorded him for that purpose and after the written statements had been filed each of the appellants was asked whether he had anything further to say and replied in the negative, saying that he rested content with what he had said in his written statement. Mr. Ram Chand has contended that this was not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, and that, it being incumbent on the Magistrate to examine each of the appellants on the close of the case for the prosecution, the whole trial was vitiated and that a re-trial should be ordered. In support of his contention he drew my attention to King-Emperor v. Sterling (4), Deputy Legal Remembrancer, Lehar and Orissa v. Matukdhari

BARKAU SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Singh (5) and Emperor v. Harichandra Talcherkar (6). I do not consider it necessary to discuss these rulings as, in my opinion, section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, is quite clear and clearly lays down that it is the duty of the Magistrate to examine a person being tried by him at the close of the case for the prosecution in order that the person under trial may be in a position to explain away the evidence against him. A written statement of defense cannot, I think, be allowed to take the place of an examination of the accused person, and in this view I am supported by Emperor v. Ansuiya (7). In the present case, however, the written statement filed by the appellants was not allowed to take the place of an examination under section 342, but each of the appellants was questioned as to whether he had anything farther to say. Although it would have been better for the Magistrate to have put definite questions to the appellants, I am unable to hold that the procedure actually adopted in this case was so illegal as to vitiate the whole trial.

Reverting now to the question of sentences. No doubt the offence committed by the appellants was a serious one, nevertheless it seems to me that the deceased brought the trouble on himself by his own actions. In a state of intoxication he used language which roused the anger of the appellants and led them to abuse him; he returned the abuse and the result above detailed followed. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the sentences are somewhat harsh. I am unable to see that the guilt of Harnam Singh is in any way greater than that of his companions, as, in my opinion, all three together assaulted the deceased.

I accordingly reduce the sentences of all the appellants to three years' rigorous imprisonment, including three months' solitary confinement.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated the 27th February 1920.

The Hon'ble Pandit Jagat Narain, Pandit Tej Narain and Babu Har Narain Das, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

LINDSAY, J. C.—This appeal has arisen out of a trial which was held in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Hardoi in which fifty accused persons were charged with riot and murder said to have been committed on the 19th of October 1919, in a village called Karimnagar, in the Hardoi district.

Thirteen of the persons who were tried in the Court below were acquitted. Thirty-seven were convicted and we have to deal in this case with the appeals of these thirty-seven persons. One of them, Barkau Singh, has been found guilty of rioting and of murder and has been sentenced to death. The other appellants have been found guilty both on a charge of rioting (section 147, Indian Penal Code) and on a charge of culpable homicide (section 304 of the Indian Penal Code).

The history of the case as represented in the prosecution evidence is as follows. One Muza Ahmad Shah who was put on his trial in the Court below, but who was acquitted, is the superior proprietor of Karimnagar. A considerable area of land in this village is held by the members of a Thakur family in under-proprietary right. There is ample evidence on the record to show that for many years there has been constant quarrelling between these under-proprietors and the superior proprietor. We have both documentary and oral evidence to prove that the parties have been for a long time at enmity. It appears that some of these Thakur under-proprietors sold a portion of their under-proprietary rights to a brother of Mirza Ahmad Shah some time ago. Others of them made a mortgage with possession in favour of one Ram Prasad. The latter is said to have transferred his mortgagee rights by sale to the brother of Mirza Ahmad Shah and regarding this transfer there has been going on a dispute in the Revenue Courts about mutation. It would seem that, on the one hand, the Thakurs for some reason or other claimed that neither Ram Prasad nor his transferee was entitled to possession. On the other hand, the case for the transferee has been that Ram Prasad had possession of the lands and that he, too, was entitled to possession as usufructuary mortgagee. With regard to this transaction of mortgage it does not appear that the mortgagee is entitled to actual physical possession of the lands for some of them, at any rate, are cultivated by tenants. What appears is that the rent of these lands is realised by division of the produce and, therefore, the mortgagee's right would be a right to a share of the produce of the field by way of rent. It is quite clear from the evidence before us that it was the removal of the crops from some of these lands by the superior proprietor's servants which led immediately to this riot which resulted in the death of four persons.

Three of the persons who were killed in the course of the riot were Balwant Singh, Bishram Singh and Hemanahal Singh. These men belonged to the family of Thakurs which owns the under-proprietary rights just mentioned. Balwant Singh does not appear to have been residing in the village at the time of the riot. It is said that he is employed with a taluqdar in Ant, which is in the Sitapur district, but that he had come to Karimnagar on the 19th in order to remove certain cattle from the village.

The fourth who is said to have been killed was one Madho Singh. He belongs to another village and appears to have come to Karimnagar on the date in question to visit these Thakurs who live there. Although there is evidence to show that Madho Singh was actually killed in the course of the riot and that his body was seen immediately after, it is the fact that his dead body has never been recovered.

In addition to this dispute about the mortgagee rights, it is also proved that at the time this riot took place there was pending in the Criminal Courts at Hardoi a case under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in which the complainant was one Ram Din. He had applied to have Mirza Ahmad Shah, Barkau and other people connected with Mirza Ahmad Shah bound over to keep the peace. There seems to be little doubt that Ram Din was a protégé of the Thakurs. There is further evidence to show that, in the later part of 1918, there was litigation between the superior proprietor and these Thakur people about the right to plant trees and sikh grass. This case was disposed of by arbitration in the beginning of the year 1919.

Coming now to the 17th of October; it is said that on this day there was a quarrel between some of the taluqdar's people and these Thakurs in the village and that certain cattle belonging to the Thakurs were taken to the pound. This latter fact is proved by the evidence of the Pound Clerk and also by the production of certain receipts which show that cattle were taken to the pound on the 17th of October and were released on the 18th. There is further evidence, too, although the value of it is somewhat doubtful, to show that threats were issued to these Thakurs on the 17th of October which led them to send their womenfolk off to a village some little distance away. At all events, it is clear that both parties were worked up to a considerable degree of excitement by the 19th of October.

It is an admitted fact that on the afternoon of this day the taluqdar's people went to the Thakur's fields and cut down a bara crop. It was just after this that the riot took place but, as is usual in cases of this kind, the parties put forward different versions of what took place.

BARKAU SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The first information of the affair which was given to the Police is contained in a report, Exhibit 31, which is said to have been made at the Police Station about 8 o'clock on the evening of the 19th of October. This report was made by two men, Bhudhar and Bodil, who are appellants in the present case and who are servants of Mirza Ahmad Shah. It was mentioned in this report that on the 17th of October certain cattle belonging to Bismam Singh had grazed in the crops of Mirza Ahmad Shah and had been taken to the pound. The report then went on to say that, by way of revenge, the Thakurs had on the 19th brought some thirty or forty men from outlying villages to Karimnagar. It was alleged that this party had made a raid on the taluqdar's kothar, that the taluqdar's people defended themselves, and that in the course of the fight three men on the side of the Thakurs had been hurt. On the same evening it is proved that a telegram was sent from the Nimbar Railway Station by Jawahir Singh, a brother of the deceased, Balwant Singh. This telegram was sent to the Superintendent of Police at Hardoi and stated merely that Balwant had been murdered by Barkan Singh and that an attack had been made by fifty men.

On the next day, that is to say, the 20th of October, a report was made at the Police Station by the village Chaukidar, whose name is Ambar. According to the record of the report, it was made about noon but some evidence has been led for the purpose of showing that, as a matter of fact, it was not recorded till later. However, Ambar told the Police in this report that he had not been present in the village at the time the riot took place but that all the particulars he had discovered had been derived from the widow of one Zalim Brahman. So far as the report relates to what took place on the date in question it sets out that the taluqdar's people headed by Barkan Singh had gone to cut the bajra crop growing in the Thakurs' fields, and that some of the Thakurs had come out in order to prevent the crop being removed.

It was said that abuse was exchanged between the parties and that the Thakurs retreated to the door of a house belonging to Anant Bania (the map shows that Anant Bania's house is just opposite the house of Zalim's widow). It is said that at this stage Barkan exhorted his men to kill the Thakurs, and that thereupon the taluqdar's people fell upon the Thakurs and began to beat them. It was distinctly stated that Barkan himself had a lathi in his hand and was using it and the names of several other persons belonging to the taluqdar's party were mentioned. The Chaukidar added that other people in the village had witnessed what took place but were afraid to speak about what they had seen.

The Police arrived in the village on the 20th. The dead bodies of Balwant Singh and Bismam Singh were recovered. Hemanth Singh, who was in a parlous condition, was sent off to the hospital where he died a day or two later. Before his death he was able to make a statement which was recorded by a First Class Magistrate and which has been brought on the record as Exhibit 18.

The result of the Police inquiry was that the fifty men who were charged in the Court below were sent up for trial. One of the principal witnesses put forward for the prosecution was an approver, named Jagannath. This man had been named to the Police as one of the persons who had been engaged on the side of the taluqdar. It is said that he surrendered himself to the District Magistrate on the 8th of November. He made a statement, which was recorded under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, and he was afterwards given a pardon.

As might be expected the case came into Court under a different aspect from that disclosed in the preliminary reports and proceedings. The taluqdar's party have abandoned the case which was put forward in the report made by Bodil and Bhudhar. Their story is not that the Thakurs made an attack upon the taluqdar's kothar but that a fight took place at the time the taluqdar's people were removing the bajra crop from the fields to the kothar. In other words, the case which is put forward for the defence is more or less the same version which appears in the report which was made by Ambar, Chaukidar, on the strength of the information given to him by Zalim Singh's widow, Musammrat Bilasa.

BARKAN SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The Thakur party made no report except what is contained in the telegram sent by Jawahir Singh. The version which they gave in the Court below was that, on the 19th, the taluqdar's people had gone and removed the bajra crop by force. It was said that they did this without any interference on the part of the Thakurs. The Thakurs, it is said, were sitting about, close to where their family house is in the heart of the village. They were suddenly attacked by two parties of the taluqdar's people, one coming from the north and one from the south. The story is that they were completely overpowered, that they were severely beaten, that three of them were killed on the spot, and that the others received severe injuries, one of them, Hemanehal, dying a day or two afterwards in the hospital. It was further stated that the dead body of Madho Singh was dragged off and thrown into the taluqdar's ko'har. One essential part of the prosecution story was that the taluqdar himself, Mirza Ahmad Shah, was present inciting his people to kill the Thakurs. The witnesses all depose that Ahmad Shah stood on a piece of high ground and urged on his people to do the Thakurs to death.

This part of the prosecution case has been held by the Court below to be entirely false. The learned Judge in his judgment finds that Mirza Ahmad Shah was not present in the village at the time the riot took place and he describes the evidence to the contrary as being fabricated out of enmity for the purpose of getting Mirza Ahmad Shah into trouble. While rejecting the prosecution story so far as it inculpates Mirza Ahmad Shah, he has accepted it in other respects as being a substantially true account of what took place. He discarded the story put forward by the defence for the purpose of showing that there had been an altercation or fight between the parties at the time the bajra crop was being removed from the fields and he was led to the conclusion that, as a matter of fact, the Thakurs were surrounded and attacked while they were sitting in the neighbourhood of their own family house. The Judge was chiefly persuaded to this conclusion by the fact that the Thakur party were severely handled and sustained numerous injuries, while on the side of the taluqdar's party the only evidence which was available on the point showed that nothing but trifling injuries had been inflicted. In fact, the only reliable evidence on this point is the medical evidence which shows that Bodil and Bhudhar the two servants who made the report at the Thana had received some injuries of a more or less trifling character. The result of the trial has already been indicated. Thirty-seven of the accused were convicted of rioting and one of them, Barkan Singh, was convicted in addition on a charge of murder and sentenced to death. The others have been convicted in addition to the charge of rioting on a charge of culpable homicide and have each been sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment.

The learned Counsel who has appeared before us on behalf of all these appellants has not asked for the acquittal of any of the accused except two men Fateh Singh and Suleman against whom he says the evidence was insufficient. Counsel's argument has been that the version of the riot which is put forward for the prosecution was not correct, and that the true account of what took place was that which was put forward on behalf of the defence. In short, his argument has been that, in view of the state of feelings between the parties and particularly in view of what had taken place on the 17th of October, both parties were spoiling for a fight, that as soon as the taluqdar's people began to remove the bajra crop out of the fields the Thakur party made some show of resistance. A fight then took place which resulted in the defeat of the Thakur party who were inferior in numbers to their assailants. The learned Counsel has also informed us that he does not rest his case upon any right of private defence of life or property. He has conceded that even if it were possible to argue that there was such a right at the time the affray began the violence which was used by the talukdar's party was grossly in excess of the occasion and that, consequently, it would not be possible for him to argue that any acts done by his clients could be justified on the ground of self defence. The whole of the learned Counsel's argument has been directed to show that the story of a cold blooded, pre arranged attack upon the Thakurs is an invention. He has sought to prove that there was in fact a stand-up fight between the parties and he argues, therefore, that Barkau Singh ought not to be convicted of murder.

We have been referred to the evidence which was led on both sides and it is perfectly clear that neither side has given a true account of what happened on the 19th of October. We have it from the judgment of the Court below that the story for the prosecution is certainly untrue to a large extent for, as we have already mentioned, the lower Court has acquitted Mirza Ahmad Shah against whom every one of the prosecution witnesses deposed. We may further say that we are not inclined to attach much value to the statement of the approver, Jagannath. Apart from the fact that his statement was procured for the first time on the 8th of November, long after the Police were in possession of the rest of the evidence, it has been proved to us by a comparison of the statements made from time to time by this witness that he has not been consistent throughout. He has attempted to improve upon and embellish his original story and certainly no statement of his could be accepted without the strongest possible corroboration. When we come to look for corroboration of his story we have to rely upon the evidence of a number of witnesses most of whom are open to the suspicion of being partisans of the Thakurs. On the other hand, it is to be remembered that the story which is put forward on behalf of the accused in the Court below is not the story which was first presented in the Police report which was made on their behalf on the evening of the 19th of October.

The appellant's learned Counsel has asked us to accept as being the nearest approach to the truth the evidence of Musammât Bilasa, the widow of Zalim, whose name we have mentioned in an earlier portion of the judgment. She, it will be remembered, is the person from whom the Chankidar, Ambar, gathered the information which he recorded in the report made on the morning of the 20th of October. The learned Judge has disbelieved this woman's story and we have little doubt that the evidence she gave to the Court was not entirely true. In fact, some of it appears to us to be palpably false, particularly that portion of it in which she tried to exonerate Barkau Singh.

The Chankidar, Ambar, himself is a far from satisfactory witness and some of his statements appear to us to be difficult of acceptance. But we have no doubt in our minds that he is speaking the truth when he says that the details of the fight which he reported at the Thana were communicated to him by Musammât Bilasa. We are inclined to believe that this report contains the germs of truth and that, as a matter of fact, the riot which took place on the 19th of October in this village began outside the house of Musammât Bilasa. The defence would have us believe that the fight began and ended there. We are not prepared to accept this. On the other hand, the prosecution would have us believe that no fight took place at this spot. We refuse to accept this story either. We are convinced that the fight began at the house of Musammât Bilasa and that the Thakurs were driven by superior numbers back in the direction of their own house and that there in the open spaces around their house they were overpowered and beaten with the result that the four men were killed.

To begin with, this account of the affair seems to us to square best with the probabilities of the case. It is not to be doubted that the taluqdar's people had arranged to cut down the bagra crop on the 19th of October. It is also equally certain that the Thakur party had made some preparation for an encounter on that day. This fact is admitted by the learned Judge in his judgment. It seems quite certain that a number of outside friends of these Thakurs had been summoned to the village on the day in question. Of course, they pretend to have come on one or other kind of business, but it is difficult to believe that they had not been sent for in order to be ready for any emergency which might arise. For example, so far as we can see, the man Madho Singh who was killed had no business whatever in the village on that day. Similarly, one Gur Baksh, who is an outsider, does not seem to have had any occasion to visit the village. We need not discuss this matter in further detail. It is quite clear that a number of people had come in to join the Thakurs although it is also certain that the numbers of this party were inferior to those of the party collected on behalf of the taluqdar.

An examination of the map which has been exhibited in the case shows that the fields in which the bajra crop was growing are situated in the south-west extremity of the village. The map also shows that the house which is occupied by Zalim's widow, Musammam Bilasa, and opposite to which is the house known as the house of Anant Bania, is at the south-west corner of inhabited site. The family house of the Thakurs is well inside the village area to the north-east of the house of Zalim's widow and, having regard to the scale of the map, we should say that it cannot be less than a hundred-fifty yards distant. Probably, the distance is greater, for the above measurement is a measurement in a straight line. One of the principal witnesses for the prosecution was Newaz Singh. He is one of this Thakur family and was no doubt present at the time the riot took place for he received injuries. This man was asked in cross-examination if he knew the house in which Zalim's widow lived. His answer was that he did. He was also asked if he knew the house which had once been occupied by Anant Bania. His answer was that he did and he went on to say that Anant's house was "20 paces from where we were beaten." If this answer of his is to be literally accepted, it proves that the fight began close to the house occupied by Zalim's widow. We think this is an important piece of evidence which the learned Counsel for the appellants has properly laid stress on and it seems to us that the witness could not be making any mistake about the distance for, as we have said, the house which is occupied by his family is at least a hundred-fifty yards away.

We think, therefore, we are right in adopting the view to which we have given expression above, namely, that an altercation began between the Thakurs and the taluqdar's party as the latter were carrying the bajra back from the fields and that some resistance having been offered by the Thakurs a fight ensued which terminated eventually close to the family-house in which the Thakurs reside. It seems to us highly improbable that the Thakur party should have allowed the bajra crop to be removed without any remonstrance, and it is in the highest degree likely that as soon as they heard that the crop was being cut they went towards the spot. Having arrived in sight of the fields they probably saw that they were inferior in numbers and had no chance of making any forcible resistance. They most probably then resorted to abuse and it was in this way the fight originated at the spot which was indicated in the first report made by Ambar, Chaukidar.

Having arrived at this conclusion, therefore, we proceed to consider what offences have been established against the various accused. Before doing so it is proper to refer shortly to the medical evidence which shows the manner in which Bisram, Balwant and Hemanchal were done to death. Bisram was an old man, aged 65. It is clear that he must have been very severely beaten. His skull was cracked and eight of his ribs were smashed in. Hemanchal was also an elderly man whose age is given as 55. He was of poor physique. The post-mortem evidence described him as being emaciated. He received a wound on the head and had very severe contusions on the back and two of his ribs were broken. Balwant Singh was the youngest of the men who were killed, his age being 45. He received three wounds on the head. He had a simple fracture of the left arm and a compound fracture of the right arm.

It is admitted in the judgment of the Court below that it is practically impossible to ascertain the various persons who struck each of these three men. There is a great deal of contradiction and considering the large numbers engaged in the fight it would be hopeless to expect any definite evidence on this point. In the case of the accused Barkan Singh, however, the witnesses are in agreement and say that he was the man who first attacked Balwant Singh and knocked him down. We may take it, therefore, as proved beyond all reasonable doubt that Barkan was one of the assailants of Balwant and, therefore, one of the persons immediately responsible for his death. As regards the other accused it would be impossible to say that any specific acts of violence directed against any particular person had been proved as against them. Their liability arises out of the fact that they were members of an unlawful assembly inspired by a common intention and we think that the common intention to be imputed to them, in the circumstances, was that indicated by the learned Judge of the Court below, namely, to give the Thakurs a severe beating. They were armed with lathis and consequently we may find as against them that the common intention was to cause grievous hurt. They must be taken to have known that at least they were likely to cause grievous hurt by using lathis.

Having regard, therefore, to the view we take of what took place at the time of the riot, we think it impossible to hold that Barkau is guilty of murder. There was, we believe, a fight between the parties in which the accused succeeded by reason of their superior numbers. In the course of that fight, for which no doubt the accused party had prepared, Barkau struck Balwant and is, therefore, responsible for Balwant's death. He must be found guilty not of murder but of culpable homicide. As regards the other accused the offence of which they are liable to be convicted, apart from the offence of rioting, is an offence under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code. They are guilty of this offence by the application of section 149 of the Indian Penal Code.

We have mentioned above that the learned Counsel for the appellants asked us to acquit two of the accused, namely, Fateh Singh and Suleman. The evidence against Fateh Singh consists of the statement of the approver, Jagannath, the statement of another witness, named Bandu, and the statement of Newaz Singh. The statement of the approver does not carry any weight with us. Bandu is a man who lives in a village called Jairajpur which is situated about two miles to the east of Karimnagar. This man deposed that on the morning of the 19th of October he had seen Barkau passing through his village in the direction of Karimnagar with a large body of men. He says he recognised some of these men and that one of them was Fateh Singh. This evidence would not be of any avail to the prosecution unless it were corroborated by some reliable testimony showing that Fateh Singh was afterwards seen in the riot at Karimnagar. The only evidence we have on this point is the statement of the witness Newaz Singh. It appears that after Fateh Singh's arrest he and a number of others were sent to the Jail where identification proceedings were held. Eight witnesses who professed to have been present at the riot were called in to identify one or other of these men. Only one of them, namely, Newaz Singh, picked out the accused Fateh Singh. Newaz Singh is a partisan witness and we think it would be unsafe to accept his evidence as sufficient corroboration of the statement made by the approver. There is room for doubt in his case and we give him the benefit of the doubt and acquit him.

As regards the other accused, Suleman, however, the case is much stronger. He was identified not only by Newaz Singh but also by the two other witnesses, Bhimma Arakh and Bisram Singh of Pani Kanyan. None of these men knew Suleman before and the fact that all three were able to pick him out in the Jail seems to us to be very strong proof of his being present and of his having been concerned in the riot. We hold, therefore, that Suleman is not entitled to an acquittal.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed to this extent, namely, that we find that Barkau Singh is not guilty of murder. We uphold his conviction under section 147 and the sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment which was passed upon him under that section. We acquit him of the charge of murder and find him guilty of the offence of culpable homicide, punishable under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, and for this offence we sentence him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. The sentences will run concurrently. We acquit Fateh Singh and direct that he be released. We maintain the convictions of the remaining accused appellants under section 147 and the sentences passed under that section. We alter their convictions under section 304 to convictions under section 325, read with section 149, of the Indian Penal Code and sentence each of them to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. These sentences will be concurrent with the sentence passed under section 147.

WAZIR HASAN, A. J. C.—Out of the somewhat confused mass of evidence two facts clearly emerge—

(1). Hostility between the Zemindar and the Thakur family, in particular relation to the Jagirbar fields.

(2). The two parties came into collision on the 19th of October 1919 and a fight ensued with consequences extremely disastrous to the Thakur party.

The arguments addressed to us by the learned Pleader for the appellants were mainly devoted to bringing those two points on the surface. As a result, we were asked to hold that the appellant No. 1, Barkan Singh, is not guilty of the offence of murder and that the other 30 appellants were not guilty of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The learned Counsel frankly admitted that, on the facts unquestionably established, he could not ask the Court for a judgment of acquittal in favour of any of the appellants except Fateh Singh and Suleman.

BARKAN SINGH V. EMPEROR.

The learned Judicial Commissioner has accepted the case presented before us on behalf of the appellants and has consequently altered the convictions and sentences of each of the appellants. I am in complete agreement with my learned colleague on all these points.

There is one part of the case, on which great emphasis was laid by the learned Pleader for the appellants and on that part I desire to record a few observations. In my judgment, the part attributed to the zemindar, Mirza Ahmad Shah, in the riot was the gravamen of the case for the prosecution. Every omission in the initial stages which had a tendency to exculpate the zemindar was assiduously filled up, though somewhat clumsily, by means of evidence furnishing circumstances to explain such omissions. I would refer to two prominent instances in this connection.

(1) In the evening of riot Jawahir Singh, a young member of the Thakur family, who escaped totally uninjured in the affray, managed to despatch a telegram from the Nimsar Railway Station to the Superintendent of Police at Hardoi. The telegram (Exhibit 27) is as follows:— "Balwant Singh murdered by Barkan Singh attacked 50 men." It will be noted that the telegram does not mention Mirza's name. To explain this omission one Pateshuri Prasad, a Sub-Inspector attached to the Criminal Investigation Department, was produced. The pith of his statement on this part of the case is that he had an interview with Jagannath Prasad, the telegraph clerk at Nimsar, on the 3rd November and that Jagannath Prasad had made a clean breast of his guilt of suppressio veri in transcribing and transmitting the message. Jagannath Prasad deneis all this and it is, in my opinion, a palpable patching.

(2) The second instance is this. Ambar, Chackidar of the village Karimnagar, made his first report of the riot at the Police Station Beniganj, on the 20th October. The time given on the face of the report is 12 noon. This report again does not mention the name of Mirza Ahmad Shah. The explanation for this omission is presented before the Court through the lips of Mahadeo Prasad, a constable of the Beniganj Police Station, who wrote the report. It is admitted that Ehsan Ali, the Sub-Inspector in charge of the station, was away on that day at Girdharpur where he was engaged in investigating a dacoity case. The substance of the story given by the constable is that the Chackidar had in the first instance mentioned to him the name of the zemindar amongst others but he refrained from recording the report then because of certain directions which the Sub-Inspector had given to him to the effect that no report involving the zemindar should be written without previous intimation to him, that consequently Ambar was sent to Ehsan Ali, that Ambar returned to the Thana in the evening, and that it was then that the constable addressed himself to the most important and solemn task of reducing Ambar's report into writing. It is needless to say that Ambar in his second recitation dropped the name of the zemindar because Ehsan Ali had directed him to do so. Ambar, though in a halting manner, supports this story in the main.

To my mind, this is a very serious matter. If Ehsan Ali is guilty of all that is imputed to him in this story he is liable to be dealt with according to law; but if, on the other hand, he is not, then surely Ambar and the constable should not go scot-free.

Now, Ehsan Ali was produced by the prosecution as witness No. 29. If the story set out above had any grain of truth in it one would expect that the prosecution would ask him questions on that subject at least to help the Court in coming to a right conclusion, if not to give an opportunity to him to explain his conduct. Not a single question was, however, asked. This fact alone is sufficient, in my opinion, to condemn the whole story as a tissue of lies. It may be asked,—“Why Easan Ali did not arrest Mirza?” That question was put to Easan Ali and he has answered it. He says—“I did not arrest the Mirza because the Superintendent had said verbally that he, the Mirza, should not be arrested till he had looked into the case.” Mr. Young, the Superintendent of Police, states in his evidence as follows:—“I did not give him (Easan Ali) any special order about arrest. I said I would take action about the Mirza’s arrest myself..... I arrested him...on the 28th October 1920.” This statement of Mr. Young completely justifies the inaction of Easan Ali in the matter of Mirza’s arrest.

In the same connection, there is one more element in the case which remains for me to consider and that, in my opinion, is a thread running through the entire fabric of the case for the prosecution. Evidence was led to show that on the morning of the 13th of October when all the men of the Mirza’s party were assembled in his kothar he said: “Go and out the bayra of Biseram and Balwant. If they come then kill them. Do not be afraid of the Police. I shall arrange it all.” They all accordingly go to the fields and out the bayra in one of them: Barkau then said: “The Mirza’s opponents have not come here. Let us go and ask the Mirza. If he tells us we shall go and kill them at the door of their houses.” They return to the kothar and after they had some food and drink served to them under the Mirza’s order, Barkau said to the Mirza: “We are all ready to do what you tell us.” The Mirza then said: “Go and kill Biseram and Balwant at the door of their houses.” So they go and kill three members of the Thakur’s party then and there and leave a fourth one so severely hammered that he too died a day later. While this attack was going on with full force Mirza was shouting to his men from a short distance standing on a high ground near his own kothar. Now, that part of the story reproduced by me in the foregoing narrative, which is antecedent to the attack, rests entirely upon the statement of the approver, Jagannath. Surely that is too slender a foundation to base any finding upon and the learned Sessions Judge has entirely rejected it. He has also held that “Mirza Ahmad Shah was not present at the scene of the riot even to the extent of standing at a distance and urging on his followers.” But the learned Sessions Judge does not stop there. He further finds: “In the circumstances, the evidence that has been produced is very far from convincing me that the Mirza was actually present in the village on the day when the riot took place. I do not think that his complicity is proved.” As a result of these findings, he naturally passes a judgment of acquittal in favour of Mirza Ahmad Shah. In this appeal I must accept these findings as proper and correct; but what is their effect on the whole case? In answering this question, I regret, I cannot persuade myself to come to an agreement with the learned Sessions Judge. His view of the subject may well be expressed in his own words. He says: “Very few witnesses in India tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth and the fact that part of a man’s story is false is no valid ground for discarding his whole statement.” As a broad proposition and where no grounds for discrimination exist, it may be accepted as fairly accurate. The maxim “falsus in uno falsus in omnibus” cannot be accepted as one of universal and indiscriminate application. But it is equally unsound to reject it in all cases. What then is the real test? If the falsus unio is merely a matter of unimportant detail—a fringe or embroidery to a story true in the main—it should obviously have no effect on the credibility of the testimony as a whole. But the case will, however, be different if one of the essential circumstances in the story is clearly unfounded. “The tendency of any mixture of error in testimony is to lessen the probability of the whole. This diminution is in many cases so small as not perceptibly to affect our belief. But where an essential circumstance in a story is evidently unfounded, it is to pull a stone out of an arch, the whole fabric must fall to the ground.” (Field’s Introduction to the Law of Evidence in British India.)

I am clearly of opinion that that part of the case which related to the proof of Mirza’s complicity was an essential part of the case for the prosecution, and if that was, according to the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, clearly unfounded, the whole case fell to the ground. The conviction, therefore, of the appellant No. 1 under section 302 and of the other appellants under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be upheld.

As noted above, I concur in the order passed by the learned Judicial Commissioner as regards every one of the appellants.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), ss. 2, 3—Advance for marriage expenses, whether advance for work to be done,

An advance for a workman's marriage expenses is a loan and not an advance within the meaning of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act. A payment, if it is to be regarded as an advance within the meaning of the Act, must be made in some way on account of work which the workman has contracted to perform.

Petition, under section 439 of Act V of 1898, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Jullundur, dated the 3rd November 1919, confirming that of the Honorary Magistrate, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 28th August 1919.

Mr. Badrud Din Kureshi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mohsin Shah, for Sheikh Abdul Qadir, K. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition against the dismissal of a complaint brought under Act XIII of 1859. It was admitted to a Division Bench, because there appeared to be a conflict between a recently decided case, No. 1709 of 1919, and Emperor v. Muhammad Din (1).

The facts in the present case are that the petitioner advanced a sum of Rs. 150 to the respondent for the expenses of his marriage, a condition being made that the respondent should work in the petitioner's factory until the advance was paid off by deductions of Rs. 6 per mensem from his wages. No doubt the object of the petitioner was to bind the respondent to work for him, but we do not think that it can properly be said that there was an advance of money on account of any work which the petitioner had contracted to perform. In our opinion, the payment was a loan and we do not find ourselves in accord with the contention that the test whether there was an advance within the meaning of Act XIII of 1859, or a loan, depends on the terms as to re-payment. The payment, if it is to be regarded as an advance, must have been made in some way on account of work which the workman has contracted to perform, and when it is expressly stated, as here, that it was for the expenses of his marriage, it does not appear to us to come within the meaning of the Act.

The petition is dismissed.

transfer of the mutwalliship in the wakf properties. The transferee's possession of these properties should be regarded as possession on behalf of the trustee and not adverse to him. There can really be no distinction in this respect between the office of the mutwalli and the property of the endowment. See Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (1). The plaintiff's suit cannot, therefore, be barred by limitation. Refers also to Rajah Vurmah Kunhi v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi (2) and *Radanath the purchase by the defendant No. 1 must be in good faith, otherwise Article 134 of the Limitation Act could not apply. Refers to Babu Upendralal Roy, for the Respondents.

—The contention of my learned friend that the conveyance to the defendant No. 1 was a transfer of the trusteeship and that, therefore, her possession was on behalf of, and not adverse to, the trust, is opposed to the allegations in the plaint. Nor can it be suggested seriously that the mutwalli was competent to transfer the mutwalliship in this way. The possession of the defendant
No. 1 was thus adverse to the trustee from the date of the transfer and continued to be so till the date of the present suit. The cases in *Rajah Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah
Kunhi* (2) and Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (1) have no bearing to the question in debate and the decision in *Radanath Doss v. Gisborne & effected by the Limitation Act of 1871. As regards the applicability of Article 134 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act to the facts of the present case, I would only invite your Lordships' attention to the decision in JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a of the trust. The properties in question were dedicated for religious purposes or made waqf

GIRDHARI LAL v. AHMAD MIRZA BEG.

mutwalliship descended to one Najibannissa who in February 1901 executed a conveyance of the properties in question in favour of one Sobha Khatun who is defendant-respondent No. 1 in these proceedings. The suit was instituted by the plaintiff Kazim-ud-Din, who is a descendant of one of the waqifs, in respect of the second waqfnamah on 21st April 1915 and both the Courts below held that it was barred by limitation.

Plaintiff is the appellant before us and his contention in this Court is, that the conveyance executed by Najibannissa should be regarded as merely a transfer of the trusteeship or mutwalliship and that her possession should be regarded as that of a mutwalli and, therefore, on behalf of, and not adverse to, the trustee. It is conceded, however, that Najibannissa was not competent in this way to transfer the mutwalliship; and the suggestion that from the date of her possession she acted on behalf of the trust is contrary to all the allegations in the plaint. Moreover, though in one passage in this conveyance it is stated that the transferee is to become a mutwalli in place of Najibannissa, at the same time the deed is one of absolute sale for valuable consideration of all the properties in question. The transferee's possession was adverse to Najibannissa and her successors as mutwallis ab initio and continued to be adverse from the date of the transfer until the date of suit. We have been referred on behalf of the appellant to the case reported in Rajah Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi (2) which, however, does not deal with the question of limitation; to the case reported as Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (1), which was a case regarding an hereditary officer, and also to the case decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ratanath Doss v. Gisborne & Co. (3). This last case, we may observe, is prior to the change in the law affected by the Limitation Act, IX of 1871; and, having considered the cases put before us on behalf of the respondent, namely, the cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi (8), Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das (9) and Iswar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kanai Ghose (10), we can only come to the conclusion that in this case Article 134 of Schedule I to the present Limitation Act applies and that the Courts below are right in holding that the present suit to recover on behalf of the trust the properties in question is barred by limitation. In this connection we may also refer to a case subsequent to the cases to which we have just referred decided by a Division Bench of this Court and reported as Rameshwar Malia v. Jiu Thakur (7).

In the view we take, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6—Assignment of arrears of profits claimed, whether within section.

An assignment of the right to recover a share of the profits of an estate claimed by the assignor to be due to him, is not an assignment of a mere right to sue, but is an assignment of the arrears of profits claimed to be due, and as such is not covered by section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 691, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 1st April 1919.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan and Mr. Prabhu Dyal Rastogi, for the Appellants.

Messrs. John Jackson and Haidar Husain, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT. The facts which have given rise to this appeal are somewhat regular. The Aurangabad estate belonged to Mohammad Ali Beg, who died childless on the 18th October 1908. On his death disputes arose between his sole surviving brother, Ahmad Mirza Beg, and his two nephews, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg, as to their rights in the estate. These disputes were settled by mutual agreement on the 12th July 1909. The effect of this agreement was that mutation of names was to be effected in respect of the estate in favour of all the three claimants and that, subject to the conditions laid down in the agreement, Ahmad Mirza Beg and after him, Hamid Mirza Beg and after the latter Amir Mirza Beg were to hold the office of taluqdar in succession without any power to transfer the property except in certain contingencies therein specified. The agreement contained a provision that, with the exception of the properties granted to each of those persons for their maintenance, the remainder of the estate was to be held by the taluqdar for the time-being, who was to pay the debts due by Mohammad Ali Beg from the profits thereof and that each of the three claimants would be entitled to divide the profits equally after those debts were satisfied.

In pursuance of that agreement, Ahmad Mirza Beg remained in collecting possession of the said property. The allegation of the plaintiffs, who are the assignees of Hamid Mirza Beg, is that Ahmad Mirza Beg did not pay the debts from the profits realised by him after 1910. They claim from Ahmad Mirza Beg a rendition of the accounts of the income and expenditure of the Aurangabad estate from the beginning of 1911 to the end of 1916, and further ask that a decree may be passed in their favour against Ahmad Mirza Beg for such amount as may be found due with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum. Amir Mirza Beg and the creditors of Mohammad Ali Beg have not been made parties to the suit. The Court below treated the assignment made by Hamid Mirza Beg in favour of the plaintiffs as inoperative under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and dismissed the claim.

The assignment purports to convey a right to recover Rs. 1,50,000 on account of the share of profits said to be due to Hamid Mirza Beg from Ahmad Mirza Beg. It is not an assignment of a mere right to sue but an assignment of the arrears of profits claimed by Hamid Mirza Beg to be due to him and as such it is not covered by section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. Whether any profits are actually due to Hamid Mirza Beg cannot be determined until the accounts are gone into and the rights of Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg to receive the profits before the debts of Mohammad Ali Beg are satisfied. One of the creditors has, we understand, already got a Receiver appointed to take charge of the estate left by Mohammad Ali Beg in order that the decree for dower obtained by her might be satisfied out of the usufruct (Exhibit 14). Another creditor is, it is stated, proceeding to bring the property mortgaged with him to sale in execution of his decree. If the debts due to these creditors are otherwise satisfied, there may be some balance due to Hamid Mirza Beg on account of the profits of his share for the period in question; and that balance can properly form the subject of an assignment. The position of Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg is that of co-sharers; whose rights inter se are governed by the agreement of the 12th July 1909, and a right to enforce the agreement or to recover the profits claimable thereunder is, as pointed out in Bharat Singh v. Binda Charan (1), a necessary incident of such co-sharership. Whether the plaintiffs can recover the profits so long as the debts remain unpaid cannot be properly determined, till Amir Mirza Beg, the remaining party to the agreement, is impleaded and the accounts are taken.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit remanded to the Court below with a direction to reinstate it under its original number and to dispose of it, after making Amir Mirza Beg a party to the suit and making such amendments as may be consequential thereto, in the manner required by law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the event.

A pre-emptor does not lose his right if he joins with him a person who is entitled equally with himself to pre-empt, but who during the litigation, whether in the first Court or in the Appellate Court, gives up either gratuitously or for a consideration his right to pre-empt. In such a case the remaining plaintiff is entitled to carry on his claim alone. [p. 693, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Gujranwala, at Lahore, dated the 16th May 1920, varying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 17th June 1919.

Lala Ganga Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Badr ud-Din Kureshi, for the Plaintiff-Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case four plaintiffs jointly sued to pre-empt, alleging relationship to the vendee. The first Court held that they had proved relationship and gave them jointly a decree for possession by pre-emption on condition of payment of Rs. 1,100 within two months. The vendee appealed to the District Judge, and, while the appeal was pending, the vendee compromised with three of the appellants who withdrew their claim. The remaining plaintiff refused to compromise, so the appeal was heard on the merits. The learned District Judge noted in his judgment that the best evidence of relationship is generally to be found in the Revenue Records but that there is force in the contention that it is impossible to produce these records as they had been destroyed in the disturbances of April 1919. The District Judge holds that the evidence as to relationship was as good as could be expected in the circumstances and that as there was no rebuttal, the relationship was sufficiently established. The District Judge, however, held that the decree could only be affirmed so far as the share of Qaim Din was concerned. The result apparently is that Qaim Din is to get one-fourth only of the land on payment of one fourth of Rs. 1,100. The vendee appeals to this Court urging that the relationship has not been proved by any legal evidence and that when three of the plaintiffs had given up their claim, the claim of the fourth plaintiff should also have been dismissed, the four plaintiffs having sued jointly Qaim Din, plaintiff, has filed cross-objections, urging that he should get a full decree.

As regards the relationship, I note that there is no allegation in the grounds of appeal to this Court that the Revenue Records have not been destroyed. Counsel urges that there must be papers with the Patwari. No doubt, there probably are some papers with the Patwari, but it by no means follows that these papers would be sufficient to prove or disprove the alleged relationship. If, as a matter of fact, such papers could disprove the alleged relationship, I do not see why the defendant should not produce them. On the other hand, if they are sufficient to prove the alleged relationship, I take it that the plaintiffs would gladly have produced them. The probability then seems to be that any papers in the possession of the Patwari would be insufficient to decide the question one way or the other. Two witnesses produced by the plaintiffs and one produced by the defendant depose that the plaintiffs are collaterals of the vendor, though they do not profess to be able to give any details. A Mirasi has also been produced who puts forward a book in which the pedigree tree is given, showing Qaim Din and the other plaintiffs as being all collaterals of the vendors. Counsel urges that all this evidence is legally inadmissible. He refers to section 50 of the Evidence Act and also urges that the Mirasi being illiterate cannot read the book himself and further is unable to say who made the entries. The witnesses, however, do not merely give their opinion but profess to state their knowledge that the plaintiffs are collaterals of the vendor, and I do not think that section 50 of the Evidence Act is relevant to the present case. The evidence is no doubt scanty, but as a Court of second appeal, I cannot upset a finding of fact merely because of the scantiness of the evidence. The finding as to relationship will, therefore, stand.

DINESH CHANDRA SHAHA v. SAFER ALI MANDAL.

The remaining question is as to the effect on the suit of the withdrawal of their claim by three out of the four plaintiffs during the pendency of the appeal in the District Court. At the first hearing of this appeal I had to adjourn as appellant's Counsel had had no notice of the cross-objections. I have to-day heard him, and he urges that Quim Din can only execute the decree for his share, and that, as regards the buying out of the other three plaintiffs, the matter should be regarded as fresh sales with respect to which Quim Din can, if he likes, bring a fresh suit. I do not agree. The rulings of this Court (cited on Ellis's Law of Pre-emption, Third Edition, page 190) are that the right of a plaintiff-pre-emptor, is not lost if in a suit to enforce his rights he joins with him a stranger. Still less does he lose his rights, in my opinion, if he joins with him a person who is entitled equally with himself to pre-empt, but who during the litigation, whether in the first Court or in the Appellate Court, gives up either gratuitously or for a consideration his right to pre-empt. In such a case I consider the remaining plaintiff is entitled to carry on his claim alone.

I dismiss the appeal, and, accepting the cross-objections, I give Quim Din a decree for possession by pre-emption of all the land in suit on condition of payment of Rs. 1,100; this sum, less costs in all Courts and less any sum already paid in by Quim Din and still in deposit, to be paid into the first Court on or before 24th February 1921, or, in default this appeal will stand as accepted and the suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout.

A mere finding that the rate of interest in a mortgage-bond is excessive is not sufficient reason for refusing the plaintiff interest at the rate embodied in the contract. [p. 694, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babus Manindranath Banerjee and Narain Chandra Kar), for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.—There has been no finding that there was any undue influence in getting the other side to agree to a higher rate of interest. The learned Judge says that the interest was excessive and so unconscionable. I submit that that is not the law. The Courts cannot protect people who enter into bargains and contracts with eyes wide open. There is absolutely no ground for interference. There is no question of Court's discretion, it is the contract that is to be taken into consideration. Khagaram Das v. Ram Sankar Das Pramanik (1), Abdul Majid v. Ksheroke Chandra Lal (2), Chaliaphro v. Banga Behary Sen (3), Gopeswar Saha v. Jidab Chandra (4) are bad law now. I submit the transaction not penal. Refers to *Bejoy Kumar Adhar v. SANTHANATHAMMAL v. ISAKI SUPPAN ASARI.

Babu Dinesh Ohandra Roy, for the Respondent.—The law says that Courts should not grant relief if the rate of interest is hard and unconscionable. The learned Judge has found that the rate of interest is penal. Refers to Krishna Oharan Barman v. Sanat Kumar Das (6). In second appeal, we are bound by the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. The Courts below concurrently find that the stipulation for payment of interest is penal. Refers to section 74, Indian Contract Act, and also to Illustration (d) under that section.

Dr. D. N. Mitter was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

NEWBOULD, J.—In this case the same point arises as arose in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2281 of 1918, which we have just decided. This is a suit on a mortgage-bond in which the plaintiffs have been granted a decree at a rate of interest less than the contractual rate because the Courts have held that rate to be excessive. In support of the decision of the lower Courts the learned Pleader for the respondents relied on the decision of a Bench of this Court in Krishna Oharan Barman v. Sanat Kumar Das (6). But since that decision there have been two decisions of the Privy Council in the cases of Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (7) and Balla Mal v. Akad Shah (8) and there has also been a decision of this Court in Bejoy Kumar Addya v. Satish Ohandra Ghose (5). Having regard to these decisions, we think that a mere finding that the rate of interest in the bond is excessive is not sufficient reason for refusing the plaintiffs a decree at the rate of interest embodied in the contract. We accordingly decree this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and grant the plaintiffs a decree for the full amount of their claim with costs in all the Courts.

BUCKLAND, J.—I concur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. VII, rr. 11, 13—Rejection of plaint—Finding on question of law or fact given after a full trial on merits—Subsequent suit for same subject-matter on same cause of action—Res judicata.

Where a Court passes an order rejecting a plaint after a full trial on the merits and recording a finding adversely to the plaintiff, a subsequent suit for the same subject-matter and based on the same cause of action will be barred as res judicata. [p. 696, col. 1.]

Under a razinama P. and D. had to pay in equal shares maintenance to M. annually P. paid the whole of the maintenance for two years and brought a suit to recover from D his share. The Appellate Court held that as the razinama did not contain any term giving P the right to sue D for contribution when the latter failed to pay his share, P had no legal right to recover and rejected the plaint as disclosing no cause of action. P. then brought the present suit on the same cause of action and for the same subject-matter:

Held, that the finding in the previous suit operated as res judicata to bar the present suit. [p. 696, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 294 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 168 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Appellants.—The order of the Appellate Court in the prior suit only purported to reject the plaint. That will not bar the institution of a first suit under Order VI, rule 13. Whatever may be the nature of the enquiry the final order is what has to be considered.

Messrs. P. N. Martandam and E. S. Ohithambaram, for the Respondents.—The order is not properly worded, but in effect it is a decree dismissing the suit on the merits. There has been an elaborate enquiry and a finding was also recorded that plaintiff was not entitled to contribution. That finding effectively operates as res judicata and bars a second suit. Under Order VII, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, the rejection of a plaint on grounds mentioned in Order VII, rule 11, shall not of its own force bar a second suit. What has to be considered is not merely the form but the substance of the order in the prior suit.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The plaintiffs and the defendants were bound under a razinama to pay in equal shares two kottaks of paddy as maintenance to the second defendant. In default the second defendant was entitled to take possession of a certain land which had then come to belong the plaintiffs alone though it had at a still earlier period belonged to the plaintiffs and first defendant jointly. The plaintiffs, in order to protect their interest in the land which was in danger of being taken out of their possession if the maintenance due to the second defendant was not paid in full, paid the whole of the maintenance due to the second defendant for the years 1914 and 1915 and then brought the suit (Original Suit No. 9 of 1916) for recovery of half of the amount they paid from the first defendant. That suit was decreed in the Court of first instance but the Appellate Court, on the 25th January 1917, pronounced the judgment, Exhibit H, in which it held that the plaintiffs had no legal right to recover the one-half from the first defendant because the razinama finally and solely determined the rights of the parties and the razinama did not contain a term giving the right to the plaintiffs to sue the defendant for contribution when the first defendant did not pay his half of the maintenance to the second defendant. Having pronounced such a judgment the decretal portion of that judgment ought to have been worded as one dismissing the suit. But the Appellate Court said in that portion of the judgment: "The appeal is allowed and the plaint rejected as disclosing no cause of action." On such a judgment either a decree dismissing the suit or a formal order rejecting the plaint (which order will have the force of a decree according to the definition of 'decree' in section 2 (2), Civil Procedure Code) ought to have been and must be presumed to have been made. The plaintiffs had the right to prefer an appeal from such a decree or such an order (if an order was passed and not a decree). Instead of doing so, they presented the plaint in the present suit on the 11th April 1917 in which the principal prayer was the same demand for contribution from the first defendant of half the maintenance allowance paid by the plaintiffs for the years 1914 and 1915 for the second defendant.

In fact, the subject-matter of the two suits may be taken as identical. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit as barred by res judicata. Mr. Muthiah Mudaliar for the plaintiffs (appellants) contends, on the strength of the language of Order VII, rule 13, that the rejection of the plaint by the lower Appellate Court in the former suit does not preclude the plaintiffs from bringing a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action and that implies that the present suit is not barred by res judicata. Order VII, rule 13, is carefully worded and says that "the rejection of the plaint on any of the grounds mentioned in Order VII, rule 11 shall not of its own force preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint." Order VII, rule 11, mentions four grounds on which the Court is bound to reject the plaint. Two of them, namely, clauses (b) and (c) do not relate to the merits of the claim. Clause (a) is the case where the plaint does not disclose a cause of action and clause (d) is where the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any law. Clause (d) evidently includes the case of a suit being barred by limitation. The prevailing practice is, if summons has been issued to the defendant and an issue has been settled on a question of limitation, to dismiss the suit if it is found to be barred by limitation and not merely to reject the plaint. The plaint is rejected if it is found to be barred by limitation only in cases where the case itself discovers that it is barred by limitation before filing and registering it under Order IV, rule 2. In such a case, the office brings the matter to the notice of the Judge, and if the Judge agrees with the ministerial officer he passes orders under Order VII, rule 11 (d), rejecting it. Even if it is held that the rejection of the plaint can be made after it is accepted and registered not only in cases falling under clauses (b) and (c) of Order VII, rule 11, (which are intended to protect the Government Revenue from Court-fees) but even when substantial questions of law affecting the rights of the parties in clauses (a) and (d) — may not only after the plaint is registered as a suit but even after issues are settled and parties are heard on such issue. I do not think it can be argued that the decision on any point so heard and determined is not res judicata under section 11 and that the failure of the suit by the rejection of the plaint in consequence of findings on material questions of law is not a final disposal of the suit falling within the doctrine of res judicata. In this case there was a finding in the former suit that the plaintiffs on the construction of the razinamah between the parties had no right to sue the defendant for one half of the maintenance amount which the plaintiffs might have paid to the second defendant to protect their interests in the land above referred to. Whether that finding is a finding on a question of fact or law, it is unnecessary to express a final opinion on, for the purpose of deciding this second appeal. But on that finding there was based the decision which disposed of the subject-matter of that suit, namely, the claim for half the amount paid for the maintenance to the second defendant for the years 1914 and 1915. The present suit is for the same subject-matter as in the former suit and the finding is, therefore, res judicata, namely, that the plaintiffs have no right to recover that subject-matter from the first defendant. The second appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Separation of one member—Presumption—Re-union—Burden of proof.

When one co-parcener in a Hindu family separates from the others there is no presumption that the latter remain united, and an agreement among them to remain united or to re-unite must be proved like any other fact by the person who alleges it. [p. 697, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 13th April 1916.

Mr. D. O. Balli and Lala Daulat Ram, for the Appellant.

Dr. G. O. Narang and Mr. Labh Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The admitted pedigree-table of the parties is as follows :—

The family was originally a joint Hindu family. Sobha Ram died in 1869, and it is admitted by the plaintiff that his son, Chinta Ram, separated from the family before his father's death. After Sobha Ram's death Surjan Ram also separated, and it is alleged that Mutsaddi Ram and Tulsi Ram continued to be joint. According to the plaintiff his father and defendant's father, and after their deaths he and the defendant, constituted a joint Hindu family up to the date of the suit. The plaintiff brought this suit for joint possession of a half share in certain property detailed in the plaint which is in possession of the defendant, and for a declaration in regard to four other plots of landed property, to the effect that they were waqf in the name of the temple of Ragu Nathji. The defendant denied that the family remained joint after the partial separation admitted by the plaintiff, and pleaded that all the property in his possession belonged to him and that the property in plaintiff's possession belonged to the plaintiff. With respect to the property said to be waqf, he admitted that one plot of 241 kanals, 12 marlas of land was waqf, but he denied that the other three plots of 6 kanals, 17 marlas; 3 kanals, 9 marlas and 6 kanals respectively were waqf. He said that they belonged exclusively to himself. The lower Court has found that the family is not a joint one and that the plaintiff is not entitled to any share in the property in possession of the defendant. It dismissed the rest of the plaintiff's suit, but gave a decree declaring the plot of 241 kanals, 12 marlas of land to be the property of the temple. It directed the parties to bear their own costs. From this order the plaintiff has appealed and the defendant has filed cross-objections in regard to costs.

The case has been very elaborately argued before us by Counsel for the parties, but as we agree entirely with the conclusions of the lower Court, our judgment need not be long. Counsel for the appellant, in the first place, objected to the onus of the first issue having been laid upon the plaintiff. The issue was:—"Do the plaintiff and defendant form a joint Hindu family and is the plaintiff entitled to the joint possession of the property in dispute?" His contention is that the normal condition of every Hindu family is joint and that the burden to prove separation is on the person alleging it. In the present case, however, it is admitted that there was a partial separation even before Sobha Ram's death, when Ohinta Ram separated from the family. It is also admitted that there was a further separation after Sobha Ram's death when Surjan Ram separated, and the case of Balabux v. Rukhmabai (1) decided by the Privy Council is authority for the proposition that, when one co-parcener in a Hindu family separates from the others, there is no presumption that the latter remain united and that the alleged agreement to remain united or to re-unite must be proved like any other fact. See also in this connection Anandibai Ram Pai v. Hari Suba Pai (2) and Vaidyanath Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (3). It is clear, therefore, that in this case the initial onus lay upon the plaintiff to prove that he and the defendant were members of a joint Hindu family. It is further admitted in the plaint that in 1891 the parties separated their food and residence, and, having regard to this fact also, it is clear that the onus which lay on the plaintiff was a very heavy one. The main source of income to the family appears to have been a book of astrology according to which horoscopes used to be cast. It also appears that the members of the family used to go generally to other places where they visited their clients and earned money. This money used to be remitted to the members of the family who remained at home. Counsel has referred us to various bonds which have been executed in favour of the plaintiff or defendant in lieu of bonds which previously stood in the names of the defendant and the plaintiff respectively; for instance, a bond was executed in favour of the defendant in consideration of a bond which previously existed in favour of the plaintiff and vice versa. These are detailed in the judgment of the lower Court at pages 339 and 340 of the printed paper-book. We agree with the lower Court that these transactions do not at all prove that the parties were members of a joint Hindu family. They can easily be explained as the result of mutual trust and confidence by one party in the other. They can also be explained on the theory that the parties had a joint business of astrology and joint income therefrom. People are, however, frequently partners in a business without being members of a joint family. The hypothecation-deed (Exhibit P-8) printed at page 16 of the printed book, is relied upon by both parties. This deed is one in favour of Nil Kanth, plaintiff, for a consideration of Rs. 465. Out of the consideration Rs. 242 was undoubtedly contributed by Nil Kanth, and Rs. 162 out of it was a debt due to Tulsi Ram, the father of the defendant. The mortgagors agreed to pay Rs. 34.12 as yearly interest to the mortgagee. On the 16th August 1908, i.e., about three years after the execution of this deed of hypothecation, two of the mortgagors executed a bond (Exhibit P-7), printed at page 18 of the paper-book, in favour of Nil Kanth for Rs. 100 on account of interest for three years due under this deed of hypothecation. Similarly, on the 28th June 1911 the same two mortgagors executed a bond (Exhibit P 6, page 20 of the paper-book) for Rs. 99 in favour of Tulsi Ram which sum of Rs. 99 included Rs. 69 on account of two years' interest on the same deed of hypothecation. These facts appear to us to indicate that both Nil Kanth and Tulsi Ram had a share in this deed of hypothecation and, therefore, on one occasion a bond was executed in favour of one of them for a sum due as interest, and on another occasion a bond was executed in favour of the other for what was subsequently so due. These facts are opposed to the idea of a joint Hindu family.

A good deal of oral evidence has been produced by both parties. The lower Court has shown that some of the plaintiff's witnesses are certainly unreliable. We have been taken through their evidence. In our opinion, it does not suffice to discharge the onus which lay heavily upon the plaintiff. Nil Kanth and his uncle, Tulsi Ram, were on good terms, and the mere fact that both used the same Baithak does not prove that they were members of a joint family. Again, the fact that one of them went on tour and remitted his earnings to the other by money-orders, or the fact that they paid neondra jointly, does not prove that they were co-parceners. These facts are quite sufficiently explained by the mutual trust and confidence which existed between them. On the defendant's side there are numerous facts which lead to the presumption that the parties were separate and not joint. These facts are twelve in number and have been tabulated in the judgment of the lower Court at pages 344 and 345 of the printed paper-book, and it is quite unnecessary for us to repeat them. The most important of them seems to us to be the separate acquisitions of various properties by each party and the fact that an account was kept by the defendant's father of the sums spent by the plaintiff and that interest was charged to the latter on the balance due. This latter fact itself appears to us quite inconsistent with the theory of a joint Hindu family. In our opinion, the plaintiff has entirely failed to discharge the onus which lay upon him, and we do not understand why the lower Court ordered the parties to bear their own costs. What the lower Court has found is, that the plaintiff's claim is a false one and, under these circumstances, we see no reason why the ordinary rule should not be followed as to costs following the event. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal and accepting the cross-objections direct that the plaintiff should bear defendant's costs in both Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14, Sch. I, Art. 62—Section 14, benefit of, when can be claimed—Suit to recover money paid as patni rent, when no patni in existence—Limitation.

In order to obtain the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act, it is essential that the proceeding, the time spent in prosecuting which is sought to be excluded, should be between the contesting parties. [p. 692, col. 2.]

The period of limitation contained in Article 62 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to a suit for the recovery of money paid as patni rent at a time where there was no consideration for the payment. [p. 700, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hooghly, dated the 17th of February 1919, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of that District, dated the 25th of January 1918.

JANAKINATH SINGHA ROY v. BEJOY CHAND MAHATAP.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendranath Roy (with him Babu Sitaram Banerjee), for the Appellant.—In the first place, in calculating the period of limitation the time occupied by the proceeding for assessment of mesne profits should be excluded. Refers to section 14 of the Limitation Act. Refers also to Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (1), Rance Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mookhee Burmonia (2) and Nrityamoni Dass v. Lakhon Chunder Sen (3).

Secondly, the Article to the Schedule of the Limitation Act applicable to the present case is Article 97 and not Article 62.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (Jr.) (with him Babu Sarat Kumar Mitter), for the Respondent.—Section 14 of the Limitation Act is of no assistance to the appellant. The Privy Council cases really support my contention. The plaintiff's suit is for recovery of money received by the defendant. There was failure of consideration at the time the payment was made. Article 62 of the Limitation Act, therefore, applies. See Hukum Chand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (4). See also Raghumoni Authikary v. Nilmoni Singh Deo (5), Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (6). Article 97 of the Limitation Act does not apply. Even if it does not apply, the plaintiff would be entitled to only three years from the date when the consideration failed, i.e., from the 2nd May 1912. Upon that view also, the suit is barred by limitation. See Bejoy Chand Mahatab v. Tinkari Banerjee (7).

Babu Mohendranath Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of money paid by him to the defendant as patni rent on the 14th October 1910.

It appears that the plaintiff purchased the patni at a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819 on the 14th May 1908. The patnidar instituted a suit for cancellation of the sale, which was decreed on the 28th May 1910. The Zemindar-defendant thereupon preferred an appeal which was ultimately dismissed on the 2nd May 1912. In the interval, on the 14th October 1910, that is, after the Court of first instance had directed cancellation of the sale, the plaintiff paid rent to the defendant to prevent further sale under the Regulation. The present suit, which was instituted on the 14th February 1916, has been dismissed by the District Judge as barred by limitation. We are of opinion that this view cannot be successfully challenged.

The appellant has argued that he is entitled to a deduction of the time which was occupied by a proceeding for assessment of mesne profits as between himself and the original patnidar on the basis of the decree for cancellation of the sale. This contention cannot be upheld in view of the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act, which renders it essential that the proceedings should be between the contesting parties; here the Zemindar was not a party to the proceedings for assessment of mesne profits. Nor can it be suggested that there was, since the 14th October 1910, any period of time when the right of the plaintiff to institute the present suit was suspended by reason of circumstances over which he had no control so as to entitle him to invoke the aid of the rule recognised by the Judicial Committee in Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (1), Rance Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mookhee Burmonia (2), and Nrityamoni Dass v. Lakhon Chunder Sen (3). The question thus arises, which Article of the Limitation Act governs this matter. We are of opinion that Article 62 applies to the circumstances of the case.

Article 62 provides that a suit for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use must be instituted within three years from the date when the money is received. It has been pointed out in the decision of the Judicial Committee in Hukum Chand Boid v. Firthchand Lal Chowdhury (4) that this Article is intended to apply to cases which in English Law are described as suits for "money had and received." The same view had been previously taken in numerous cases in this Court, amongst which may be mentioned Raghunoni Audhikari v. Nilmoni Singh Deo (5) and Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (6). The fact that there was a failure of consideration at the time the payment was made on the 14th October 1910, attracts the operation of the bar imposed by Article 62.

It has been suggested in the course of argument that Article 97 might apply to this case. That Article provides that suits for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails must be instituted within three years from the date of the failure. In the case before us, this Article does not apply, because, as we have just explained, at the time when the money was paid there was no consideration. But even if we held that the validity of the patni sale was finally decided only on the 2nd May 1912, as the result of the appeal by the Zemindar, still, the plaintiff would be entitled under Article 97 to sue only within three years from the 2nd May 1912. As he did not institute the suit until the 14th February 1916, even upon that view it would be barred by limitation. [Bejoy Chand Mahatab v. Tinkari Banerjee (7)].

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Res judicata.—Decision of Revenue Court, whether binding in a subsequent suit in Civil Court—Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 189 (3)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

A decision on issues arrived at in a Revenue Court in a suit cognisable exclusively by that Court is not binding on a Civil Court as res judicata even though the subsequent suit brought in the Civil Court could not be brought in a Revenue Court, as section 189 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act does not extend the doctrine of res judicata in favour of decisions of Revenue Courts beyond what is enacted in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 702, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna, at Ellore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 262, etc., of 1917, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Ellore, in Original Suits Nos. 667, etc., of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Sreenivasa Aiyangar, Advocate-General (with him Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao), for the Appellant.—The defendants are not entitled to raise the plea that suit-lands are part of their sevati holding. In a prior suit between the same parties for enforcement of patta in respect of the same lands in the holding, the decision of the Revenue Courts has been against the ryots. In the present case in ejectment in the Civil Court the same plea has again been urged. If it is not actually barred as res judicata under the provisions of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, the decision of the Revenue Court precludes the parties from further agitating in respect of the same matter under section 189 (3) of the Estates Land Act. Under the latter sections, decision of Revenue Courts in matters falling under their exclusive jurisdiction are binding on the parties. Suits to enforce terms of pattas under section 56 of the Act are within the exclusive jurisdiction of Revenue

SOBHANADHRI APPARAO V. DATHADU VENKATARAJU.

Courts. In such suits, when the Collector has to make the necessary enquiry as to whether the defendant is bound to accept a patta and whether it is a proper one and where the descriptions, etc., of the lands are contained in the patta if a decision is given on nature of the holding a Civil Court cannot go into the ryot's plea of occupancy rights.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi (with him Mr. V. Suriyanarayana), for the Respondents.—The decision in the Revenue Court in the suit to enforce terms of a patta is certainly not res judicata in this case. To attract the operation of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, the Court must be same and the present ejectment suits are not cognizable by Revenue Courts. As to the applicability of section 189 (3) of Madras Act I of 1908, this does not extend the operation of section 11, Civil Procedure Code. Under section 189 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act, the Collector's adjudication with regard to rate of rent only is final. But the fact that he incidentally discusses or decides a question of title will not affect or oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. The Revenue Court's decision was not given on a matter exclusively within its jurisdiction. See S. A. No. 1002 of 1916 and S. A. No. 786 of 1919. Revenue Courts cannot have the final word on a question of title.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIYA AITAN, J.—The third plaintiff is the appellant, he being the Zemindar of Nozvid. The defendants in these suits claimed to hold what are called 'banjar' lands as parts of their respective jeroyati holdings but which plaintiffs alleged had been in their occupation on temporary grazing leases and that on the date of the suits the defendants were in possession as mere trespassers. The suits were brought on the strength of section 163 of the Estates Land Act (Act I of 1908) in the Civil Court.

Both the lower Courts found, as a matter of fact, that these banjar lands were jeroyati lands, that they were treated by the Zemindar from time immemorial as parts of the respective holdings of the defendants which contained other lands admitted to be jeroyati and that the defendants were not trespassers. But the plaintiff argued that, by reason of the decisions in certain prior suits brought by the plaintiff (or, rather the person who then represented the interest of the plaintiff) for the enforcement of patias for a former fasti, the question whether the defendants were entitled to hold these particular lands as ryots must be decided against them as res judicata. For this contention the language of section 189, clause (3), of the Estates Land Act is relied on. It is admitted that the matter is not res judicata if section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, or if the principle embodied in section 11, can alone be relied upon in argument, because the present suits in ejectment are not cognizable by the Revenue Court which tried the former suits. Hence, the appellant was constrained to rely in support of his argument upon what he contended was the true meaning of section 189 (3) of the Estates Land Act.

Now, where Revenue Courts and Civil Courts are thus exercising jurisdiction in disputes between the same parties (one kind of Court in certain matters and the other kind in some other matters) it is desirable that the Legislature clearly sets out in detail the particular matters over which each set of Courts is intended to have jurisdiction, and also provides clearly and definitely what has to be done when conflicts arise between the opinions of the two sets of Courts on the same question when they are dealing with the separate matters within their respective jurisdictions. I shall first quote a few passages from the judgment in Sheo Narain Rai v. Parmeshar Rai (1) (such conflicts having apparently arisen in the United Provinces frequently):—
"As it is not conceivable that the Legislature could have intended that there should be of its own creation two sets of Courts in these provinces, each having jurisdiction to determine the same questions of title to land let to agricultural tenants and neither having any power to compel the other to accept its decision by revision or other procedure or by process, we must assume that in all cases in which it is clear that, for the purposes of adjudicating upon an application, or making a decree in a suit, it was the intention of the Legislature that the decision on the question of title of the Court which was given the exclusive jurisdiction to entertain the application or the suit...should, subject to such rights of appeal as was allowed by the Statute, be final between the parties unless the contrary intention was expressed." Then in another part of the judgment (at page 280) the learned Judges say: "It may be inferred from a long series of decisions..... that the opinion was entertained by all the Judges, who in these provinces or in the Lower Provinces of Bengal have considered the question, that questions of proprietary title to land and of title of tenancies between rival claimants, but not questions as to the status of a tenant of agricultural land, are questions which should be determined by the Civil Courts and not by the Courts of Revenue in the more or less summary proceedings of the latter Courts." Then they consider the particular provisions of the Act which had to be considered in that case and arrive at the conclusion that, on a particular point, the decision of the Revenue Courts should be treated as final. The difficulties which the learned Judges felt in arriving at their conclusion are indicated by other passages in the judgment (at page 275) as follows:— "It frequently happens that a Court of Revenue and a Civil Court come to different conclusions on the same question of title litigated between the same parties in reference to the same lands. In such a case, which decision is to prevail? Is that decision to prevail which was first given or is that decision to prevail which was given in the proceeding or suit first instituted, or is the time of one of such Courts to be taken up in arriving at a decision which when pronounced will not be binding on the other Court and will be for all practical purposes a brutum fulmen? How is such decision to be enforced? It is clear that, unless a question of title arising in proceedings in ejectment under Act No. XII of 1881 had been determined between the parties by a reference to a Civil Court under section 204 of that Act, or in a suit instituted in accordance with an order of a Court of Revenue made under section 203A of that Act, the Court of Revenue would not be bound by the finding as to title of a Civil Court. The decision of an issue as to title by a Civil Court would not operate as res judicata under section 13 of Act XIV of 1882 as to the same question of title in proceedings under sections 36 and 39 of Act XII of 1881, although between the same parties and relating to the same land, and similarly a decision of a Court of Revenue under section 39 of Act XII of 1881 adverse to the application under that section contesting the liability of the person upon whom a notice of ejectment had been served would not operate as res judicata under section 13 of Act XIV of 1882 in a suit of ejectment in a Civil Court between the same parties, the Court of Revenue not having jurisdiction to try a suit to eject a trespasser, and a Civil Court not having jurisdiction to try an application under section 39 of Act XII of 1881 contesting liability to ejectment." At page 273, they say: "This is one of that class of cases which exemplifies the mischief which arises when the jurisdiction of Courts created by the Legislature is not plainly and explicitly and sharply defined. That mischief is intensified when, as in these provinces, there are two sets of Courts, the Courts of Revenue and the Civil Courts, each having in some matters exclusive jurisdiction, whilst as to other matters the question as to which of such Courts has exclusive jurisdiction depends, not upon plain and explicit language of the Legislature but upon inferences to be drawn from a painstaking examination of a variety of sections in an Act and upon general principles of jurisprudence upon which it is assumed that the Legislature has acted."

Having made the above quotations to indicate the difficulties created by the Legislature, I shall approach the consideration of this case with reference to certain general principles of jurisprudence. Civil Courts have got unlimited jurisdiction over civil rights except when such jurisdiction is expressly taken away and conferred upon another kind of Court. Hence provisions of Statutes taking away or restricting the jurisdiction of Civil Courts ought to be strictly construed. Further, it is the duty of Special Courts having restricted jurisdiction to respect and follow the decisions of ordinary Civil Courts on matters of title to land and on such important questions as questions relating to status and rights, even though the former Courts have jurisdiction to decide such important questions incidentally when dealing with special matters which have been placed by the Legislature within their exclusive jurisdiction. That duty is recognised expressly by the Legislature in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and in the Possession Chapter of the Criminal Procedure Code. That duty has been enforced by the decisions of this Court in cases arising under the Maintenance Chapter of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 213, clause (3), of the Estates Land Act also recognises that general principle. No doubt, in the absence of a decision of a Civil Court on a question of title, the principle embodied in section 11, Civil Procedure Code, though not that section itself, (because that section is not one of the sections made applicable to the Revenue Courts expressly by section 192 of the Estates Land Act) would apply, and a Revenue Court deciding a subsequent suit ought to accept the findings (even incidentally necessary findings) of the same Court in a former suit. See Bommidi Bayyan Naidu v. Bommidi Suryanarayana (2) and Venkatachalapati v. Krishna (3). But (1) if a question of title arises in a Revenue Court for the first time in that Court incidentally and is decided in one way, (2) if it then arose in a Civil Court and was decided in the opposite way, and (3) if it again arose in the Revenue Court in a third suit exclusively cognisable by that Court the Revenue Court, in my opinion, should, on this third occasion, respect the decision of the Civil Court, given on the second occasion and not follow its own finding in the first suit. I have carefully considered the several relevant sections of the Estates Land Act (sections 40, 51, 57, 153, 163 and 213 besides the section directly in question, namely, 189) and have come to the conclusion that section 189 (3) was not intended to go beyond section 11, Civil Procedure Code, and to constitute the decisions on issues arrived at in the Revenue Court in suits cognisable exclusively by the Revenue Courts binding on the Civil Court as res judicata even though the subsequent suit brought in the Civil Court could not be brought in a Revenue Court. That principle seems to me to follow from the observations found in Subbanna Achariar v. Gopalakrishna Achariar (4), Ohidambaram Pillai v. Muthammal (5), Gouse Moideen Sahib v. Muthialu Ohettiar (6) and also Second Appeal No. 1002 of 1916. I do not think it is necessary to elaborate the matter because I am glad to find that the question was considered so recently as last week in Second Appeal No. 769 of 1919 by a Division Bench of this Court (Ayling and Coutts-Trotter, JJ.). The learned Judges held that the decision of a Revenue Court on the question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed or not was not res judicata in a subsequent suit in a Civil Court, as this subsequent suit was not cognisable by a Revenue Court. Section 189, clause (3), was quoted before the learned Judges but they held that it did not extend the scope of the doctrine of res judicata in favour of the decisions of Revenue Courts beyond what was enacted in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code.

As I said already, I think it is the duty of the Legislature to make the provisions in the Madras Estates Land Act on these points more clear and definite. I might even say that, whenever the relationship of landlord and tenant is denied in a Revenue Court or question of title which cannot be finally decided by a Revenue Court is raised in that Court, provision ought to be made to stay the proceedings in the Revenue Court till that matter is finally decided by a suit in a Civil Court. I shall just quote what the Allahabad High Court has said on this matter (modifying the language of the learned Judges slightly because they were dealing with a different enactment.) "In our opinion whenever in suits ..... or applications exclusively cognisable by a Revenue Court the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties or between those through whom they claim had not been admitted..... it should be compulsory on the Court of Revenue to pass an order staying the proceedings before it for a limited time within which the party denying that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed might bring a suit in a Civil Court to determine the question of title. If no such suit should have been brought within a limited time, the Court of Revenue should, without further enquiry, decide finally the question of title against the party who had denied that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed. If such suit were brought, the Court of Revenue should be bound to accept the result of that suit as determining the question of title whether the suit was determined in the Civil Court by a dismissal for default or upon an adjudication on the questions of title."

In the result, I agree in the lower Appellate Court's conclusion on the question of res judicata argued before us and would, therefore, dismiss these second appeals with costs.

SPENCER, J.—In these suits there can be no doubt that no plea of res judicata under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code can be maintained, as the Revenue Court which decided the previous suits for acceptance of patta in 1909 was not competent to try the present suits for delivery of possession. But the plaintiff relies on section 189, clause (3) of the Estates Land Act which declares "the decision of a Revenue Court or of an appellate or revisional authority in any suit or proceeding under this Act on a matter falling within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Revenue Court shall be binding on the parties thereto and persons claiming under them, in any suit or proceeding in a Civil Court in which such matter may be in issue between them."

It is argued that suits to enforce acceptance of pattas under section 56 are suits within the exclusive jurisdiction of Revenue Courts. With this argument I agree. Similarly, suits under section 30 for enhancement of rent, section 38 for reduction of rent, section 40 for commutation of rent, and section 55 to obtain patta, are suits exclusively cognisable by Revenue Courts.

Next, it is argued that since in such suits the Collector is bound by the provisions of section 57 to enquire whether the defendant is bound to accept a patta and, secondly, whether the patta tendered is a proper one, and since in section 51 the local description and extent of the land and all special terms by which the parties are to be bound are some of the details to be contained in a patta, a Civil Court is precluded from going into the question whether a ryot who was previously a party to suits for acceptance of patta has occupancy rights in any portion of the land in that patta. I think the District Munsif has given the correct answer to this argument in paragraph 11 of his judgment. He says: "In deciding the propriety of the terms of the patta, the question of the defendants' occupancy rights does, no doubt, arise for incidental decision, but it cannot be said that it arises so directly and substantially for decision that the decision thereon by a Revenue Court can be said to be res judicata in a subsequent ejectment suit in a Civil Court where the question may again directly and substantially crop up."

I think that the intention of the Legislature in framing section 189 was that such questions as those relating to the fairness and propriety of the rate of rent fixed by the Revenue Court which a Collector from his experience of the agricultural condition and the rates and prices prevailing in his district is in a position best fitted to settle, should not be again agitated in a Civil Court after they have been once decided in suits instituted in Revenue Courts under sections 30, 38, 40, 55 and 56 of the Estates Land Act. In the present case I am of opinion that the prior decision having been a decision upon an incidental question as to occupancy rights and a matter falling within the exclusive jurisdiction of a Revenue Court is not binding on a Civil Court under section 189 (3), although it did arise in a suit to enforce acceptance of pattas which was exclusively cognisable by a Revenue Court. This view is supported by the opinion expressed in two unreported cases Second Appeal No. 1002 of 1916 decided by Seshagiri Aiyar and Napier, JJ., and Second Appeal No. 786 of 1919 decided by Ayling and Coutts-Trotter, JJ. I agree with my learned brother that these appeals should be dismissed with costs.

Mortgage—Mortgagor's lessee, whether can question validity of mortgage.

It is not open to the lessee of a mortgagor, in a suit brought for his ejectment, to question the validity of the mortgage.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 29th of January 1919, reversing the decree of the Munsif, Second Court, at Khulna, dated the 5th of March 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Asita Ranjan Chatterjee for Dr. Jadunath Kanvilal, for the Appellant.—The defendant, as tenant of the mortgagor, is not entitled to raise the question of the passing of the consideration for the mortgage. In a suit of this nature against the lessee of the mortgagor it is not necessary to adduce any evidence. The question of the passing of consideration is one between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. I am not pressing my claim for ejectment and I am perfectly content with the decree passed by the Court of first instance.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Lal Mohan Ghose), for the Respondents.—If there was no consideration for the mortgage, the transaction was void and not merely voidable. The lower Appellate Court was, therefore, perfectly justified in dismissing the suit on a finding that there was no consideration for the mortgage. Refers to Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain Khan (1). See also Rajoni Kumar Das v. Gaur Kishore Saha (2).

Babu Asita Ranjan Chatterjee was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of what was originally a suit in ejectment. One Bhagaban Sardar had an occupancy holding of 45 bighas which he mortgaged to the plaintiff in 1318. The plaintiff sued on this mortgage, obtained a decree and in execution of that decree purchased that holding in 1916 and subsequently took symbolical possession. The defendant No. 4, who is the sole contesting defendant, admittedly was put in possession of the land by the plaintiff's mortgagor in the year before the mortgage was executed. On these findings the first Court gave the plaintiff a decree declaring his title to the land but refusing khas possession as the tenancy of defendant No. 4, having been created prior to the mortgage, the plaintiff obtained Bhagaban's interest subject to that tenancy. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit on the finding that no consideration passed for the mortgage.

We are unable to uphold this decision. Though the defendant No. 4 set up the title in himself alleging abandonment by the heirs of Bhagaban Sardar and re-settlement with himself by the landlord, that he has failed to prove. So his only right to remain on the land can be by virtue of his lease from Bhagaban. As the mortgagor's lessee he cannot question the validity of the mortgage. The appellant in this case is content with the decree as passed by the Court of first instance and does not press his claim in ejectment.

The result will be, therefore, that this appeal is decreed, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and those of the Munsif restored.

The appellant will get his costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

r. 33—Appellate Court, power of, to set aside decree which has not been appealed against.

It is not competent to an Appellate Court, acting under rule 34 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code, to interfere with the decree obtained by the appellant in so far as it has not been challenged by the respondent by way of appeal or cross-objections.

Application under section 44 of Act III of 1914, for revision of the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, dated the 30th March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Rohtak, dated the 21st February 1920.

Lala Amar Nath Chopra, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Ohiman Lal Gulati, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for money due on book accounts, alleging that the defendant, Dip Chand, had struck a balance of Rs. 193 on the 29th August 1913, and claiming Rs. 400 as due to them for principal and interest. Dip Chand pleaded that he had struck a balance of Rs. 50 only.

The Munsif found that the defendant's thumb marks in the account-book had been obtained by misrepresentation, and that Dip Chand had acknowledged only a debt of Rs. 50. He gave plaintiff a decree for only Rs. 113, with proportionate costs.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Senior Subordinate Judge, who agreed with the finding of the Trial Court and held, further, that as there was forgery in the account the suit should have been dismissed, and, besides dismissing the appeal, proceeded to dismiss the suit also, acting under Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, although the defendant had not appealed or filed cross-objections.

The plaintiffs have applied to this Court for revision.

The lower Appellate Court's findings of fact cannot be challenged, and I cannot, therefore, entertain the second and third grounds of revision, but the application must be accepted on the first ground.

In Rangamlal v. Jhandu (1), where a plaintiff, who had been given a decree for only a portion of his claim, appealed, but the defendant neither filed a cross appeal nor took objections under Order XLI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, it was held that it was not competent to the Appellate Court, acting under rule 33, to interfere with the decree obtained by the plaintiff in so far as it had not been challenged by the defendant. The learned Judges pointed out that rule 22 clearly showed that it was intended that, prima facie at least, a respondent should not be allowed to take exception to so much of a decree as was against him without complying with the provisions of the rule. With regard to rule 33 they went on to say: "The object of rule 33 is manifestly to enable the Court to do complete justice between the parties to the appeal. Where, for example, it is essential, in order to grant relief to an appellant that some relief should at the same time be granted to the respondent also, the Court may grant relief to the respondent, although he has not filed an appeal or preferred an objection. Of such cases the illustration to the rule is a type."

I agree with the decision of the Allahabad High Court, and hold that Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, did not empower the lower Appellate Court to set aside the decree passed against the defendant, when the latter had not appealed or filed cross objections.

I accordingly accept the application for revision, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Trial Court. The parties will pay their own costs in this Court, as the plaintiffs have been only partially successful, and in the lower Appellate Court.

ALI BANDI v. ALI HASAN.

The fact that a person who brings a suit for pre-emption has, at some time prior to the bringing of the suit, denied the title of the vendor, would not estop him from maintaining a claim for pre-emption. [p. 707, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 30th July 1919, upholding the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 23rd July 1918.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing the Counsel on both sides in this case, I am of opinion that both the Courts below were in error in deciding that the plaintiff could not maintain the suit for pre-emption. In both the Courts the case has been decided on two preliminary issues; and as the appeal must, in my opinion, be allowed the result will be that the case will have to go back to the Court of first instance for decision on the merits.

The material facts to be considered are these. One Fakhruddin was the owner of certain property. In the year 1906 Fakhruddin transferred the whole of this property to his wife, Musammât Mohammad Bandi, in lieu of dower. The deed of transfer was registered on the 12th of November 1906.

After this Fakhruddin died and a dispute arose regarding the property between the wife, Mohammad Bandi, on one side and a sister of Fakhruddin, named Musammât Ali Bandi, who is the plaintiff in the present suit, on the other. The first dispute was in a Mutation Court and it is said that mutation was effected in favour of Musammât Ali Bandi.

After this a suit was brought by the widow, Musammât Mohammad Bandi, for possession of the property. Mohammad Bandi died while this suit was at trial and four persons were substituted as her legal representatives in the litigation. Two of these were Mahmud Ashraf and Mohammad Qayum, who are defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the present suit. These two men are nephews of Musammât Mohammad Bandi.

After this substitution had been made a decree was passed in favour of the four persons and the result of that decree was that Mahmud Ashraf and Mohammad Qayum became entitled to one-half of the property which formerly belonged to Fakhr-uddin. A decree in their favour was passed on the 30th of June 1916 and on the 18th of July 1916, they sold their one-half share to the defendant No. 3 who is their sister. Musammât Ali Bandi preferred an appeal against the decree of the 30th of June 1916. It is not shown from the record whether that appeal was actually pending on the 18th of July 1916 when the property was sold to the third defendant; but it is admitted that Ali Bandi's appeal was dismissed on the 15th of January 1917. On the 22nd of June 1917 the third defendant transferred the property which she had acquired from the first and second defendants to the defendant No. 4, who is her husband, and this was the state of things at the time this suit for pre-emption was filed on the 18th of July 1917.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim on two grounds embodied in the fifth and sixth issues. He found, in the first place, that there was no sale which could be pre-empted, his reason being that what was sold to the third defendant on the 18th of July 1916 was not property, but a mere doubtful claim, or, in other words, a share in a law suit. On the sixth issue he found that, because prior to the suit the plaintiff Musammât Ali Bandi had been denying the title of these vendors, she was, therefore, not entitled to maintain the suit.

In my opinion, both these findings are wrong. I cannot accept the view that, because a person who brings a suit for pre-emption has at some time prior to the bringing of the suit denied the title of the vendor, he is thereby estopped from maintaining a claim for pre-emption. Such a view, to my mind, is altogether unreasonable and repugnant; and I need only refer to a decision of this Court reported as Thepiri v. Mahabir Prasad (1). That is a decision of a Bench and lays down the law in the sense which I have referred to. I agree with this decision.

As for the other ground taken by the Court of first instance and adopted by the lower Appellate Court, I am also of opinion that the decision is wrong. What are the facts? On the 30th of June 1916, the two vendors had got a decree from a competent Court declaring their right to a half share in this property. It is plain that, up to this stage, there had been no attempt on the part of the vendors to dispose of any portion of the claim which they were prosecuting in the Trial Court. They got a decree, as I have said, on the 30th of June 1916 and having got that decree they proceeded to sell the property which had been awarded to them by the Court under a deed which was executed on the 18th of July 1916. I am certainly not prepared to take the view that, because either an appeal was pending at the time this transfer was made or an appeal was shortly afterwards instituted, the result must be that the Court should hold that what was being transferred by the first and second defendants to the third defendant was an unsubstantial item of property consisting of nothing more or less than a share in a law suit. That is not, in my opinion, the proper view to take of the facts.

I allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the Court below; and as there has been no trial on the merits in the Court of first instance, the result is that the case must be sent back to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for disposal on the remaining issues. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Benamdar for purchaser of separate account at Revenue sale, whether can maintain suit for joint possession—Bengal Revenue Sale Law (Act XI B, C. of 1859).

A suit for joint possession by the purchaser of a separate account in a sale held under the Bengal Revenue Sale Law is maintainable even though the plaintiff is a benamdar.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Chittagong, dated the 6th of August 1918, reversing the decree of the Munsif, South Ranjan, dated the 6th of June 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellant.—I got a decree for joint possession in the Court of the first instance. But on appeal by the other side the lower Appellate Court wrongly held that the plaintiff being a benamdar could not maintain the suit. The learned Judge in the Appellate Court has gone counter to the decision in Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (1). It was not open to defendant to raise the question of benami and the fact that I have produced certificate of title is sufficient evidence of title to estate.

Babu Mohini Mohon Chakraverty, for the Respondents.—The benamidar is competent to bring suit. I cannot resist the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff who purchased a separate account in a sale held under Act XI (B. C.) of 1859. The first Court gave a decree for joint possession but left open the question as to the identity of the plaintiff land with the land in the mahal. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was only a benamdar and, therefore, could not maintain the suit. But he held that, if it had not been for the fact that the plaintiff was a benamdar he would have been entitled to joint possession. He also held that there was no reason for doubting the identity of the suit land with the land of the mahal. It is conceded by the learned Vakil for the respondent that, since the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee reported as Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (1), the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the question of benami cannot be supported. It is also conceded that, in view of the finding that there was no partition, the objection on that score also cannot be supported.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's suit decreed in the manner suggested by the learned Subordinate Judge in the closing part of his judgment, with costs in all Courts.

Where a person is induced by the false representations of others to become a partner with them, the Court will rescind the contract of partnership at his instance, and will compel them to re-pay him whatever he may have paid them, with interest, and to indemnify him against all the debts and liabilities of the partnership. [p 70, col. 1.]

When a partnership is rescinded on the ground of fraud or misconduct, the partners at fault are not entitled to ask the other members of the partnership to contribute to the losses which may have occurred in the partnership business. [p. 710, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Gujranwala, dated the 25th August 1916.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which these cross appeals arise the plaintiff, Hakam Rai, claimed Rs. 5,927-4-2 principal and interest, from Kharak Singh, defendant, or in the alternative he asked for dissolution of partnership and for recovery of the amount which might be found due to him after rendition of the partnership accounts. The Court below found that there was a partnership and passed a preliminary decree dissolving it and subsequently passed a final decree for Rs. 2,762-3-0 in favour of the plaintiff with proportionate costs against the defendant and ordered that the amount decreed should carry future interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree to the date of payment. There are cross-appeals by Gola Singh, the minor son of Kharak Singh, deceased, and by the plaintiff.

Mr. Manohar Lal, in arguing the defendant's appeal, began by contending that it was not proved that the whole sum of Rs. 5,000 said to have been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant was actually paid. This sum was made up of three items, as detailed in the judgment of the lower Court, namely:—

(1) Rs. 3,015-12-0 due to the Arya Bank on account of previous debt due by defendant to the said Bank;

(2) Received in cash in advance on the 21st of August 1913, Rs. 500,

(3) Received in September 1913 Rs. 1,484-4-0.

The latter sum was all along admitted by the defendant who gave plaintiff a credit for Rs. 1,500 in the partnership accounts. Mr. Manohar Lal frankly admitted before us that he could not contest the item of Rs. 500 and he also said very little about the debt of Rs. 3,015-12-0. In our opinion, this debt is clearly proved by the books of the Arya Bank and by the other evidence detailed by the lower Court in its judgment, printed at page 65 of the paper-book, and also by the fact that the defendant, who was literate, signed a promissory-note for the full sum of Rs. 5,000. It is unnecessary for us to go into all the arguments urged by Mr. Manohar Lal in regard to the accounts, because, in our view of the case, plaintiff's appeal must succeed. It is clearly proved that each of the partners was to put Rs. 5,000 into the partnership business of which the defendant was the manager. Defendant only put Rs. 1,500 of the plaintiff's money into the business, misappropriating the other Rs. 3,500. He denied receipt of this sum of Rs. 3,500 and made no entry of it in the accounts, and it is quite clear that his intention was to misappropriate it or to use it for his own private business.

Mr. Puri, who argued the plaintiff's appeal, urged that defendant had clearly been guilty of misconduct in not putting the whole of the plaintiff's Rs. 5,000 into the partnership business. Partnership was entered into in September 1913 and on the 5th December 1913 the plaintiff sent a notice to the defendant, printed at page 5 of the paper-book, in which he taxed the defendant with having obtained Rs. 5,000 from him by misrepre-resentation and called upon him to deposit the amount within four days in a certain firm, otherwise he would bring a criminal case against him charging him with cheating or criminal breach of trust. To this the defendant never replied. Under the circumstances, we consider that the defendant has clearly been guilty of misconduct if not of fraud and that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff is not liable to contribute to any losses which may have occurred to the business.

In Lindley on Partnership, Seventh Edition, page 524, it is stated that, "where a person is induced by the false representations of others to become a partner with them, the Court will rescind the contract of partnership at his instance; and will compel them to re-pay him whatever he may have paid them, with interest, and to indemnify him against all the debts and liabilities of the partnership," and so on. Again, at page C16 it is stated: "The Court may dissolve a partnership on the ground that a partner wilfully or persistently commits a breach of the partnership agreement." When a partnership is rescinded on the ground of fraud or misconduct such as has been committed in the present case, we consider that the partner at fault is not entitled to ask the other members of the partnership to contribute to the losses which may have occurred in the partnership business. In the present case it is quite possible that, if the defendant had complied with the terms of the agreement, there would have been no loss.

The plaintiff admitted that he had received goods worth Rs. 638 11-10 from the defendant which he deducted from the total sum which he said was due. In addition to these sums, the lower Court allowed the defendant credit for three other items, which will be found printed in the paper-book at page 54. These items are:—

- (1) Rs. 423 8 0 dated 11th February 1914.
- (2) Rs. 15 12 0 and
- (3) Rs. 7 9 2.

Total Rs. 446 13 2.

There is no evidence in support of the item of Rs. 423-8-0 except an entry made by the defendant in the partnership accounts. Plaintiff states that he was in the habit of giving receipts for any sums received by him, and a number of receipts have been produced by the defendant. We do not agree with the reasons given by the Commissioner for allowing this item. It is clear that an item of Rs. 328 has been unlawfully entered by the defendant in the accounts (see the bottom of page 51 of the paper-book). We have examined the details which go to make up this item of Rs. 328 and we find that some of the items are sums spent by the defendant in this very case. Under the circumstances, we do not think that the defendant's accounts are so reliable that they should be accepted as proof of this item of Rs. 423 8 0 when no receipt is forthcoming signed by the plaintiff who says he gave a receipt for every sum received.

The item of Rs. 15-12-0 represents the difference between Rs. 1,484 4 0, received in cash by the defendant from the plaintiff, and the sum of Rs. 1,500, for which he gave credit in the accounts. As we hold that the whole sum of Rs. 5,000 was received by the defendant this item of Rs. 15 12-0 is non-existent. Plaintiff's Counsel says he does not object to the item of Rs. 7-9-2.

The plaintiff has calculated interest at 2 per cent. per mensem, but we think this is too much, because the interest which the defendant was paying to the Arya Bank was at half of this rate only. We consider that the plaintiff was entitled to his principal, Rs. 5,000 plus interest at 1 per cent. per mensem, i.e., Rs. 783 total Rs. 5,783. From this must be deducted Rs. 638 11-10 originally admitted by the plaintiff plus Rs. 7-9-2 now admitted. The balance remaining is Rs. 5,136-11-0.

We accept plaintiff's appeal and, in modification of the order of the lower Court give plaintiff a decree for Rs. 5,136 11 0 and proportionate costs in both the Courts to be realised from the estate of Kharak Singh, deceased. This sum shall bear interest from the date of the decree to the date of realisation as ordered by the lower Court at 6 per cent. per annum.

Defendant's appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where in a suit for the possession of a cultivatory holding the plaintiff alleges a right based upon inheritance, and it is found that he has no right of inheritance whatever to possession of the holding, his suit is liable to be dismissed, even though it is found that the defendant is in possession without any right.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 6th November 1919, confirming the order of the Munsif, Kunda, dated the 24th July 1919.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. A. Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing Counsel in this case I have come to the conclusion that the judgment of the Court below is wrong and that appeal must be allowed.

The subject-matter of the suit was the right to possession of a cultivatory holding which had been in the possession of one Deoki, now deceased. Both the parties to the suit are collateral relatives of the deceased. The defendants, it is said, are in possession of the holding. They set up title to it under an oral bequest and also under a mortgage said to have been executed in their favour. The Courts below have found that the oral bequest was not proved and they have also held that the mortgage of a cultivatory holding is invalid and that, therefore, the defendants are in possession without any title. They have also held that the plaintiffs, being nearer reversioners to the deceased than the defendants, are entitled as against these defendants to possession.

It has been found by both the Courts that neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants shared in the cultivation of the holding during the lifetime of Deoki.

On these findings it appears to me that the suit of the plaintiffs ought to have been dismissed. They have, in my judgment, no right whatever to possession of this holding.

The law on the subject appears to be clear. The right of an ordinary tenant under the Oudh Rent Act is not a heritable right except to the extent which is laid down in section 48 of the Act. That section provides that the heir of a tenant who dies during the currency of a holding is entitled to retain occupation of the holding till the period expires. It is also provided in this section that a collateral relative who did not, at the date of the death of the deceased, share in the cultivation of the holding is not to be deemed an heir under the Act.

Applying these principles to the case, it will be obvious that the plaintiffs have no right whatever; and although it may be that the defendants have no right to be in possession of this property, nevertheless the plaintiffs, having no title in themselves, cannot be allowed to turn the defendants out.

The Courts below have arrived at their decision upon the consideration that the terms of section 42 of the Oudh Rent Act are for the benefit of the landlord. I am not sure that I understand what is meant by this expression. But whether section 48 confers any benefit on the landlord or not its provisions seem to me to be perfectly clear. The plaintiffs came into Court alleging a right based upon inheritance. Under the law they have no right of inheritance whatever and, in these circumstances, their suit was bound to fail.

The appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside, and it is ordered that the plaintiffs' suit be dismissed with costs to the defendants in all three Courts.

tion of—Suit by one member of public to compel removal of obstruction, maintainability of.

Where it is shown that one member of the public has suffered special damage by the obstruction of a public pathway which prevents him from using the pathway as a convenient access to his house, he is entitled to maintain a suit for a declaration of right of way, and for an injunction to compel the removal of the obstruction.

Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 30th of April 1920, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1363 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chandra Bose (with him Babu Rodhika Ranjan Guha), for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of a right to village pathway and for an injunction for the removal of the obstruction by the defendant. The suit was dismissed by the Courts below on the ground that plaintiff did not describe the path as a public pathway. On appeal to this Court Mr. Justice Newbould also affirmed the decree of the Courts below on the further ground that the plaintiff had not proved any special damage. I submit there is ample evidence on the record to show that I have suffered special inconvenience by not being allowed access through the path in question. That, I submit, is sufficient for the purposes of my case to prove special damage.

Moulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq (with him Babu Jahnavi Charan Das), for the Respondents.—The plaintiff founded his claim on contract and grant but the findings on those points are against him. He should have complied with the provisions of Order I, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code. It has been found by the Courts concurrently that no special damage has been made out.

Babu Bepin Chandra Bose replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

MOOREPJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from, the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould in a suit for declaration of a right of way, and for an injunction to compel the defendants to remove an obstruction which they have erected across it.

The Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiffs upon the existence of the way as alleged by them. But they have dismissed the suit on the technical ground that the plaintiffs had not described the way as a public pathway, as established by the evidence. That decree of dismissal has been affirmed by Mr. Justice Newbould on the ground that the plaintiffs have not suffered special damage as they would have to establish if the way was a public path, because the obstruction to the road had been placed at some distance from their house. In our opinion, the suit should not have been dismissed on a technical ground as has been done by all the Courts.

The judgment makes it plain that there is a way as alleged by the plaintiffs and that the defendants have unlawfully obstructed it. We shall assume for the purpose of our decision that it was a public village path and that the plaintiffs can succeed only upon proof that they have suffered special damage inasmuch as they have not instituted the suit on behalf of the members to the public in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. But upon the facts it is abundantly clear that they have suffered special damage. No doubt, the obstruction has been placed not in immediate front of the outer door of their house but at some distance; but it is clear that, while every member of the public has been prevented from using the pathway, the plaintiffs have suffered special inconvenience because they have been prevented from using the way as a convenient access to their house. They have thus complied with the requirement of the rule that where a wrongful act has been done affecting the public at large, as well as causing inconvenience and damage to the individual, if the inconvenience and damage caused to the individual be the same as the public at large are exposed to, the individual has no right of action, unless he can show that he has suffered some special and particular damage [See the judgment of Westropp, C. J., in Satku v. Ibrahim Aga (1), where numerous instances are given of special damage]. In the circumstances of this case, we are clearly of opinion that the suit should have been held maintainable.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of dismissal made by Mr.

Where the question of the status of a tenant is raised before a Revenue Court, that Court must decide what the tenant's status is or decide that he has prima facie under-proprietary rights, in which case either party must go to the Civil Court for a decision on the question of under-proprietary title.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Lucknow Division, dated the 18th October 1917.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, J. M.—(March 1, 1918.)—I would accept this appeal.

The plaintiff-respondent sets up to be an occupancy tenant. The defendant-appellant issued notice to eject him as an ordinary tenant. Decisions in the past have cancelled notices of ejectment by defendant-appellant's predecessors on the ground that plaintiff-respondent had status superior to that of an ordinary tenant, but have not decided what that status was. Courts in the past seem to have interpreted the law curiously, as I notice that Mr. Commissioner Quinn on the 22nd December 1885 held that the landlord must establish in the Civil Court that the tenant was an ordinary tenant before he could eject him by notice. Mr. Quinn was clearly wrong, as a question of tenant status (other than under-proprietary) was for the Revenue and not for the Civil Court. The question of what the respondent's status is can never be decided until the Revenue Courts follow Dhourwa Estate v. Chuttan Singh (1) and, when the question is raised in a case like the present, decide what the tenant's status is, or decide that he has prima facie under proprietary rights, in which latter case either party could go to Civil Court on the question of under-proprietary title.

I would hold that a wrong application of res judicata in the past does not warrant similar action now.

The question substantially (see the wording of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code) at issue in the past was, whether the tenant possessed this or that definite status and was or was not consequently liable to ejectment by notice. The vague decisions of the past in finding that the tenant was "something more" than an ordinary tenant slurled the matter substantially in issue, and, therefore, are not binding on the Courts as res judicata under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. I would hold that Courts are not bound by these "indecisive decisions" and must decide decisively on the substantial point when the question comes before them again, as in the present case. I would, therefore, remand this case to the lower Court for a definite decision, (1) as to the status of the tenant-respondent, and (2) as a consequence whether he is liable to ejectment by notice. Return to be made to this Court for final decision; costs of this appeal will be included in costs of suit.

HOLMS, S. M.—(March 7, 1918.)—I entirely agree. The view of the law stated by my colleague is that now accepted.

It is not necessary for an alienee, who is also the antecedent creditor, to prove that all the previous debts were incurred for necessity. Lala Fakir Chaudhary, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badr ud-Din Tarehvi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 15th January 1910 the defendant's brother, Adalat Khan, borrowed Rs. 60 from the plaintiff and executed a deed in his favour hypothecating his share in certain house property. On the 24th January 1913 he executed another deed hypothecating the same property to the plaintiff for Rs. 122 which included Rs. 93 on account of principal and interest due on the deed of 1910, Rs. 4 for registration expenses, and Rs. 25 which he received in cash before the Sub-Registrar. The plaintiff sues the defendant (Adalat Khan being dead) for the money due on the deed of 1913. The defendant pleaded that the property hypothecated was ancestral, and that the mortgage was without necessity.

The Munsif found that the property was ancestral, but that there was necessity for the alienation, and he gave the plaintiff a decree.

On appeal, the District Judge agreed with the finding of the first Court that the property was ancestral, but also found that no necessity for the alienation was proved, and he, therefore, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court.

In the deed of 1910 it is stated that the Rs. 60 borrowed by Adalat Khan were required for "household" purposes, and the witnesses to the execution of the deed also say the money was borrowed for such purposes.

The learned District Judge holds that the plaintiff was bound to give some proof that it was necessary for Adalat Khan to raise the money by pledging ancestral property, and he points out that Adalat Khan, being in the army, had a source of income beyond the one ghumao of land which he possessed.

He is, however, wrong in thinking that the plaintiff had to show that Adalat Khan's income was not sufficient for his wants. It is only in the case of an alienation by a woman that the alienee has to show that the alienor's income was insufficient to provide the money required. Where the alienor is a man, all that has to be considered is whether the purpose for which the alienation was effected was a necessary purpose. I do not think it can be said that ordinary domestic requirements were not "necessities" for which Adalat Khan was justified in borrowing Rs. 60. Further, it appears to me that, in accordance with the principles enunciated in Dasi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (1), the mere existence of the debt contracted in 1910 was sufficient to justify the alienation in 1913, whether the debt was incurred for a necessary purpose or not. On page 296 of that ruling, where the words "just debt" are defined, it is stated that a just debt need not be one incurred for a necessary purpose, and further on it is laid down that it is not necessary for an alienee, who is also the antecedent creditor, to prove that all the previous debts were incurred for necessity. It is only where the previous debts, besides not being for necessity, are unreasonable or prove reckless extravagance or waste, or a design to injure the reversioner's interests that a distinction arises between the case of an alienation in favour of the antecedent creditor, who is prima facie fixed with knowledge of the nature of the debt, and an alienation in favour of a third person who cannot be presumed to have such knowledge. In the present case there is nothing to show that the debt contracted by Adalat Khan in 1910 was of the character mentioned above.

I hold, therefore, that the item of Rs. 93 included in the deed of 1913 on account of the amount due on the deed of 1910 must be allowed.

The sum of Rs. 25 received by Adalat Khan at the time of the registration of the deed is trifling, and, according to the evidence Adalat Khan, borrowed it for the purpose of paying land revenue. This item should also be allowed.

I accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Trial Court. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Baba Satenuripati Ray, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this case is, whether the suit upon the mortgage-bond out of which this appeal arises, is a suit for enforcement of money charged upon mortgaged property within the meaning of Article 132 of the Limitation Act.

The mortgagor took a loan of a certain quantity of paddy and agreed to repay it together with interest thereon at so many kathas per kuri per year and further agreed that, on default of payment within the time stipulated, the mortgagee would be entitled to realise the money—the subject-matter of the claim together with costs by sale of the property which was mortgaged to secure the loan, and that if that was insufficient to satisfy the debt, by attachment and sale of other properties of the mortgagor.

The suit was brought more than six years after, and within twelve years of the due date of payment.

The Court below, relying on the decision in the case of Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1), held that the suit was barred by limitation. That case has been considered and distinguished in several cases: See Sripoti Lal Dutt v. Sarat Chandra Mondal (2), Sridhar Chandra Maity v. Ram Gobinda Jana (3), *Indra Narain Shao v. Kunjabihari Patra (1) do not appear to be the same as those of the bond in the present case. In fact, all the terms of the mortgage-bond, and specially those relating to enforcement in default of payment, do not appear from the report of that

In the present case, as stated above, it was stipulated in the bond that the money (Dabir taka mai kharcha) would be realisable by the sale of the mortgaged property. The case, therefore, is distinguishable from that of Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1). In the circumstances, we do not think that the case should be referred to the Full Bench and the appeal must be allowed.

We accordingly hold that the suit is not barred by limitation. But as there are several other questions to be tried, the decrees of the Courts below must be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance for trial of the other issues.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 3—Death of plaintiff—Legal representatives of deceased brought on record—Defendant, failure of, to object—Estoppel, omission to consider question of—Material irregularity.

Where on the death of a plaintiff certain persons are brought on the record as his legal representatives without any objection by the defendant, the latter is estopped from subsequently asserting that the persons impleaded are not the legal representatives of the deceased. [p 77, col. 1.]

The omission by an Appellate Court to consider the question of estoppel amounts to a material irregularity, justifying interference in revision. [p. 717, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act IX of 1919, for revision of the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhang, dated the 26th April 1920, reversing that of the Honorary Civil Judge, Jhang, dated the 12th June 1919.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Petitioners.
Sayad Mohsin Shah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to the present application for revision are as follows: Mal Chand brought a suit for Rs. 380, on the basis of a lease executed by the defendant, in the Court of Rai Sabib Lala Ram Chand, Honorary Civil Judge, Jhang. The Honorary Civil Judge held that the suit was cognizable by a Revenue Court and returned the plaint. Mal Chand appealed to the Senior Subordinate Judge. While the appeal was pending the appellant's Pleader informed the Court that the appellant had died. On the 25th June 1918 an application was put in by Tej Bhan and Jawala Das, sons of the deceased Mal Chand, for being impleaded as appellants in place of their father. Notice was issued to the defendant, and on the 12th August 1918 he appeared and said that Tej Bhan and Jawala Das might be impleaded as representatives of Mal Chand. The Senior Subordinate Judge (Lala Devi Dial) accordingly passed an order impleading them, and after hearing the appeal he held that the suit was triable by a Civil Court and directed the Honorary Civil Judge to proceed with it.

The case was then tried. There were several hearings, evidence was recorded, and no objection was taken by the defendant that Tej Bhan and Jawala Das were not the legal representatives of the deceased Mal Chand. Ultimately, a decree was passed by the Court in the plaintiffs' favour on the 12th June 1919. The defendant appealed from the decree to the Senior Subordinate Judge (Sheikh Ali Muhammed) and he then, for the first time, took the objection that all the representatives of Mal Chand had not been brought on the record, Mal Chand having left three sons, Tej Bhan, Jawala Das, and Shiv Ram, and also a grandson (deceased son's son). The Senior Subordinate Judge has held that in consequence of the omission to bring all the representatives of Mal Chand on the record the suit as well as the appeal by virtue of which the suit was remanded had abated, and he, therefore, accepted the appeal which was before him and dismissed the suit. The present application is by Tej Bhan and Jawala Das for revision of that order.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that they alone are the legal representatives of the deceased Mul Chand for the purposes of this case, as the land of which the lease money is in dispute has been mutated in their names alone. Whether this contention is correct or not, I think that the order of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside on the ground that the respondent is estopped by his conduct from raising the objection that all the representatives of the deceased have not been brought on the record. In August 1918 he agreed to Tej Bhan and Jawala Das being impleaded as Mul Chand's representatives, and from that time up to June 1919 when the decree was passed against him by the Trial Court he never objected that there were other representatives also who should have been made parties.

In Meenatchi Achi v. Ananthanarayana Ayyar (1), where the widow of the deceased plaintiff had been brought on to the record in place of her husband, it was held that the defendant was precluded from raising at a late stage of the case the objection that the widow was not her husband's legal representative. The learned Subordinate Judge says that it was not necessarily within the defendant's knowledge who the representatives of Mul Chand were. It was, however, his duty to make inquiries and satisfy himself on the point. In the case cited above the learned Judges said, on page 228 of the judgment: "They (the defendants) were bound to use all reasonable diligence in acquainting themselves with the state of the family of the deceased in view to ascertain whether the widow was entitled to prosecute the suit as the legal representative of her deceased husband, and they were bound to take the objection at the earliest opportunity if they meant to insist upon their alleged right to raise the objection."

Balabai v. Ganesh Shankar Pandit (2) is also in point.

(1) 28 M. 224; 12 M. L. J. 380.

(2) 27 B. 162; 4 Bom. L. R. 252.

The lower Appellate Court's omission to consider the question of estoppel was a material irregularity which justifies the interference of this Court in revision.

I accept this application, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for disposal of the appeal before it on the merits. Court-fee on the application to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the case.

Lease—Lessee continuing in possession for more than 12 years, status of—Adverse possession—Limitation.

Where a person holds a village under a lease continuously for more than 12 years paying the rent stipulated and not sharing the profits of the village with the lessor or his co-sharers he acquires the limited interest of perpetual lessee under the lease by force of adverse possession. His taking possession under the lease operates as a complete ouster of not only the grantor but of every other co-sharer of his, the possession of the lessee being adverse against them all, and limitation for a suit to deprive him of possession runs from the date of such possession. [p. 720, col. 1]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 19th December 1919.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Babu Ram Chandra, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Bibi Ruqaiya Khanam, brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for possession of the village Pithapur, situate in the Pargana of Miranpur, district Sultanpur, and also for a declaration that the perpetual lease executed by Bibi Ummatul Fatima was null and void as against the plaintiff. The defendants to the suit were the heirs of one Tafazzul Husain, who was the lessee under the lease stated above. The facts are as follows:—The village in suit is included in a taluka called Maniarpur, the Summary Settlement of which was made with Bibi Saghra and afterwards her name in respect of this taluka was entered in Lists I and II framed under section 8 of Act I of 1869. It came to be vested in its entirety in one Bibi Ilahi Khanam, who died intestate on the 20th April 1899, leaving her surviving six daughters, Bibi Ummatul Fatima, Bibi Batul, Bibi Kaniz, Bibi Asghari, Bibi Ruqaiya and Bibi Haidari. The succession to this taluka has suffered many vicissitudes and the question of the title to it has not yet been finally settled [See the case of Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Bibi Ummatul Fatima (1)]. For the purpose of this appeal it is enough to mention the admitted facts that the six ladies took possession of the estate on the death of their mother. At first, the name of Bibi Ummatul Fatima, the eldest daughter, was alone recorded in the revenue papers but by a subsequent order the names of all the six ladies were recorded jointly, but Bibi Ummatul Fatima continued to be the Lambardar for the whole of the taluka.

FAZZL HAQ V. RUQAIYA KHANAM.

It appears that the possession and management of the entire estate passed into the hands of the Collector of the District on the 15th November 1905 on account of a default having been made in payment of the Government revenue under section 150 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (Act III of 1901) and the management continues up to the present moment.

In the several litigations which followed the death of Bibi Ilahi Khanam, one Tafazzul Husain helped these ladies by acts and advice and apparently received no or little remuneration in cash for his services. Accordingly, on the 22nd May 1905, a perpetual lease was executed by Bibi Ummatul Fatima, Bibi Asghari and Bibi Haidari in respect of the village in suit by way of reward or compensation for the services rendered by Tafazzul Husain. The lease was registered only so far as its execution by Bibi Ummatul Fatima was concerned but it was not registered qua Bibi Asghari and Bibi Haidari obviously because they wanted to go back on the arrangement to which they had previously consented. On the 3rd March 1906 Tafazzul Husain applied for the entry of his name in the Revenue Records on the basis of the lease of the 22nd May 1905. In column No. 5 of his petition relating to the nature of the transfer he set out the perpetual lease and in column No. 8 of the same petition relating to the date of the transfer he gave the date of the document in question as the 22nd May 1905 (Exhibit A-2). On the 10th April 1906 the Deputy Commissioner of Saltanpur, who, as stated above, had come into the possession of the estate under section 150 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (Act III of 1901) lodged his objections against the mutation for which Tafazzul Husain had asked by his petition of the 3rd March 1906. His objections were mainly two: (1) that Bibi Ummatul Fatima had no power to grant the lease in question so as to bind her other co-sharers, and (2) that the lease having been granted after the assumption of management by the Collector was invalid (Exhibit A 3). It may at once be pointed out that the second ground taken by the Deputy Commissioner was not correct in fact. The lease was granted in May 1905 while the Collector entered into the possession of the estate, as stated above, in November 1905.

On the 17th April 1906 Bibi Ruqaiya and Bibi Asghari, by means of a petition of that date, protested against the mutation in favour of Tafazzul Husain. They also founded their objection mainly on two grounds:

(1) That Bibi Ummatul Fatima had no authority to grant the lease in question and consequently the objectors were not bound by it, and (2) that the applicant, Tafazzul Husain, had never been in possession of the village to which the lease related (Exhibit A 4). These facts clearly establish the following three points: (1) Tafazzul Husain asserted his title to the lease-hold property on the basis of the instrument of the 22nd May 1905, (2) he did so to the knowledge of the plaintiff Bibi Ruqaiya Khanam, and (3) his claim that he entered into possession of the village by virtue of the lease was disputed, amongst others, by the plaintiff.

FIZUL HAQ v. RUQAIYA KHANAM.

A dispute having thus arisen the Assistant Collector, in whose Court the mutation proceedings were pending, entered into an enquiry as to who held the possession of the village in suit. It appears that he asked for a report on that question from the Tahsildar of the Tahsil within which the village in question lay. The report of the Tahsildar is a very important document bearing upon the question of possession. It is dated the 14th August 1905 (Exhibit A-7). The purport of that report is that Tafazzul Husain filed the deed of perpetual lease, produced oral and documentary evidence and the objectors also produced oral and documentary evidence in support of their objections. On the question of possession, he came to the conclusion that Tafazzul Hussain, the applicant, had proved that he was in possession of the village Pithapur. On the 24th August 1906 the Assistant Collector passed the following order:—"On the basis of the perpetual lease, mutation of the village Pithapur be made in favour of Tafazzul Husain as a perpetual lessee." In stating the grounds for his order, the Assistant Collector distinctly said that mutation in the revenue papers depended upon possession and that the applicant had proved his possession (Exhibit A-8). Tafazzul Husain continued to pay the rent reserved by the lease to the Deputy Commissioner and, in support of this, a large number of receipts are filed in this case. These facts demonstrate that Tafazzul Husain entered into possession of the whole of the village in virtue of the lease of the 22nd May 1905 since the date of its execution and he and, on his death, his heirs have continued in possession in the same capacity up to the present moment.

On the 17th November 1917 these six ladies entered into an agreement for partition of the entire estate and by the same agreement they appointed Rai Sahib Babu Shambhu Nath, a Pleader in Sultanpur, to make the partition on the lines settled amongst the parties themselves. Babu Shambhu Nath gave his award on the following day. The only function which he performed as an arbitrator was to incorporate the allotments which the ladies had privately settled into his award. Six chittis were prepared and each of these six ladies accepted the one which was by consent intended for her. The result of this allotment was that the village in suit was assigned to the share of Bibi Ruqaiya Khanam, the plaintiff-respondent.

I have no doubt in my mind that the village was given to her and she accepted it subject to the lease in question. The rent payable under the lease is stated therein to be Rs. 537.5.9. Rs. 4.8 out of this amount is shown for revenue and cesses, etc., and Rs. 195.9 for hoq m.likana. In the chitti of the plaintiff-respondent the nikasi kham of the village is shown to be Rs. 512.5.9. This total is shown to have been made up of the following two items: for revenue Rs. 360 and for net profits Rs. 152.5.9 (Exhibit 5). The slight difference is due to the statutory reduction of cesses which has taken place between the date of the lease and of the partition. The jamabandi of 1917, the year in which the partition took place, shows the gross profits of the village to be Rs. 288.5.3 (Exhibit A-71). All the six chittis show that each of them contains property of almost equal profits. The irresistible inference is, that the entry of nikasi kham to the extent of Rs. 512.5.9 only as against this village in the chitti of Bibi Ruqaiya Khanam was due to the recognition of the lease-hold interest of Tafazzul Husain by all the co-sharers.

However that may be, the plaintiff-respondent brought the present suit on the 14th September 1918. In 1919 an application was made to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur that the award of Rai Sahib Babu Shambhu Nath be made a decree of Court. This was done by an order of the Court, dated the 27th August 1919. Amongst other defences raised on behalf of the appellants, one was a plea of limitation. This plea has been urged again in appeal before me. The lower Court rejected it on the ground that the plaintiff's cause of action for the possession of the village in suit arose by the allotment made to her in virtue of the partition mentioned above.

I am of opinion that the plea of limitation must prevail. The lease which Bibi Umamah Fathma granted to Tafazzul Husain has been treated by the learned Advocate for the plaintiff respondent as being wholly void. I need not decide the question whether the lease was wholly void or merely voidable: nor need I decide the other question as to whether it was good in respect of Bibi Ummatul Fatima's share and void in respect of the shares of the other five sisters of hers. I will assume the agreement that it is wholly void as correct. From the statement of facts which I have given at some length, it is quite clear to my mind that Tafazzul Hussain and his heirs acquired the limited interest of a perpetual lessee under the deed of the 22nd May 1905 by force of adverse possession. There is no evidence that the plaintiff or any of her other co-sharers ever got the profits of this village, awarded to them in any settlement of accounts between them and the Lambardar, Bibi Ummatul Fatima, or from the hands of the Deputy Commissioner, over and above their share in the rent payable under the lease. In fact, it is clear, from what I have stated above, that the Deputy Commissioner has throughout the course of his management relieved the rent fixed by the lease from Tafazzul Hussain and after his death from his heirs. When Tafazzul Hussain took possession of this village under the lease there was a complete ouster of not only the grantor of the lease but of every other co-sharer of hers including the plaintiff-respondent. Tafazzul Hussain's possession was adverse as against all of them. The subsequent partition in the year 1917 to which reference has already been made could not, in my opinion, have the effect either of stopping the limitation which had begun to run from the date of Tafazzul Hussain's possession or if it had run long enough, as in fact it had, of depriving Tafazzul Hussain of the rights which he had acquired by means of continuous adverse possession. As to adverse possession by one co-sharer as against another, see the recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (2). The proposition that a limited interest may be acquired by adverse possession is hardly questionable. I may here refer to a very exhaustive judgment on the subject of Mr. Justice Batty of the Bombay High Court in the case of Thakore Fatesingji Dipsangji v. Bamani Ardeshir Dalal (3). The opinion expressed by the learned Judge was followed by a Bench of this Court in Husain Ali Mirza v. Muhammad Azim Khan (4).

The learned Subordinate Judge has given a decree for proprietary possession and also for a declaration that the lease of the 22nd May 1905 is not binding on the plaintiff-respondent. So far as proprietary possession is concerned, there was no cause of action for a relief of that nature. The defendants had never disputed the proprietary interest of the plaintiff-respondent; and so far as the declaration is concerned, it cannot be granted in view of my finding on the question of limitation.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiff-respondent's suit with costs in both the Courts.

Sayed Mohsin Shah, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The question upon which we are invited to express our opinion is, whether a Court executing a decree can restore an application for execution after it has dismissed it for default. Now, there can be no doubt that section 141, Civil Procedure Code, 1883, does not apply to a proceeding for execution. That section reproduces with slight modifications section 647 of the previous Code, and it was held, with reference to the latter section, by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir-Ullah (1), that it did not apply to proceedings in execution but applied only to original matters in the nature of suits, such as proceedings in Probate, guardianship, etc. It is to be observed that, at one time there was a considerable divergence of opinion as to whether section 647 applied to execution proceedings, and it was in consequence of this divergence that the Legislature added, by Act VI of 1892 an explanation to that section in order to make it clear that the provisions of the section were not applicable to proceedings in execution. The judgment of the Privy Council was, however, based upon the section as it stood before the explanation was added, the result being that the explanation was considered unnecessary and, consequently, omitted when the new Code was drafted. We are consequently of opinion that the procedure relating to suits is not applicable to an application for execution, and this view coincides with the rule enunciated in Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (2) and B. lasubramania Chetti v. Swarnammal (3).

There is, however, nothing in the Code to restrict the inherent power of the Court to pass such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice. Indeed, this power is now expressly recognized by section 151 of the Code, and the learned Vakil for the petitioner admits that it was only in the exercise of this inherent power that the Court could dismiss for default an application for execution. Now, if the Court has an inherent power to pass an order of dismissal, there is absolutely no reason why it should not possess a similar power to set aside the dismissal if the ends of justice render it necessary to do so.

It is contended that a decree-holder, whose application for execution has been dismissed for want of prosecution, has got an alternative remedy and is entitled to make a second application for execution, and that he should not, therefore, be allowed to invoke the inherent power of the Court to set aside an order of dismissal. There may, however, be cases and, indeed, this is one of such cases, in which a second application may be barred by limitation; and if we accept the contention the decree-holder would in such cases have no remedy open to him. Be that as it may, we see no reason in principle for holding that the mere circumstance that an alternative remedy may be open to the decree-holder should prevent the Court from exercising its inherent jurisdiction if the circumstances of the case require its exercise. In this connection we are not unmindful of the observations to the contrary made by the Patna High Court in Ritu Kuer v. Alakhdeo Narain Singh (4), but we do not think that the learned Judges intended to enunciate any hard and fast rule of general application. We find that their Lordships of the Privy Council in Debi Basish Singh v. Habib Shah (5) laid down the rule that the Court has an inherent power to set aside an order dismissing a suit under Order IX, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code, for the non-appearance of the plaintiff, when the non-appearance was due to the plaintiff's death, which fact was not brought to the notice of the Court dismissing the suit. There is, therefore, no adequate ground for holding that a similar power could not be invoked in the case of an application for execution dismissed for default, when it is clear that the Code contains no express provisions on the subject.

Proceedings for execution of a decree certainly fall within the ambit of section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and if a party to an application for execution can satisfy the Court that it should exercise its inherent jurisdiction ex debito justitiæ, there is nothing in the law to debar the Court from exercising that inherent power.

We accordingly dismiss the application for revision with costs.

In a suit for damages arising out of a tort the plaintiff is not required to implead as a defendant every person who is liable for the tort. [p. 74, col. 1.]

The only effect of suing some only out of a number of joint tort-feasors is that the judgment recovered against them bars a suit against the others. [p. 74, col. 1.]

Therefore, where in such a suit one of the defendants dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record, the suit does not abate as a whole and a decree obtained in the suit is a good decree against those defendants who were living parties to it. [p. 74, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

ROSS, J.—These three appeals are directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Patna in execution proceedings.

The material facts are these. Jhamman Singh, the maternal grandfather of the plaintiff, was the owner of certain shares in Mouzah Makawan and Mouzah Gauspur Syed Bhikh. The defendants are the descendants of five persons, Gotias of the said Jhamman Singh. There were disputes about the estate of Jhamman Singh between these Gotias and his widow, and, later, his daughter, the plaintiff's mother. As a result of a fraudulent compromise 5 dams 3 cowris and odd share in Mauza Makawan and 2 annas 18 dams share in Mouza Gauspur Syed Bhikh came into the possession of the ancestors of the defendants. The former share was reduced to 5 dams 1 cowri and odd by a sale on account of the plaintiff's grandfather's debts; but the balance of the share and the whole of the latter share continued in possession of the defendants. The former share, together with the ancestral share of the defendants, in all 5 dams 15 cowris and odd, was formed into a separate Tanzi in which 13 annas and odd, kham, represented the original share of the plaintiff's grandfather. When the plaintiff became entitled to possession on the death of his mother, he brought a suit for the recovery of the aforesaid shares. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge and dismissed by the High Court. On appeal to the Privy

GAJO SINGH v. AMRIT NARAIN SINGH.

Council, the decree of the Subordinate Judge was restored. The plaintiff then proceeded to execute this decree.

It has been proved, and is not now disputed, that, during the pendency of the appeal in the Privy Council, several of the defendants, namely, Jasoda Koor, Jungli Singh, Kuldip Singh, Ramu Singh alias Firangi Singh, Rameshwar Singh and Batoran Singh, died and their heirs were not substituted.

The first question in these appeals is as to the effect on the decree on this failure to substitute the heirs of these defendants. It was contended for the appellants-judgment-debtors, that the whole appeal abated and that the decree is a nullity. Reference was made to Order XXII, rule 4. But all that that rule provides is that, when one of several defendants dies and the right to sue does not survive against the others alone (as in the present case), then, if the heirs of the deceased defendant are not substituted, the suit abates as against that defendant. The rule does not provide that the whole suit abates.

The appellants are on the horns of a dilemma. If the interest of the defendants is joint, then the right to sue survives against the surviving defendants alone. If substitution is necessary, as in the present case, it is because the interest of the defendants is separate, and, therefore, does not survive, and, consequently, there is no reason why the suit should not proceed against the surviving defendants. The defendants are joint tortfeasors. A plaintiff has never been required to join as defendant every person who is liable for the tort. The liability of others is no defense for those sued because the liability is joint and several. The only effect of suing some only out of a number of joint tortfeasors is that the judgment recovered against them bars a suit against the others. The decree in the present suit is a good decree against those who were living parties to it.

The next contention was, that the Subordinate Judge had erred in basing his judgment on khewats of the villages of Makawan and Gauspur Syed Bhikh filed during the argument in order to ascertain the shares of the surviving judgment-debtors. No objection seems to have been taken to the admission of this evidence, and I see no reason why a public document like the khewat should not be put in at any stage. As to the sufficiency of the evidence there can be no doubt. It is the best possible evidence and it is difficult to see what other evidence in respect of the shares could be given. It shows the shares of the deceased parties and these shares should first be deducted from the shares claimed. It is said that, as the defendants have ancestral shares as well as the shares in suit, the deduction can not be made. If the shares of the deceased defendants shown in the khewat include ancestral shares as well as shares in suit, then the deduction of the total shares is to the advantage of the judgment-debtors. The evidence given on behalf of the judgment-debtors is, that they held their shares separately. The plaint shows the total shares of the defendants, ancestral and obtained by trespass. The extent of the share obtained by trespass is also stated. The difference must, therefore, be set aside as ancestral. The shares of the deceased defendants must further be excluded and the balance will not be more than the shares of the surviving defendants obtained by trespass and, therefore, recoverable in execution.

The last point taken was, that the Subordinate Judge had erred in ordering restitution of Rs. 2,533-12-2, the amount paid by the plaintiff as costs under the High Court decree. It appears that this decree for costs was executed by the then decree-holders, now the judgment-debtors, jointly. Their liability to make restitution was, therefore, joint and, in the absence of some, the claim must fail against all.

The result is that these appeals are decreed only in respect of the order for restitution of the sum of Rs. 2,533-12-2 which is set aside, and in other respects are dismissed. There will be no costs of the appeals.

DAS, J.—I agree.

—Pre-emption suit—Plaintiff, failure of, to appear—Defendant, admission by, of plaintiff's right to pre-empt, effect of—Procedure.

Plaintiff sued to pre-empt certain land on payment of Rs. 1,500. On the date of hearing the plaintiff failed to appear, the defendant appeared and admitted the plaintiff's right to pre-empt, but stated that the price paid for the land was Rs. 1,000. The Court passed a decree in favour of plaintiff on payment of Rs. 12,000.

Held, that the defendant's admission did not amount to an admission of any part of the plaintiff's claim within the meaning of Order IX, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, and that, therefore, the proper course for the Court was to dismiss the suit for default.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Multan, dated the 3rd July 1917.

Khawaja Feroz-ud-Din Ahmad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT—On the 22nd May 1916 one Shahamad sold certain land to Muhammad Akram Shah and Ghulam Ahmad, the consideration being shown in the sale deed as Rs. 12,000. On the 4th May 1917 Mehr Daim instituted a suit for possession of the land conveyed under the said deed, by pre-emption, alleging that the sum of Rs. 12,000 had not been paid and had not been fixed in good faith. It was further alleged that the market value of the said land was Rs. 1,500. On the first two hearings of the case, the defendants were absent, not having been served with summonses. On the 3rd July 1917, which was the next hearing of the case, the defendants appeared and filed in their written statements. The plaintiff and his Pleader were, however, absent. In their written statements the defendants admitted the plaintiff's right to pre-empt, but averred that the price paid was Rs. 12,000, and that that sum represented the correct market value of the land. The Pleader for the defendants also made a statement in which he admitted the plaintiff's right to pre-empt and stated that a decree might be passed conditional on the payment of Rs. 12,000. The Court below, purporting to act under Order IX, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code, passed a decree for possession by pre-emption on payment of Rs. 1,000 by the 5th October 1917, directing that, on failure of such payment, the suit would stand dismissed with costs. Against this decree the plaintiff has preferred this appeal through Mr. Feroz-ud-din Ahmad. No appearance was entered on behalf of the respondents.

Order IX, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code, provides that, where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed, unless the defendant admits the claim, or part thereof, in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission, and, where part only of the claim has been admitted, shall dismiss the suit so far as it relates to the remainder. In the present case, the claim was for possession of certain land which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to get as a pre-emptor on payment of a sum of Rs. 1,500. The defendants did not admit the plaintiff's claim. All they admitted was that the plaintiff had a right of pre-emption. There was a controversy as to the value of the land as the defendants did not admit the plaintiff's averment with regard to that. The admission of the plaintiff's right to pre-empt cannot, we think, be regarded as an admission of any part of his claim. On the failure of the plaintiff to appear, the Court should have dismissed the suit.

We, therefore, accept this appeal and remand the case to the Court below for disposal in accordance with law.

Costs will be costs in the cause.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 53, 118—Transfer, mutual, of immoveable property, nature of —Exchange—Transfer to defeat anticipated attachment in execution, nature of.

A mutual transfer of immoveable property between two persons amounts to an exchange within the meaning of section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, and each party acquires title in the property transferred to him on execution of the deed of transfer in his favour. [p 725, col. 2.]

A transfer made merely with intent to defeat an anticipated execution is not a transfer of property made with intent to defraud, defeat or delay creditors within the meaning of section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 727, cols 1 & 2]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 7th April 1920, upholding the order of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 19th January 1920.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh, for Respondents Nos. 2, 4 and 5.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for a declaration that he is the owner of 3½ sahams in houses Nos. 4377 and 4550, situate in Mohalla Shaikhana and Mohalla Ghauriana Khurd of Qasba Jais, District Rae Bareilly, under a deed of transfer dated the 30th January 1919, executed by Musammal Ali Bandi Bibi, defendant No. 1, in favour of the plaintiff and that, consequently, they are not liable to attachment and sale in execution of decree for costs held by the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 against the defendant No. 1. So much of the defence as is necessary for the purposes of this appeal was to the effect that the deed of transfer dated the 30th January 1919 was fictitious, that it was executed for the purpose of depriving the decree holders of their money, and that it was legally void. This defence has succeeded in both the Courts below and the suit has been dismissed.

I have come to the conclusion that this appeal must prevail. It appears that the decree-holders commenced proceedings in execution of their decree for the attachment of the property in suit on the 21st February 1919, and this date has been accepted in both the Courts below as well as before me as the date of the attachment of the shares in houses in question. It further appears that Musammal Ali Bandi Bibi, in order to effect a settlement of a bona fide dispute pending between her and Syed Tawakkul Husain and others, transferred certain properties in favour of Tawakkul Husain, amongst which was included some property belonging to the appellant, and with a view to compensate the appellant she effected the transfer of the shares in the houses in suit and also of other property in favour of the appellant by the instrument of the 30th January 1919. The appellant on his part transferred the property belonging to him and which Musammal Ali Bandi Bibi had transferred to Tawakkul Husain for the purpose of effecting the settlement already mentioned by executing a document in her favour on the 20th March 1919.

It would follow from the above statement of facts that there was a mutual transfer of immoveable property between Musammal Ali Bandi Bibi and the plaintiff appellant. This transaction has been technically characterised as an exchange and treated to fall within the scope of section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882). In my opinion, this is a right view to take of the nature of the bargain between these two persons. The Courts below have, however, held that there was no transfer in law from one party to the other until the execution of the deed of the 20th March 1919 by the appellant in favour of Musammal Ali Bandi Bibi, and as the execution of this document was subsequent to the attachment, the deed of the 30th January 1919 was ineffectual and inoperative as against the attachment. It is difficult to appreciate the logic of this reasoning. An exchange as well as any other transaction between two parties must, in the nature of the thing, be preceded by a consensus of mind of the parties in respect of the incidents and terms of the transaction; in other words, by a perfected contract between them in relation to the subject matter of the contract. Ordinarily, the rules of law applicable to contracts of sale would govern the contracts of exchange as well. There is no doubt in my mind that the law as it obtains in India also assimilates them. Section 77 of the Indian Contract Act (Act IX of 1872) defines 'sale' as follows:—"Sale is the exchange of property for a price. It involves the transfer of the ownership of the thing sold from the seller to the buyer." Section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882) defines "exchange" in the following terms:—"When two persons mutually transfer the ownership of one thing for the ownership of another, neither thing nor both things being money only, the transaction is called an 'exchange'." In both cases, therefore, there is a transfer of ownership from one party to the other and the distinguishing feature between the two cases is that, in the case of sale, the transfer of ownership is for price, that is money, while in the case of an exchange it is for the ownership of another thing. This difference cannot affect transfer of title from one party to the other when the requirements of law to make such a transfer are completed. The result of an instrument of transfer, so far as the transfer of ownership is concerned, is the same whether it is in the case of a sale or in that of an exchange. The following statement of law is given in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXV, page 109:—"The law relating to contracts of exchange or barter is undeveloped, but the Courts seem inclined to follow the maxim of the Civil law, permutatio vicina est emptioni, and to deal with such contracts as analogous to contracts of sale". And in the foot-note, at the same page, it is stated:—"Lord Blackburn says (Contract of Sale, First Edition, Introduction, page 3) that the legal effect of contracts of sale and of barter is the same; see the Indian Transfer of Property Act, 1882, (Act IV of 1882) sections 118 et seq."

The second paragraph of section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882) is as follows:—

"A transfer of property in completion of an exchange can be made only in manner provided for the transfer of such property by sale". In a case of sale it cannot be doubted that, as soon as the instrument affecting the transfer of ownership from one party to another is perfected, the vendor becomes divested of the title in the property sold and the title becomes vested in the vendee. It follows that in a transaction of exchange each party becomes vested with legal title in the thing transferred by one to the other from the date of the execution of the instrument of transfer. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff-appellant acquired title in the houses in dispute on the execution of the deed of transfer in his favour by Musammatt Ali Bandi Bibi on the 30th January 1919, and the fact that the appellant performed his part of the contract at a later date does not in the least affect the title acquired by him by virtue of the deed of the 30th January 1919. On the reasoning set out above, Musammatt Ali Bandi Bibi acquired title to the property transferred to her by the appellant on the 20th March 1919, when the latter executed the deed of transfer in favour of the former. I am not concerned in this case as to what would have happened if the appellant had failed to perform his part of the contract, but it may be mentioned that Musammatt Ali Bandi Bibi would not have been without a remedy in that event.

The second ground upon which the Courts below dismissed the suit is, that the deed of the 30th January 1919 was executed to defraud, or at least to delay, the respondents decree-holders in realizing their decretal money. In the first place, no particulars of any fraud are set out in the defence. In the case of Gunga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Choudhry (1) Lord Watson, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, quoted the following observation of Lord Selborne in Wallingford v. Mutual Society (2):—

"With regard to fraud, if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice". The rule of pleading in English law and in the Indian law are assimilated in this respect by the provisions of Order VI, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908). In the second place, there is no evidence whatsoever to substantiate the plea of fraud even if it be taken to have been properly raised. The following facts have been relied upon by the Court of first instance in support of the finding on this question in favour of the respondents. (1) The plaintiff is a full brother of Musammât Ali Bandi Bibi's husband. (2) She and the plaintiff are joint in estate, business and residence and in fact in every respect. (3) The stamp on which the deed of the 30th January 1919 was engrossed was purchased on the 30th October 1918 and that of the deed of the 20th March 1919 was purchased on the 15th March 1919. (4) The deed of the 30th January 1919 was registered on the 14th April 1919 and that of the 20th March 1919 on the 7th July 1919, both dates being subsequent to the attachment. To my mind, these elements, either singly or collectively, do not establish fraud on the part of Musammât Ali Bandi Bibi. At best, they may give rise to a suspicion as to the bona fide character of the transaction in question but, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a similar case in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (3), "the Court's decision must rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony." But the most fatal objection to this part of the respondents' case is that, whatever might have been the motive of Musammât Ali Bandi Bibi in transferring the property in suit to the plaintiff-appellant, no fraud has been brought home to the appellant. There is neither any finding nor any evidence to the effect that the appellant participated in the commission of fraud, if any, by Musammât Ali Bandi Bibi. The lower Courts have proceeded in determining this part of the case upon the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property (IV of 1882). In my opinion, those provisions have no application to the facts of this case. A transfer made merely with intent to defeat an anticipated execution is not a transfer of property made with intent to defraud, defeat or delay creditors within the meaning of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act [See the Observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (4)].

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below, and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Ram for Rs. 15,000 on the 15th December 1919. On the 10th January 1920 Muhammad Amin and Bhagat Ram contracted to sell the same shop to defendant for Rs. 16,500. Khuda Baksh was the broker employed in the latter transaction, and he now sues to recover Rs. 165 due as brokerage. The defence is, that the defendant is not liable to brokerage as he was misled and the shop was not the property of Muhammad Amin and Bhagat Ram when they contracted to sell it to him. The lower Court says that the defendant knew very well what the position was and was not the victim of any fraud or deception, as it was stated in the agreement of sale executed by Bhagat Ram and Muhammad Amin that they had till then only obtained an agreement of sale from Beli Ram. This is quite wrong, as the agreement to sell executed by Bhagat Ram and Muhammad Amin clearly states that they are the owners of the shop by purchase from Beli Ram. Both the sales fell through, and the Small Cause Court Judge says that apparently they fell through because the defendant backed out. Why he says this I do not know, for there is no sufficient material on the record to prove that it was the defendant's fault that the sales fell through, and the starting presumption would seem to be that the defendant never succeeded in buying the shop from Muhammad Amin and Bhagat Ram because the latter had not themselves acquired any title to sell. But the Small Cause Court Judge proceeds as follows: "In this case we are not concerned with as to how the sales fell through. The plaintiff had done his duty and is entitled to his brokerage. It has not been shown that he was guilty of any bad faith." The Small Cause Court Judge, therefore, gives the plaintiff a decree with costs.

Now, a broker is ordinarily entitled to his brokerage when he has succeeded in bringing about a sale, and I should certainly say that he is also entitled to his brokerage if he so far succeeds as to bring about an agreement to sell and the sale then falls through because the intending purchaser backs out. It is, therefore, necessary in this case to decide whether it is the fault of the defendant that the two sales fell through. Frima facie, as I have said before, it would appear that the sale to the defendant fell through for the simple reason that Muhammad Amin and Bhagat Ram, contrary to what was stated in their agreement to sell, had not acquired any title in the shop. It is, therefore, for the plaintiff to prove that it is the defendant who is responsible for the sales falling through. This question must be put in issue and decided after due enquiry. The plaintiff can only get a decree if he can prove that it is the defendant who is responsible for the sales having fallen through.

Another point raised on behalf of the petitioner is, that a contract to pay brokerage is immoral and opposed to public policy, and here reliance is placed on Madho Ram v. Badr ud din (1) and the judgment published as Bali Parishad v. Mol v. Jawala Dul Ram Kunwar (2). The former is a case of dasturi and is totally different from claims for brokerage. The latter is not an authorized publication and I have no hesitation in refusing to follow it. There is a note* by the Editor below the case doubting whether Madho Ram v. Badr ud din (1) which the ruling professes to follow, is not distinguishable, and I can only say that I agree with the Editor. I remark, too, that if such cases are to be regarded as opposed to public policy it would be difficult for a person to employ an agent in any respect.

I accept this application and, setting aside the decree of the lower Court, I remand the case for re-decision after due enquiry into the above issue the onus of proving which will lie on the plaintiff. Stamp on the application to this Court will be refunded and other costs will follow the result.

Hindu Law—Dayabhaga School—Joint family—Property acquired by one member—Self-acquired property—Burden of proof.

Under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law where one of the members of a joint family acquires property in his own name during the lifetime of his father, the burden of proving that the property was not the self-acquired property of that member, but in reality belonged to the father, lies on the party making the assertion.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Backergunge, dated the 31st of January 1919, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Additional Court, at Backergunge, dated the 21st of March 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Suresh Chandra Taluqdar (with him Babu Jatindran th Sannyal), for the Appellants.—It has been found that the family was joint in food, worship and estate when the property was acquired in 1302 B. S. Thus, the onus of proving that the property was the self acquired property of the defendant lay on him. Refers to Sarada Prosad Ray v. Mahananda Ray (1), Gobind Chandra Das v. Radh. Kristo Das (2), Trevelyan's Hindu Law (112 Edition) page 245, Karsondas Dharamsey v. Gangobai (3), Laldas Narandas v. Motibai (4), Huro Soonduree Debia v. Doorga Doss Bhattacharjee (5), Taruck Chunder Totadar v. Joodheshteer Chunder (6), Jugodumba Debia v. Rohinee Debia (7).

Babu Gunoda Chiran Sen (with him Babu Nrasanta Bhusan Gupta), for the Respondent.—My friend has practically conceded that if the property was acquired during the life time of the fathers of both the parties, there is no presumption of jointness. See Trevelyan's Hindu Law, page 245. Therefore, the case in Sarada Prosad Ray v. Mahananda Ray (1) is exactly in point and is in my favour.

Babu Suresh Chandra Taluqdar replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs and the defendants in this case are consine, the plaintiffs being the sons of the younger brother of defendant's father. The plaintiffs brought the suit to recover 8 annas interest in several items of property described in the schedule to the plaint and were partially successful. In the present appeal, though the other items have not been expressly abandoned, the plaintiff's claim to the immoveable property described in the schedule kha to the plaint has been pressed.

It is contended, as was contended before the lower Courts, that as this property was acquired in 1302 and the family was admittedly joint in mess, estate and worship up to 1303 B. S, the onus of proving that the property was the self acquired property of defendant No. 1 lay on the defendant. This property was acquired when the fathers of the plaintiffs and the defendants were both living. Having regard to this fact, we think the lower Courts were right in applying the decision in Sarada Prosad Ray v. Mahananda Ray (1), in which it was held, under very similar circumstances, that the burden of proof rested on the party who asserted that the property in reality belonged to the father and not to the son in whose name it was acquired. Though the learned District Judge remarks in his judgment that the decision of the case seemed to turn mainly on the question of onus it appears to us that in both the Courts below the judgments have dealt fully with the evidence and circumstances of the case, and have in effect arrived at findings that such presumptions as may arise in favour of the plaintiffs have been rebutted by the evidence. It is found, for instance, on the evidence, that such joint property as the family had could not have been sufficient to purchase the property now in dispute. It is also found that the defendant's story that the property was given to him in recognition of good work done by him as Tahsildar is greatly strengthened by the plaintiffs that no money was required for acquiring the property and by the contents of the document itself. lower Courts have in fact found that the plaintiffs have failed to prove either any original nucleus from which the property could be purchased or that there was any abandonment by the first defendant of this property to the common stock, and they appear to believe the defendant's story supported by his own evidence that he himself acquired this property as his individual property. As already stated, we hold that the lower Courts have committed no error in law as regards the party on whom the burden of proof lay, and we also hold that in finding as they do that this property was the self-acquired property, there had been no legal defect which would justify our interference in second appeal.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

In the case of a formally registered document in which the receipt of consideration has been recited, the onus of proving that consideration did not actually pass is on the party who alleges non-payment. In the case of an entry in an account-book, however, the onus is on the party alleging payment to prove it. [p. 732, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 29th March 1917.

Pandit Sheo Agrain, R. B., and Mr. Muhammad Hafi, for the Appellant.

B. khashi Tek Chand and Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by Tunia Mal, etc.,

against Rulia Singh on the 5th of May 1916, in which the plaintiffs claimed a sum of Rs. 5,705.8 as principal and interest, due by the defendant on certain bahi accounts. It was alleged in the plaint that Rulia Singh, had, on the 15th February 1915, borrowed a sum of Rs. 5,137 to be utilized in connection with certain kiln work and had undertaken to re-pay the same with interest at the rate of annas 12 per cent, per mensem. It was further alleged that this transaction had been entered in the plaintiffs' account-book, which had been duly signed by the defendant, who had also made an entry in the same account-book in his own handwriting. Interest calculated up to the date of the suit amounted to Rs. 568.8 and hence the claim for the total amount as stated above.

On the 24th of May 1916 Rulia Singh filed a written statement. In this he denied the plaintiffs' claim and alleged that he had not borrowed any money from them. He further objected to the admissibility of the entry in the account-book, which formed the basis of the suit, alleging that the said entry amounted to a promissory note and that, as it was not stamped, no suit could be brought in relation thereto. On the 9th of June 1916 he filed a further written statement, in which he stated that he did not admit the first paragraph of the plaint, and for the rest re-iterated what had been said in his first written statement. The Trial Court thereupon framed certain preliminary issues in connection with the admissibility of the entry in question, and, on the 10th of July 1916, came to the conclusion that the entry amounted to an agreement which required an eight-anna stamp, and that on payment of the prescribed penalty it could be received in evidence and form the basis of the suit. The stamp duty was paid by the plaintiffs, and, on the 20th October 1916, Rulia Singh filed his written statement in detail on the merits. He denied having borrowed any money from the plaintiffs and alleged that there had formerly been a partnership between him and them in connection with a kiln, but that the partnership accounts had been settled. He next proceeded to explain the entry in the plaintiffs account-books. He stated that the plaintiffs contemplated carrying on another kiln in partnership with him and that, under that impression and thinking that the plaintiffs would contribute a similar sum towards the partnership capital, he had signed and written the memorandum in question, without, however, having received any sum of money. The entry was not stamped and attested, because it was intended to have the whole transaction duly attested and completed when land could be procured for the purposes of the kiln, and it was only then that the money was to be paid over to him. He further alleged that, as no land could be secured for the new kiln, the money was not taken by him, and that the plaintiffs have brought this suit taking undue advantage of this incomplete entry. This written statement is dated the 20th October 1916, but was not placed on the record till the 11th of December 1916, on which date Tunia Mal, plaintiff, and Rulia Singh were examined by the Court as parties. Tunia Mal insisted that the sum of Rs. 5,137 had been paid by him in cash to be re-paid with interest at the rate of annas 12 per cent. per mensem and denied that he had agreed to be a partner with defendant as alleged. He further stated that a sum, Rs. 37, was paid to Biru Mal, son of Idu, at the time when the entry was made, and named Ram Chand, Munshi Mal, Asa Ram and Prabhu Mal as the persons who were present when the money was paid and the entry made. Rulia Singh, on the other hand, denied having received the money, admitted having made the entry and reiterated his allegations that the transaction was an incomplete one, and that the entry had been made and left unstamped with the intention of having it duly stamped and attested after a site for the kiln had been acquired and the money had actually been taken. He also named Pir Bakhsb, Atra and others as being present when this entry was drawn up. After the parties had been examined, the Trial Court framed the following issues:—

1. Did the defendant borrow Rs. 5,137 and agree to pay the amount with interest at the rate of annas 12 per cent. per mensem?

2. Did the defendant make the entry sued upon without consideration and agree to take money afterwards?

3. What relief is the plaintiff entitled to?

After recording the evidence for both sides, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had discharged the onus placed on him and had proved that the sum of Rs. 5,137 had been advanced in cash to the defendant, and granted the plaintiffs a decree for the sum claimed. Against this decree Rulia Singh has preferred this appeal, and on his behalf we have heard Mr. Sheo Narain, while Bakhsbi Tek Chand has addressed us on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents.

Mr. Sheo Narain took us through the whole of the evidence on the record and contended that the onus being on the plaintiffs to prove that the money had actually been advanced, the evidence produced on their behalf was wholly inadequate to establish the fact. In addition to the plaintiffs' own statement there is the evidence of Munshi Mal, Asa Ram, Biru Mal, Bakhsbi Chumar, Bakhsbi Mal Bania and Ram Chand. After a careful consideration of the evidence of these witnesses we find it possible to believe what they say. Munshi Mal accounts for his presence at the time of the payment of the money by saying that he had gone by chance to purchase Re. 1 worth of powdered sugar. Asa Ram similarly states that he had gone by chance to the plaintiffs' shop to purchase cloth. Biru Mal is a relative of the plaintiffs and was in partnership with them at one time. His statement was that the defendant owed him Rs. 36 13-6 and that he had gone there to get this amount from him, apparently having heard of what was going to happen. Bakhsbi Chumar who claims to have been in the service of Rulia Singh at the time for a period of 14 or 15 days, says that it was during this period that he accompanied Rulia Singh to the shop of the plaintiffs and from there carried off three bags of rupees said to contain Rs. 1,000 each. In cross-examination he said that four days after this transaction he left Rulia Singh's service. He also distinctly remembers that each of the bags was said to contain the same number of rupees but that one bag contained Rs. 100 more than the others. Bakhsbi Mal is a collateral of the plaintiffs and had gone to their shop to purchase cloth and to make over some rice to a Jat whose name he does not know. As the notes made during the course of the examination of this witness by the Trial Court indicate, he is a clever person and was deliberately fencing with the questions put to him in cross-examination. Finally, there is the statement of Ram Chand who is said to have actually weighed out the money. This man's antecedents are not all that they might be, and his evidence does not impress us at all. We must, therefore, hold that the evidence produced by the plaintiffs in support of the first issue is wholly inadequate and unreliable. Mr. Tek Chand on behalf of the respondents contended that the onus of proving the failure of consideration should really have been placed on the defendant and in support of his contention he referred us to Mahabir Prasad v. Bishan Dayal (1) and Ram Chand v. Behari (2). No objection as to the onus was taken in the Trial Court. While we are in complete accord with the Allahabad ruling, we consider that the present case is distinguishable from that reported as Mahabir Prasad v. Bishan Dayal (1). Ram Chand v. Behari (2) was reversed on appeal as reported in Behari v. Ram Chander (3). The Allahabad case as well as Bisheshwar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (4) dealt with formally registered documents in which the receipt of consideration had been recited. In such cases we have no doubt that the onus would shift to the person alleging non payment. In the present case we have to deal with an entry in an account-book. The defendant is a raj or mason by occupation and, although he is able to read and write gurmukhi, it by no means follows that he is an acute business man, and we, therefore, are unable to agree with the learned Vakil's contention that the onus should have been placed on Rulia Singh to prove that he had not received the money.

In any event, we consider that the story told by Rulia Singh is not improbable and his statement as to what occurred at the time when the entry was made is supported by his witnesses, of whom Pir Bakhsh and Atra, Lambardar, are two. We have been unable to find any reason for doubting the correctness or veracity of the statements made by these two witnesses and their statements, supporting the statement of Rulia Singh, would, in our opinion, be sufficient to shift the burden of proof on to the plaintiffs. Mr. Tek Chand then contended that his clients had discharged the onus by the production of their account-books and he laid great stress on the fact that Rulia Singh had not only signed the entry but had re-copied the entry in his own handwriting immediately below the entry made by the plaintiffs. This circumstance has been given due weight to by us. We have also carefully considered the contention that, had Rulia Singh not received the money as he states, he should have in due course got the entry cancelled. A great deal has been said by both sides in regard to the account books, and Mr. Tek Chand has strongly urged that the said books are shown to be regularly kept and for that reason have considerable probative value. We are, however, unable to regard this as sufficient. Rulia Singh contended that in the brick kiln at Malerkotla the plaintiffs were partners with him, yet, in spite of the fact that former account-books were called for, it is said that no account books were forthcoming prior to the year Sambat 1971. As pointed out by Mr. Bheo Narain, the failure to produce these account-books is of material importance, for if they had been produced and, an examination of them, had disclosed the fact that Rulia Singh's statement was true that he had been in partnership with the plaintiffs, his present statement that it was the intention of the parties to start another kiln, also in partnership, would be considerably strengthened. The non-production of the books, therefore, in our opinion, weighs heavily against the plaintiffs, and whether their books are regularly kept or not is a matter of comparatively small importance.

Finally, after giving our best consideration to the arguments advanced by Mr. Tek Chand and a careful examination of the record, we have arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiffs have failed to prove their case, and we accordingly accept this

Interest—Rate stipulated in mortgage-bond excessive—Hardship, whether ground for disallowing rate.

In the absence of any evidence to show that a money-lender has unduly taken advantage of his position, mere hardship would not justify a Court in disallowing the rate of interest stipulated in a mortgage-bond, even when the transaction appears to be undoubtedly improvident. [p. 783, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Burdwan, dated the 24th of July 1918, modifying the decree of the Munsif, First Court, at Katwa, dated the 13th of October 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Hiralal Sanyal, for the Appellant.—The learned Subordinate Judge has committed an error in not allowing interest at the bond-rate. The recent Privy Council decision in Azis Khan v. Duni Chand (1) is conclusive on the point. The mere fact that the rate of interest was high is not sufficient to disallow the interest at the stipulated rate. The Court is powerless to give relief on ground of simple hardship. See also Palla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2).

Babu Bankim Chandra Mukherjee, for the Respondents.—I cannot question the correctness of the decisions cited by my learned friend nor is it necessary for me to do so. I would only draw your Lordships' attention to the finding of the Court of first instance that the defendant was a servant at the shop of the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the bond, and that he was compelled to take the loan at the exorbitant rate of interest. This point of view has not been taken into consideration by the lower Appellate Court. If the stipulation as to the rate of interest was made by reason of the advantage which the plaintiff took of his position, then, of course, he is not entitled to recover interest at the usurious rate. In this view, the case ought to be remanded.

Babu Hiralal Sanyal replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit upon a mortgage-bond and the only question relates to the rate of interest.

The rate stipulated in the bond was Rs. 28, annas 2 per cent. per annum with yearly rests. The Courts below have allowed simple interest at 12 per cent.

The principal amount was Rs. 60 and it swelled up to Rs. 1,770, annas 11, with interest at the bond-rate. The plaintiff laid his claim at Rs. 599, after giving up Rs. 1,170, annas 11.

The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed interest at the bond-rate, because there was ample security for the loan and the stipulation as to interest was harsh and unconscionable.

But, as pointed out in the recent Privy Council decision in Azis Khan v. Duni Chand (1), "it is difficult for a Court of Justice to give relief on grounds of simple hardship in the absence of any evidence to show that the money lender had unduly taken advantage of his position even when the transaction appeared to be undoubtedly improvident."

In the case of Palla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2), in considering the question of compound interest and unconscionable contracts, their Lordships, in the course of their judgment, observed: "Rs. 2 per mensem is by no means an unusual rate of interest in cases from India coming before this Board." (See also judgment of this Court in Second Appeal No. 2986 of 1916, decided by the present Bench on 26th August 1919), [Harendra Kumar Roy Choudhury v. Detendra Kumar Das (3)].

BEGAN V. FAIZ BAKHSH.

It has, however, been pressed before us that the Court of first instance found that the defendant was a servant at the shop of the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the bond, and that the defendant was forced to take the loan on usurious interest. It is contended that the plaintiff was in a position to dominate the will of the defendant as he was a servant at his shop and took advantage of his position at the time of the execution of the bond, and that the lower Appellate Court has not considered these questions.

We think, therefore, that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the Court may consider whether the plaintiff had taken advantage of his position at the time of the execution of the bond and dispose of the case according to law.

Costs to abide the result.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Shahpur, at Sargodha, dated the 18th May 1920, reversing that of Munsif, First Class, Shahpur, dated the 23rd February 1920.

Mr. Shuja ud-Din, for the Appellants

Mr. Hishon Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by Faiz Bakhsh, plaintiff, for restitution of conjugal rights. Faiz Bakhsh is a first cousin of Musammal Began, as will be seen from the following genealogical tree:—

The case for the plaintiff is that, about five years prior to suit, Musammal Began was married to the plaintiff and as she was then a minor and her father had died, Pir Bakhsh, father of the plaintiff, acted as her guardian. After that Musammal Began lived in the plaintiff's house till about a month prior to the institution of the suit when she was abducted by Hayat, defendant No. 2, who was also a cousin of Musammal Began, being her father's sister's son. The defence was a denial of the marriage and a statement that since her father's death Musammal Began had been living with her step-father, Ahmad, and had now been married to Hayat, defendant No. 2.

The first Court found that, after the death of Jodha, Musammal Sattan re-married Ahmad and that Musammal Began and her brother had since been living with their step-father; that Pir Bakhsh, father of the plaintiff, had no doubt had his son's nikah with Musammal Began read but that neither Musammal Began nor her mother knew anything about the nikah, and that since the girl denied the nikah and was entitled to repudiate a nikah performed in her absence on its coming to her knowledge, the defendant was now entitled to rescind the nikah. So the first Court dismissed the suit.

The learned District Judge says that it is not very clear from the judgment of the lower Court whether the Munsif found the marriage not proved or whether, considering all the circumstances of the case, he is not prepared to exercise his discretion in favour of the plaintiff. As far as I can see, the findings of the lower Court are perfectly clear, and the District Judge is, in my opinion, wrong when he takes it as the opinion of the lower Court that the plaintiff had failed to prove the alleged marriage. What the lower Court finds is, that a marriage ceremony took place but that it was in the absence of Musammât Began and that she had no knowledge of it. The District Judge goes on to hold that there was no plea of repudiation and that there could be none when the factum of the nikah was denied. He says that he has carefully considered the evidence produced by the plaintiff to prove that Musammât Began is his wife and that he sees no reason to reject it. He does not, however, come to any finding as to whether Musammât Began was present at the time of the marriage, or as to whether she had any knowledge of the marriage, so that on these points I think it is necessary to come to a finding of my own, for I consider that, if the marriage took place without Musammât Began's knowledge, she is entitled to repudiate it on its coming to her knowledge. In my opinion, although the defendant does not in her pleas state that if any nikah was read, she repudiates that nikah, the denial of the nikah must be regarded as an utter repudiation of any nikah that may have taken place without the knowledge of the defendant. That a nikah ceremony was performed I see no reason to doubt, but in other respects I am not prepared to rely on the evidence as to the presence of Musammât Began at the time of the nikah. Sher Khan, witness, states that ornaments and new clothes were put on Musammât Began at the time of the nikah, while the next witness says that no ornaments were put on and that the girl's clothes were changed one year later. The next witness, Bakhsh, even goes so far at the beginning of his evidence as to say that Musammât Sattan, the mother of the girl, was also present, though the plaintiff's father, on the contrary, has stated that Musammât Sattan was not present and was not invited to the nikah as she had re-married Ahmad contrary to the wishes of Pir Bakhsh. Kazi Ata Muhammad, who seems to be a respectable witness, was not himself present when the nikah was read but states that when Pir Bakhsh came to him and asked whether he could marry his son to Musammât Began, Pir Bakhsh told the witness that his sister-in-law had re-married and had taken her minor daughter to live with her. This seems to be a strong corroboration of the evidence produced by the defendant that, since her mother's re-marriage, Musammât Began had been living with her step father. I hold, therefore, that Musammât Began was not present at the time when her nikah to Faiz Bakhsh was read and that she has all along been living with her step-father. What appears to be the fact is, that the girl, having grown up and having been married to her cousin Hayat, or intending to marry Hayat, her uncle Pir Bakhsh, wishing to obtain her as a wife for his own son, got the nikah ceremony read in her absence and without her consent. The presumption is, that as she was not present she knew nothing about this, and there is nothing to show that she had any knowledge of any nikah having been performed. No doubt, she may have been told about the nikah subsequently but she was not bound to regard any such information as correct, so it cannot be said that she had knowledge of the factum of the nikah. She came into Court absolutely denying any marriage to Faiz Bakhsh and I consider that this denial is in itself not only a denial of the factum but should be regarded as a repudiation of any nikah ceremony that may have been performed.

I may note that the learned District Judge's remark that the union of cousins is favoured among Muslimans cuts both ways, as Hayat and Faiz Bakhsh are both first cousins of Musammât Began.

In conclusion, I note that, even if I am wrong in holding that the denial of the factum of the nikah should be regarded as including a repudiation of the nikah, still in the exercise of my discretion, I would not give a decree to the plaintiff in the present case, the facts found by me being that the girl was living with her step-father and that the nikah ceremony was read without her consent or knowledge.

I accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

A mortgage-deed consisted of three sheets of paper. The mortgagor signed the second sheet in the presence of two witnesses who also signed at the foot of the sheet as having witnessed the signature of the mortgagor. Then some addition was made and a third sheet was added including other properties in the mortgage. The third sheet was signed by the mortgagor in the presence of the same witnesses who had signed the second sheet:

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 11th of November 1918, reversing the decree of the Munsif, Fourth Court, at Burdwan, dated the 10th of October 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Upendra Narayan Bagchi, for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage bond. The present appellant is a puisne mortgagee. Defendant No. 1 executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff in 1310. The first Court dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit. The question before you is as to what constitutes proper attestation of a document. The document at first consisted of two sheets and the last sheet was signed by the mortgagor in the presence of the attesting witnesses who also signed their names at the foot. Subsequently, owing to some additions in the terms of the deed, another sheet had to be added to the document. The third sheet, however, was signed by the mortgagor alone in presence of those attesting witnesses who did not sign it. The addition was with respect to properties which were mortgaged to the present mortgagee-appellant. My point is, that the mortgage was not valid and effective as regards the properties mentioned in the third sheet which was signed by the attesting witnesses. The provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act are compulsory. The document, in order to be valid and operative in law, must be signed by the mortgagor and at least two attesting witnesses. It has been held in several cases that the provisions of section 59 must be strictly fulfilled. Reads Gosh on Law of Mortgages: Notes on section 59. Refers to Shamu Patter v. Abul Kadir Rowthan (1)

Babu Karunamay Basu, for the Respondent.—I submit there has been sufficient compliance of the provisions of section 59. The case in Shamu Patter v. Abul Kadir Rowthan (1) rather supports my contention. Refers to page 61* where "attestation" has been defined. An attesting witness must be present and see what passes and shall, when required, bear witness to the facts. In this the mortgagor signed in the presence of the attesting witnesses who had already signed on the previous sheet. This, I submit, is sufficient compliance of section 59, which does not require that the attesting witness must sign on every page of the document.

Babu Upendra Narayan Bagchi replied in brief.
JUDGMENT.

GREAVES, J.—This is an appeal by a puisne mortgagee, defendant No. 2. The first defendant executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff on the 10th Sravan 1310. The document consisted of three sheets. The facts as found are as follows:—

The mortgagor signed the second sheet in the presence of two witnesses who wrote their names at the foot of the document as having witnessed the signature of the mortgagor. Then, apparently, some addition was made and a third sheet was added including other properties which I understand are comprised in the security given to the second defendant, the puisne encumbrancer. Then the third sheet was signed by the mortgagor in the presence of the same witnesses who wrote their names on the second sheet. But so far as third sheet is concerned, the names of those witnesses do not appear on that sheet.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant, that, this being so, the mortgage cannot be enforced so far as regards the properties comprised in the third sheet; and it is urged that there has been no compliance with section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act inasmuch as the witnesses are said not to have attested the third sheet. We have been referred to several authorities including the case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowathan (1).

Now, it seems to us that that case is no assistance to us with regard to the question we have to decide. All that that case decides is that it is not sufficient for the executant to sign his name first in the absence of the witnesses and afterwards to acknowledge his signature in their presence, and that this is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. But there are some passages with regard to certain cases which are cited in the judgment which have some bearing on the question we have to decide. At page 611* of that volume, a reference is made to the case of Bryon v. White (2), in which Dr. Lushington laid down that "attest" means the persons shall be present and see what passes, and shall, when required, bear witness to the facts." It is true that on the same page there is a reference to another case, the case of Burdett v. Spilsbury (3). The Lord Chancellor summed up the conclusion in these words:—"The party who sees the Will executed is in fact a witness to it; if he subscribes as a witness, he is then attesting witness."

I am inclined to think that what has happened in this case is a sufficient compliance with section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act; and I do not think that, to validate the third page of the mortgage-deed, it was necessary for the two witnesses to sign the third page of the mortgage-deed.

In these circumstances, the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent (Lahore), cl. 10—Appeal—Limitation, extension of—Court closed on last day of limitation—Appeal, whether can be presented on re-opening of Court.

The period of limitation for an appeal under the Letters Patent is governed exclusively by the rules made by the High Court. The provisions of the Limitation Act do not apply to such an appeal.

When the period of limitation for presenting a Letters Patent Appeal expired the High Court was in vacation and the appeal was presented on the day the Court re-opened:

Held, that the appeal was barred by time.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the decree of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, dated the 30th June 1920, passed in Civil Appeal No. 1668 of 1918.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in this case raises the preliminary objection that this appeal is time-barred, and the objection is valid.

The decree of the learned Judge in Chambers bears the date of 30th June 1920; the appeal to us was presented on 23th September 1920, long after the expiry of the prescribed period of 30 days.

Counsel for appellant urges that, even if the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act do not apply to Letters Patent Appeals, time should be extended as his client was not aware of the special rules applying to these appeals; moreover, this Court was in vacation when the period of thirty days expired and the appeal was presented on the day the Court re-opened.

In our opinion, the period for an appeal under the Letters Patent is governed exclusively by the rules made by this Court, which provide, inter alia, that no copy of the decree, order or judgment appealed from need accompany the memorandum of appeal. The avoidance of delay was treated as a paramount consideration and all probable causes of delay were swept from the path of the appellant.

Though the Court was in vacation when the thirty days expired, the Court Office was open, and even ordinary appeals to this Court can be and are presented to the office even during vacation.

We see no reason for extending time in this case, for ignorance of the law is the only excuse offered. Moreover, the time for extending the period for appeal is not now: application should have been made to a Judge at the time of presentation for leave to present after limitation.

Indeed, the memorandum of appeal having been presented after limitation should not have been entertained at all, but rejected forthwith. The rules are strict and were made so intentionally.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, 1st Court, Dacca.

FACTS appeal from the judgment.

Babu Haramda Chandra Guha (with him Babu Mukunda Lal Roy), for the Petitioner.—

The facts of the case are briefly these. The plaintiff petitioner applied for permission to sue as a pauper which was allowed by the Court of first instance. The other side moved this Court and obtained a Rule which was ultimately discharged. Subsequently, the opposite party applied for a review of the order of the lower Court on the ground that he was not allowed an opportunity to cross-examine the plaintiff. The review was granted, against which order the present Rule was obtained. The original order granting the plaintiff permission to sue in forma pauperis was dated the 3rd August 1918. The Rule against that order was issued on 18th November 1918 and was discharged on the 31st January 1919. The application for review was made on the 6th November 1918 before the granting of the Rule of this Court. My contention is that Order XXXIII, rules 5, 6, of the Civil Procedure Code would apply. The opposite party cannot be allowed to cross-examine me on the merits of the case. He ought to be confined to the question of pauperism of the plaintiff. I submit, therefore, the order of the Court below is clearly illegal. Review should not have been granted on that ground. Then, as to the petition for review itself, it is barred. There were two other similar applications and it was not until 23rd June 1919 that the present point was taken. The application for review is, therefore, clearly barred by limitation. The whole proceedings tell harshly on the poor plaintiff who is sought to be deprived of his legal remedies against the opposite party.

Babu Brojolall Chuckerbutty, for the Opposite Parties, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order made by the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, by which he disposes of an application made for the review of an order made by his predecessor-in office on 3rd August 1918. The order arises out of an application made by the petitioner before us for permission to sue in forma pauperis. Permission was granted on 3rd August 1918 and the application for review was made by the opposite party who was the first defendant in the proposed suit. This application was made on the ground that when the petitioner—the applicant for permission to sue in forma pauperis—was examined under the provisions of Order XXXIII, rule 4, Code of Civil Procedure, he was refused an opportunity of cross-examining the applicant on the merits of his claim. In the cases reported in Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Harish Chandra Acharjee (1) and in Jogenāra Narayan Ray v. Durga Charan Guha (2) it has been held that the Court, in considering the question whether the applicant has a good subsisting cause of action, must take into consideration not merely the allegations made in the plaint but also the allegations made by the applicant when and if examined under Order XXXIII, rule 4. It follows from these rulings, from the provisions of Order XXXIII, rule 7 (2), that on general principles, when the opposite parties contend that the applicant has no subsisting cause of action, they are entitled to test the statement that he makes in his examination under Order XXXIII, rule 4, by cross-examination. This ground, therefore, on which the petitioner in the Rule supports the Rule must, we think, fail.

It is, then, suggested that the application for review is barred by limitation, but that is not so. The application for review was made on 6th November 1918 and was followed by two subsequent applications on 13th June 1919 and 2nd July 1919. But these are to be regarded not as fresh applications in review but as setting out grounds on which the application made on 6th November 1918 is to be supported, those grounds not having been clearly set out in the original application.

Both the grounds taken in support of this Rule, therefore, fail, and the Rule is accordingly discharged. We make no order as to costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 115, 209—Principal and agent—Death of principal—Agent, authority of, whether revoked—Party entering into contract with agent with knowledge of death of principal, whether can subsequently question agent's authority—Estoppel.

The agent of a business man has authority, even after the death of his principal, to enter into transactions which are necessary or reasonable for the protection and preservation of the interest of the heirs of the deceased, and such authority continues till it is revoked by the heirs. A person who enters into a contract with an agent after the death of his principal, with knowledge of that fact, is estopped from subsequently impugning the transaction on the ground of the want of authority of the agent. [p. 742, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar, at Gurdaspur, dated the 11th of November 1918, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 23rd of February 1916.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mackay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The following facts will disclose the nature of the dispute between the parties. One Mr. Dyer was the sole owner of the Amritsar Distillery Company. He had in his employment one Mr. Carter, who was appointed Manager of the Distillery in 1909. Mr. Dyer died on the 21st January 1911. After his death Mr. Carter, the Manager, continued to work the Distillery in his capacity of an Agent and Manager during the years 1911 and 1912. In November 1911 he entered into a contract on behalf of the Amritsar Distillery Company with Messrs. Moosajee Ahmad and Company for the purchase of 200 tons of Java Molasses. The defendant Company under the contract agreed to supply the goods at Karaobi (F. O. R.) at the rate agreed upon. Out of these 200 tons 50 tons were supplied and delivered towards the end of December 1911. On receipt of the 50 tons Mr. Carter complained that the Molasses was not of the quality which the defendant Company had agreed to supply. The balance of 150 tons was yet to be supplied when a question as to damages on account of inferior quality of the 50 tons was raised. On the 27th of December 1911 a written contract was entered into between the two companies, according to which 1,300 tons of Java solidified Molasses of the best quality were to be supplied by the defendant Company, Moosajee Ahmad and Company, at Amritsar. The following terms were specified in the written contract :—

MOOSAJEE AHMAD &amp; COMPANY v. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL, BENGAL.

Rate—Rs. 2 5 0 per Maund net weight, Amritsar. F. O. R. Net weight to be the weight arrived at by deducting 6 seers per basket from the gross R/R weight.

Delivery—500 to 600 tons to be delivered during February 1912, to commence before February 7th and the remainder before the 31st March 1912.

Payment—Full amount of invoice (at Rs. 2-5-0 per Maund net) to be paid by the Amritsar Distillery Company within 15 days of receipt of Railway Receipt.

A clause was added for deduction on account of defective quality in the following words :—

"Should there be any red Molasses or reddish brown Molasses in the consignment, Messrs. Moosajee Ahmad and Company agree to make an allowance up to 12½ per cent. as the Manager, Amritsar Distillery Company, may consider fair, but if the Manager, Amritsar Distillery Company, observes that there is a percentage of red Molasses in any of the consignments he is to wire at once to the Manager of Messrs. Moosajee Ahmad and Company, branch Karachi."

This contract was signed on behalf of Messrs. Moosajee Ahmad and Company by their agent, Mr. A. H. Joonus. It may be stated that the defendant Company had their Head Office at Calcutta and a branch firm at Karachi, Mr. A. H. Joonus being the Manager of the latter. 150 tons, the balance of 200 tons under the contract of November, were subsequently delivered, but Mr. Carter objected to the quality of the Molasses supplied. The 1,300 tons contracted to be supplied under the contract of 27th December 1911 were not delivered at all, nor was the price of 150 tons paid by the Amritsar Distillery Company. The circumstances above-mentioned led to three suits.

(1) A suit by Messrs. Moosajee Ahmad and Company, against the Administrator-General of Bengal at Calcutta (who had, in the meantime, been appointed as Receiver of Dyer's estate, Amritsar Distillery, etc., on the 29th August 1913) for the price of 150 tons of Molasses supplied to the Distillery. This suit was originally instituted at Sindb, but the plaint was returned and was to be filed in the Court at Amritsar, where it was subsequently presented and registered as Suit No. 47 of 1915.

(2) A suit by the Administrator-General of Bengal, representing the Amritsar Distillery Company, for the recovery of Rs. 1,300 as damages on account of inferior and defective quality of the Molasses supplied by the defendant, Messrs. Moosajee Ahmad and Company. This suit was registered as No. 27 of 1914.

(3) A suit by the Administrator-General of Bengal, at Calcutta, representing the Amritsar Distillery Company, for the recovery of Rs. 10,606 14 3 by way of damages for non-delivery of 1,300 tons of Molasses under the contract of the 27th December 1911. In suit No. 47 of 1915 a decree for Rs. 7,556 9 9 with costs was passed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar in favour of Messrs. Moosajee Ahmad and Company. That decree has become final as no appeal has been preferred against it. In Suit No. 27 of 1914 a decree for Rs. 1,300 was passed in favour of the Administrator-General, at Calcutta, against the defendant Company. Against that decree an appeal was preferred to the Court of the District Judge at Amritsar, who having confirmed the decree of the first Court a second appeal has been preferred to this Court and has been numbered as 372 of 1917. In Suit No. 28 of 1914 a decree for Rs. 6,256 0 10 with costs has been passed against the defendant Company and first appeal No. 1494 of 1916 has been preferred against the decree.

Both these appeals have come up for decision before us, and have been argued together as the two suits were heard and disposed of together. By consent of the parties the evidence in the three suits was treated as applicable to each one of them. We will take up the second appeal first and, as some of the facts are common, we will summarise them in our judgment in this appeal.

The material allegations on which the suit for damages with respect to 200 tons was based were these, that on the 10th of November 1911 the defendant Company, namely, Messrs. Moosajee Ahmad and Company, agreed to supply the plaintiffs with 200 tons Java Solidified Molasses at Rs. 2-6-0 per Maund, that 50 tons out of these were delivered towards the end of December 1911, which were decidedly of inferior quality and against the terms of the contract. On the 27th December 1911 a contract for supply of 1,300 tons of Molasses was entered into between the parties and with regard to 150 tons, the balance of 200 tons, it was agreed subsequently that the defendants would supply them on the same terms as were embodied in the new contract for 1,300 tons. These 150 tons were delivered at the end of January 1912 and they were also of inferior quality of which due notice was given to the defendant. Under the contract of the 27th December 1911 a deduction of 12½ per cent. in case of the inferior quality of the goods was agreed upon. The plaintiffs accordingly claimed compensation at the above rate with interest "at 12 percent." The claim was laid at Rs. 1,300. The defendant Company resisted the claim on the following pleas: that the plaintiff disclosed no cause of action; that the Court at Amritsar had no jurisdiction to try the suit; that the suit was not entertainable as another suit involving the same issues had been filed against the plaintiffs in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sindh; that the defendant had agreed to deliver the goods at Rs. 1-12- F. O. R. Karachi; that the 150 tons were merged by the agreement of the parties into 1,300 tons contracted to be supplied under the agreement, dated the 27th December 1911; that the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim damages separately in respect of them, and that the contract for the supply of 1,300 tons was made subject to the confirmation by the defendant's Calcutta office, and as this had not been confirmed the plaintiffs were not entitled to rely upon its terms in any case.

The plea as to the want of cause of action was explained to mean that, inasmuch as Mr. Dyer, the Proprietor, having died, Mr. Carter, the agent, had ceased to have authority to enter into agreements on behalf of the defendant Company, and that, therefore, the Administrator-General, at Calcutta, had no right to maintain the suit. The plea as to the want of jurisdiction was based on the allegation that, according to the contract of November 1911, the delivery was to be made at Karachi, and that the defendants had their Head Office at Calcutta and a Branch Office at Karachi, and that, therefore, the suit could not be instituted at Amritsar.

The Trial Court framed six issues, namely:—

- (1) Does the plaintiff disclose no cause of action against the defendant, or, more clearly, has the plaintiff no locus standi to sue the defendant?
- (2) Has this Court no jurisdiction to try the suit?
- (3) Is this suit barred by reason of a previously instituted suit between the parties based on the same facts, pending in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sindh?
- (4) Does the plaintiff's suit not lie in respect of 150 tons of Molasses by reason of the contract relating thereto having merged into another contract entered into on the 27th December 1911 for supply of 1,300 tons?
- (5) Was the Molasses, supplied by defendant, of inferior quality and against the terms of the contract?
- (6) If not, has the plaintiff suffered a loss of Rs. 1,300?

After a careful consideration of the correspondence between the parties and other evidence on the record, the Trial Court decided all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the claim for Rs. 1,300.

An appeal was preferred to the lower Appellate Court which has upheld the decree of the Court of first instance.

The defendants have, therefore, come up in second appeal to this Court. The pleas raised in the Courts below have been reiterated in this Court and we are called upon to decide almost all the issues involved in the case. Nothing need be said as to the plea involved in Issue No. 3 as it was not serious.

MOOSAJEE AHMAD & COMPANY V. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF BENGAL.

ly urged in the Courts below and is not pressed before us. The three important pleas which have been strongly pressed before us, are those involved in Issues Nos. 1, 2 and 4, and we shall proceed to give our decision upon those pleas.

The first issue raises the question of the locus standi of the plaintiff to maintain the suit. It is argued that, as the principal had died before the contracts sued upon were entered into, Mr. Carter, the agent, had ceased to have authority to enter into them on behalf of the Distillery Company, as no authority had been given to him by the legal representatives of the deceased principal. The decision of this question depends upon the true construction to be placed on section 209 of the Indian Contract Act of 1872. The section provides that :

"When an agency is terminated by the principal dying or becoming of unsound mind, the agent is bound to take on behalf of the representatives of his late principal, all reasonable steps for the protection and preservation of the interests entrusted to him."

We have to decide whether, entering into a contract for the supply of Molasses in order to keep the Distillery going, was a reasonable step for the protection and preservation of the interests of the representatives entrusted to Mr. Carter. We have no manner of doubt as to the meaning of this section and we are clearly of opinion that it was a reasonable step for Mr. Carter to take. The law is thus stated in section 492 of Story on the Law of Agency :

"Nevertheless, there are cases, in which the agent, although he has knowledge of the death of his principal, not only may, but ought to, act in the business entrusted to him. As, for example, if one is charged with gathering the vintage of another, and hears of the death of his principal at the very time, when the vintage cannot properly be deferred as the grapes of the country are then fit to be gathered, and there is not time to advise his heirs thereof, who live at a distance, then it will be the duty of the agent to gather the vintage, notwithstanding such death."

This passage is quoted from Pothier. This rule is further elucidated in section 493 of the same book, where it is thus stated :—

"Pothier adds another most important exception to the rule, as applicable to the business of commerce. Although (says he), regularly, every mandate ends with the death of the person giving it, yet it has, for the benefit of commerce, been established, that the commission of these agents (or mandatories) shall last even after the death of the merchant, who appointed them, until it is revoked by the heir, or other successor."

In this case, instead of the mandate being revoked, the act done by the agent has been ratified by the Administrator-General as the representative of the deceased principal. This rule is based on sound common sense and the Legislature has embodied it in section 209 of the Contract Act. Moreover, the defendants, with their eyes open, entered into the contract with Mr. Carter, who professed to act on behalf of the Distillery and in the interests of the representatives of his late principal. The defendants themselves fully recognized the authority of Mr. Carter to act on behalf of the estate and sued the Administrator-General for the price of 150 tons supplied by them to the Distillery. It is too late for them to raise the question of want of locus standi. They are estopped and cannot be allowed to raise the plea. We, therefore, decide the first issue against the appellants.

In order to decide the second issue, raising the question of jurisdiction, we must first decide Issue No. 4. The decision of this issue depends upon the construction to be placed upon the voluminous correspondence between the parties and the oral evidence given in the case. The plaintiff's contention is, that 1,450 tons were to be supplied, namely, 1,300 tons under the contract of the 27th December 1911 and 150 tons under the previous contract of November 1911, and all that was agreed upon between the parties by way of the modification of the previous contract was that the balance of 150 tons was to be supplied according to the terms of the later contract at Amritsar. The defendants, on the other hand, contend the 150 tons, according to the agreement, formed part of 1,300 tons and no more than 1,300 tons was to be supplied. Both the Courts below, upon a consideration of the correspondence and the oral evidence, have come to the conclusion that 150 tons were not merged in the contract of December in the sense that only 1,300 tons were all that had to be supplied. It is common ground that the alleged modification was not affected by the written contract, dated the 27th December 1911, Exhibit P.-4, printed at page 8 of the paper-book of Appeal No 1494 of 1914. There is no mention of the 150 tons in the contract. It is, however, urged that the alleged merger took place subsequently. We have carefully considered the effect of the Exhibits D.-11, D.-14, D.-15 and D.-16 upon which a great deal of reliance was placed. We have also referred to Exhibits D. 10 and P.-98 along with the other documentary and oral evidence to be found on the record, and we find ourselves in entire agreement with the Courts below as to the conclusion arrived at on the evidence. In one respect only we have to differ from the Courts below. By an oversight those Courts have treated the entire 200 tons as being subject to the terms of the contract of the 26th December 1911 and have given a decree for damages in respect of the defective nature of the 50 tons of Molasses also. It is admitted by the plaintiff's Counsel that the modification of the previous contract related to 150 tons only. Therefore, the contract relating to 50 tons previously delivered was to be completed at Karachi and not at Amritsar. We, therefore, hold that as regards 150 tons the suit was rightly brought at Amritsar, but the Court had no jurisdiction to decide the dispute as to 50 tons.

The finding as to the inferior quality of the Molasses supplied is a finding of fact. We must, therefore, accept it as conclusive. The amount of damages has been properly assessed and we accept the finding as to that also. The item representing the damages assessed in respect of the bad quality of the 50 tons must, therefore, be deducted from the total sum assessed. We accordingly accept the second appeal in part and modify the decree of the lower Courts by deducting Rs. 325 from Rs. 1,300 and pass a decree for Rs. 975 with costs. We allow no costs to the appellants as their appeal has substantially failed.

Increased rent, due from which recoverable.

Where a kibaliyat provides for the payment of increased rent on the measurement of the land leased, such increased rent can only be claimed from the time the land is measured, and not from any anterior date. [p. 744, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Kibulna, dated the 10th of July 1918, modifying the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 30th of July 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Baba Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury (with him Babi Lilit Mohan Banerjee), for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They are the superior landlords of the jote. The facts are these. The plaintiff let the lands in dispute in se ganti jots to the defendants. At the time of the Settlement of the lands it was arranged that the se-gantidar would pay Rs. 300 for 300 bighas of land. The area of the land is 633 bighas. The plaintiffs by this suit claim proportionate enhancement according to the terms of Settlement. The registered kibaliyat was dated 1898. I purchased the ganti interest at a rent sale and so I sue as the gantidar. It was a personal contract. The measurements of the lands have been made not in this suit but in a previous suit. The defendants admitted that they are in possession of 633 bighas of land. All that the clause in the lease about enhancement requires is that measurement will have to be made. I submit the measurement made in course of the previous suit fulfils the terms of the lease. It is not necessary that a fresh measurement is to be made before I am entitled to claim increase of rent. The term in the lease should not be so strictly construed.

Dr. Jalunath Kanitlal, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

DATTATRAYA SITARAM GADKARI v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACIG. C. J.—We are of opinion that the decree made by the District Judge in this case must be affirmed.

The plaintiffs claim additional rent for increased area. That claim is based on a contract of tenancy, dated the 28th April 1898, entered into between the predecessors of the defendants on the one hand and the Sardars on the other. That kabuliat contained a provision to the following effect: "You have let out the said 300 bighas of land at a rental of Rs. 1 per bigha including cesses aggregating Rs. 300... If the rent-land is measured by your landlords, (i. e. the Bhanja gantidars) we shall accept the same and pay for increased land at the aforesaid rate." The tenancy of the Sardar has come to an end and the interest of the Bhanja gantidars has vested in the plaintiffs. Consequently, the plaintiffs are entitled to increased rent for increased land, when the condition precedent has been fulfilled and not earlier, namely, when there has been measurement of the land by the Bhanja gantidars or their representatives-in-interest, namely, the present plaintiffs. It is conceded that there was no such measurement before the suit was brought. Consequently, at the time of the institution of the suit, the plaintiffs had not become entitled to claim any increased rent for any increased land. The decree of the District Judge must, therefore, be affirmed. The plaintiffs can exercise the right originally vested in the Bhanja gantidars at any time and will thereafter be entitled to increased rent for increased land.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal, delay in filing—Sufficient cause for extension of time—Appeal filed in wrong Court—Good faith, what is.

Where the delay in filing an appeal is due to the fact that the appeal was at first filed in a wrong Court, this is a sufficient cause for extending the period of limitation within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act provided it is shown that the appellant acted in good faith.

An appellant acts in good faith who files an appeal in a wrong Court acting honestly under the advice of a Pleader.

"In good faith" in this connection, does not mean "without due care or attention", but means "honestly" though it may be negligently.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—We think that this appeal must be allowed. The learned Judge thought that because the question as to which Court the appeal lay was not involved in doubt, therefore, there was not sufficient cause for the appellant not preferring the appeal to the Court of the District Judge within time. But that is not, in my opinion, the right criterion in cases of this kind. I do not think that the learned Judge has read the remarks of Mr. Justice Jardine (Dadabhai Jamsetji v. Maneksha Sorabji (1)) in the way in which they should be read. He has not attached the right meaning to the words "in good faith." I think that the appellant was entitled to rely upon the advice of his Pleader that the appeal lay to the High Court and a party cannot be said to be acting without good faith because he relies upon a person whose status entitled him to give advice to litigants. It may be that the Pleader ought to have known that the appeal lay to the District Judge. But there, again, some questions may appear to be so entirely free from doubt to one person, that only one opinion is possible, and yet another may equally well come to a different conclusion. I do not think it can be said that the appellant has acted in such a way that he should be debarred from his right to appeal. In Ram Ravi Jambhekar v. Pralhaddas Subkarn (2) their Lordships say: "We feel unable to accept the argument for the appellant that because the mistake made in filing the suit at Cawnpore was an error of law, that the suit was not a bona fide one. It was a stupid, though not an unaccountable, blunder; but the ignorance of law, or the ill-advice of a Pleader, does not, in our opinion, necessarily or prima facie establish a want of good faith" and I do not think that Mr. Justice Jardine [Dodabhai Jamsetji v. Maneksha Sorabji (1)] used the words "good faith" in the sense that the District Judge thought he did, that is to say, as meaning without due care and attention. Usually, no doubt, the presiding Judge has to use his discretion whether there is sufficient cause or not in excusing delay; but in this case I think the Judge erred in law.

The appeal must be allowed and the case sent back to the District Judge to be heard on its merits.

Costs to be costs in the appeal.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree. The Allahabad High Court no doubt has ruled that the presentation of an appeal to a wrong Court through a mistake in or ignorance of law is not a "sufficient cause" within the meaning of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act: Jag Lal v. Har Narain Singh (3). But this view has not been adopted by the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts which treat the matter as depending upon the circumstances of each particular case. This is not a case in which the appellant lost time in appealing against the judgment that the appeal lay to the District Court and not to the High Court so as to fall within the view taken in Daudbhai Musabhai v. Emnabai (4). Though, no doubt, there was carelessness in the matter, yet I think there is no reason to believe that the appeal in the High Court was not filed "in good faith," using those words in the sense given to them by the definition in the General Clauses Act, that is to say, honestly, though, it may be, negligently.

I concur, therefore, in allowing the appeal.

ENTAZUDDI SHEIKH—INSOLVENT—APPELLANT

versus

RAM KRISHNA BANIK AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 18—Sale by Receiver—Procedure.

A sale by a Receiver in whom the property of an insolvent vests under section 18 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is really a sale by the owner, and may be held either by auction or by private treaty and need not be held in the manner provided for sales in execution of decrees under the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 746, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Faridpur, dated the 15th of July 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nilratan Banerjee, for the Appellant.—I submit that occupancy holding and under-*raiya*ti holding cannot be legally held in that way. As no notice was served and no sale proclamation was published, the sale cannot stand. Unless sale proclamation is published, the intending purchaser cannot come up. Without the landlord's consent the sale is bad. The under-*raiya*ti holding is not at all saleable. As regards occupancy holding, I am part holder. Without landlord's consent, it cannot be sold. There is nothing to show that the landlord gave consent. The Receiver has nothing to do with the case. He cannot be allowed to oppose the case.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. O. P. Gibbons, (Advocate-General) and Babu Dwarkanath Chatterbutty and Surendranath Guha, for the Receiver.—The statement as to under-*raiya*ti holding is not supported even by his schedule. Under section 20 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Receiver shall sell insolvent's property,—he has to sell at once. He does that with the consent of the Court. It is a holding which can be sold. Here the Receiver is in place of tenant. Under the ruling of the Special Bench of your Lordships the tenant's consent is not necessary.

Babu Nogendra Nath Ghosh, for the Purchaser.—I beg to submit that the insolvent took a month's time to bring up his witnesses.

Babu Nilratan Banerjee in reply.—The Receiver's report shows that the lands were not only occupancy holdings. The report also shows that the lands were all along transferable. He relies on landlord's consent. But there is nothing to show that such consent was taken.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order made by the District Judge of Faridpur on 15th July 1919, by which he confirmed the sale of certain occupancy holdings being the property of an insolvent vested in a Receiver under the provisions of section 18 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. In the Court below the District Judge dealt at great length with the saleability of occupancy holdings without the consent of the raiyat. That matter has now been concluded by the decision of a Special Bench in the case of Chandra Benode Kundu v. Ala Bux* not yet reported. The result is that before us nothing has been said on that point, and the contentions advanced by the learned Pleader for the insolvent are these, (1) that the insolvent is only a part-owner of these occupancy holdings; (2) that some of the properties sold are not occupancy holdings, but under-raiyati holdings; (3) that there is no evidence that the landlord gave consent to the sale, (4) that no sale proclamation was issued, and (5) that the Receiver is not a necessary party.

Nothing need be said with regard to the last point.

If it be the case that the insolvent is only a part-owner of these occupancy holdings it follows, on the principle laid down in the Full Bench case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (1), that no consent of the landlord is necessary to the sale. What has been sold by the Receiver in these proceedings is the right, title and interest of the insolvent, and whether he is the sole owner or only a part-owner of the occupancy holdings is a matter which was not gone into in the Court below and need not be discussed by us in this appeal. The question is one which may have to be decided should the alleged co-owner of the insolvent claim an interest in the property sold. Such decision, if necessary will have to be had, in separate proceedings, certainly not now.

The judgment of the Court below proceeds on the assumption that a sale by a Receiver is one which should be held in the manner provided for sales in execution of decrees under the Civil Procedure Code. But that view, for which no authority has been placed before us, appears to be a mistaken view. Sales by a Receiver in whom the property of the insolvent is vested are really sales by the owner and may be held either by auction as in the present case or by private treaty. When he proceeded to sell, the Receiver satisfied himself that he had obtained the consent of the landlord to the sale. That was sufficient for his purposes and is also sufficient for us in these proceedings.

Whether some of the properties were, in fact, under-raiyatis is a question that was not raised before the Court below, certainly there is no trace of any such question in its somewhat voluminous judgment. If there be any under-raiyatis amongst the properties sold, we can, as at present advised, see no reason, for holding why, at the instance of the Receiver, and with the consent of the landlord such under-raiyatis should not be sold.

This sufficiently disposes of the appeal that has been presented to this Court by the insolvent and we now dismiss that appeal with costs. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs to be divided into two equal moieties—one moiety to the Receiver and one moiety to the auction purchasers who have appeared.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL NO. 63 OF 1918.

MULLICK, J.—Appeal No. 63 arises out of Suit No. 88 of 1917, which was instituted before the Subordinate Judge of Patna on the 23rd February 1917. Appeal No. 72 of 1918 arises out of Suit No. 89 of 1917, which was instituted on the same date before the same Subordinate Judge. Although both suits have been disposed of by one judgment, it will be convenient in this Court to keep the cases separate.

We take up Appeal No. 63 first. In this case the subject-matter is a hundi for Rs. 5,000 said to have been drawn on the 5th August 1916 by the firm of Mirzamal-Harbhagat Dass of Bhagalpur against a firm in Calcutta, trading under the name and style of Suraj Mull-Har Prasad. It has been found by the Subordinate Judge that this sum was advanced as a loan by the Bank of Bihar, carrying on business at Patna, to the drawer Mirzamal-Harbhagat Das through defendant No. 1, Baijnath Prasad. The actual amount paid in cash was Rs. 5,000 less a sum of Rs. 46 4-0 which was deducted by the Bank on account of interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the loan till the date of maturity, a period of 63 days. The plaintiff-Bank, however, in their plaint assert that the defendant No. 1, Baijnath Prasad, was the real borrower, and that the hundi was received by the plaintiff as security for the loan. It appears that when the money was advanced, the signature of the acceptor was not upon the hundi, and it was sent to Calcutta in order that the acceptor might complete the document. The evidence is that one Sriballav, who has been examined as a witness in this case on behalf of the defendants, first of all accepted on behalf of the firm of Ramrishdas-Chimanbux, but subsequently cancelled this acceptance and endorsed on the bill the name of the firm of Suraj Mull-Har Prasad. There is an allegation that two or three days previously Suraj Mull-Har Prasad had been asked to accept the hundi but that they had declined to do so. Why Sriballav, notwithstanding that refusal, endorsed the firm's name has not been explained, but the fact remains that he did do so. On the 12th September Suraj Mull-Har Prasad appear to have discovered that Mirzamal-Harbhagat Dass were insolvent and that they had no credit with their firm, and they accordingly, through Mr. N. C. Das, an Attorney in Calcutta, addressed a letter to Lakshmi Nath Pandit, the Agent of the Bank of Bihar, in Calcutta, repudiating the hundi and asking Lakshmi Nath to bring it to them so that the acceptance might be cancelled. There is evidence that the day before this, namely, the 11th September, Lakshmi Nath Pandit had, through a Notary Public, Mr. W. G. Ross, called upon Suraj Mull-Har Prasad to signify confirmation of acceptance. Upon Suraj Mull-Har Prasad's refusing to do so, an endorsement was made upon the document by the Notary Public to the following effect:—"Answer given, not the signature of the right person, decline to accept."

The present suit was thereupon brought for a sum of Rs. 5,122-6-0 on account of the principal and interest and the notarial charges incurred.

Defendant No. 1, Baij Nath Prasad, in his written statement admitted that he had received the money on behalf of Mirzamal-Harbhagat Dass and had delivered it to them and he repudiated any liability to the plaintiff.

Defendant No. 2 admits drawing the hundi and receiving the consideration money. Defendant No. 3, Suraj Mull-Har Prasad, deny liability on the ground that Sriballav had no authority to sign their name on the hundi.

SURAJ MULL-HAR PRASAD V. BANK OF BIHAR.

The Subordinate Judge finds that Sriballav had authority to sign and has decreed the suit against Suraj Mull-Har Prasad and defendant No. 2 for the full amount. He has declined to decree interest on the ground that, as the hundi was a collateral security for a prior debt, interest cannot be chargeable under section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, and there being no stipulation making interest payable otherwise, the claim for interest must fail. As against defendant No. 1 the suit has been dismissed.

The present appeal is preferred by defendant No. 3 and the plaintiff prefers a cross-appeal in regard to the interest disallowed.

Now, the first question raised by the learned Vakil for the appellants is that, upon the evidence, it ought not to have been held that Sriballav had authority to sign the hundi on behalf of Suraj Mull-Har Prasad. On this point the evidence of plaintiff's Manager at Patna, Ram Chander Pandit, and Agent in Calcutta, Lakshmi Nath Pandit, and the evidence given by Sriballav himself show that Sriballav was in the habit of transacting the business of the firm of Suraj Mull-Har Prasad during the absence of the ordinary Manager, Ram Narayan. It is contended that, unless the plaintiff gives clear evidence to show that Sriballav had authority to sign hundis, his employment as one of the managers of the firm will not suffice. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, observes that Sriballav's minor son, Har Prasad Das, is a partner in the firm of Suraj Mull and that, unless Sriballav had been authorised to sign hundis, it is not likely that after he had cancelled the acceptance endorsed by him on behalf of the firm of Ramrichdas-Chimanbux, he would have consented to sign the name of Suraj Mull-Har Prasad. To me the point seems to be conclusively established by the letter written by Mr. Bose on 12th September 1916 to Lakshmi Nath Pandit. In that letter the Attorney, acting on behalf of Suraj Mull-Har Prasad, clearly admits that Sriballav signed the document on behalf of the firm, and reading the whole letter it is impossible to escape the conclusion that Suraj Mull Har Prasad felt themselves bound by Sriballav's act unless they could repudiate the transaction on the ground that fraud and misrepresentation were practised upon Sriballav. In the face of this document, it seems impossible to come to any conclusion other than that which has been recorded by the Subordinate Judge, and the defendant No. 3 is clearly liable for the debt.

To this the learned Vakil replies, that the hundi is not in conformity with the Negotiable Instruments Act inasmuch as the drawer's signature does not appear upon it. The document runs as follows:—
"From Mirzamal-Harbhat Das of Bhagalpur to Suraj Mull-Har Prasad at Calcutta Post. Greetings. We have drawn on you a hundi for Rs. 5,000 in figures, rupees five thousand which is twice (the sum of) 2½ thousand rupees in favour of the Bihar Bank Limited to whom payment should be made in coins according to custom on the 63rd day, from Saturday." Then follows the date "Savan Sudi 6 Saturday, Sambat 1973." Then follows the entry "Accepted hundi Suraj Mull-Har Prasad, Pandit Lakshmi Nath Jo."

It is true that Mirzamal-Harbhat Das have not signed the document, but, according to the authorities, it is not necessary that the name of the drawer should be separately entered upon the document, either at the foot or any other part of it. The word "signature" has not been defined in the Negotiable Instruments Act but the authorities explaining the word in connection with the Indian Limitation Act show that it is sufficient if the name of the drawer is introduced in the document to prove authentication, that is to say, to show the person to whom it is addressed that it has been made by a third person who purports to be bound by the document. This is the view of their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court in Mathura Das v. Babu L I (1), and to the same effect is the decision of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in Sadasook Agarwalla v. Baikantha Nath Basunia (2). It is quite clear that although Mirzamal-Harbhat Das' name does not appear at the foot of the document, the contents of the document indicate that Mirzamal intended to be bound by the document. But then it is said that the writing should have been proved. Now nowhere in the pleadings do we find that it was denied that the document was written by the authorized agent of the firm. If there had been a denial, evidence would, no doubt, have been given, and we must take it that proof upon this point was waived by the defendants.

The next point of law is, that as there was no consideration for the hundi, therefore, under section 43 of the Act, the document is void. The argument is put in this way. It is said that the specific case made in the plaint is that the negotiable instrument was collateral security for an advance made to the defendant No. 1; the finding of the Subordinate Judge at the trial being that the defendant No. 1 did not receive the money for himself but merely as the servant of defendant No. 2, the consideration proved is not the consideration which was alleged in the plaint, and that there has been in effect a failure of consideration which vitiates the transaction.

In my opinion, there is no substance in this argument. The plaintiff in effect asks for a decree upon a hundi for a loan made to either defendant No. 1 or defendant No. 2. It is true he made the case that defendant No. 1 was the principal, but his failure to prove that case ought not to affect the liability of the drawee if it has been proved that the loan was in fact made to defendant No. 2. It makes no difference to defendant No. 3 whether defendant No. 1 or defendant No. 2 received the money, and the acceptor cannot be heard to urge that, because the plaintiff mistook the status of defendant No. 1 and sued him as the principal the whole transaction is void for want of consideration.

With regard to the cross-appeal in this case, the plaintiff maintains that under section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, he is entitled to interest at 6 per cent. The Subordinate Judge thinks that to decree interest in this case would be to decree accretions or usufruct upon a collateral security. It is contended by the learned Vakil who appears for the defendants appellants that if the hundi was merely a security, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover only the debt secured by the document, that is to say, the principal sum advanced by the Bank. I think this argument must prevail. The hundi does not mention any interest, and, accepting the case made by the plaintiff in his plaint, it cannot be security for more than the debt as it stood on the 5th August 1916. The decree of the Subordinate Judge, therefore, upon this point is correct and the cross appeal must fail. The cross-appellant is, however, entitled to interest pendente lite.

The result is that the Appeal No. 63 is dismissed and the cross-appeal also is dismissed as regards interest prior to the date of the suit but is allowed as regards interest from the date of the suit till the date of the Subordinate Judge's judgment; that is to say, the plaintiff will be entitled to interest upon the sum of Rs 4,953-12-0 from the 23rd February 1917 till the date of the judgment, 2nd March 1918, at 6 per cent. per annum and interest upon the total decretal amount at 6 per cent. from that date till the date of realization.

I have to draw attention to two matters in connection with this case. The first is, that the Subordinate Judge records in the deposition of Lachmi Nath Pandit that he identified the signature of Sriballav on the hundi. Now, nowhere upon the hundi does Sriballav's signature appear and it is clear that the Subordinate Judge was guilty of carelessness of the gravest description. The second matter is that in the paper-book before us there is (see page 7 of paper-book of Appeal No. 72 of 1918) an entry in the translation of the hundi to the following effect "Exhibit I, a signature of Sriballav." Now, as the document does not contain the signature of Sriballav at all it is clear that there was gross carelessness on the part of the officer who translated this document for the preparation of the paper-book.

Both matters will form the subject of departmental enquiry.

IN APPEAL NO. 72 OF 1918.

This appeal relates to a hundi, dated the 5th August 1916, drawn by the same Mirzamal Harbhagat Dass upon the firm of Ram Chander Sagar Mull. The hundi is in the same terms as the other hundi and the endorsement of acceptance runs as follows:— "Accepted hundi Ramchander-Sagar Mull." Then follows the signature of Pandit Lakshmi

SOBHA KANTA MISRA v. KARIMAN HALVAI.

Narayan. The Subordinate Judge finds that the hundi was presented to Ram Chander-Sagar Mull on the 14th August 1916. The money having been paid on the 5th August Ram Chandar-Sagar Mull denied acceptance and on the 11th September Mr. Rose, the Notary Public, called upon them to confirm the acceptance, and upon their refusal to do so recorded an endorsement to the same effect as in the hundi in Appeal No. 63. It has been found by the Subordinate Judge that Jai Narayan, the person who is alleged to have signed on behalf of Sagar Mull, had no authority, and that, therefore, defendant No. 3 in the suit cannot be bound. He has dismissed the suit against defendant No. 1 also on the ground that this defendant was merely a servant acting on behalf of Mirzamal-Harbhagat Dass, but he has decreed it against defendant No. 2 upon his own admission.

Now, Lakshmi Nath Pandit, the Manager of Calcutta Office of the Bihar Bank, gives evidence that Jai Narayan and Sagar Mull, who are two brothers, came to Lakshmi Nath's office and signed the acceptance on the 14th August. Sagar Mull denies this in his written statement which suggests that on the 14th August he was not in Calcutta at all but was attending to some business in Rajputana. When called at the trial he was obliged to admit that he was in Calcutta on that day. The order-sheet of the trial shows that on the 17th November 1917 the defendants were asked to put in cross-interrogatories for the examination of Lakshmi Nath in Calcutta. They failed to appear before the Commissioner, with the result that Lakshmi Nath was not cross-examined. No reason is given for their failure to cross-examine this most important witness, whose story, if believed, entitles the plaintiff to a decree against defendant No. 3. The learned Subordinate Judge lays considerable stress upon the circumstance that Lakshmi Nath could not have been personally acquainted with Jai Narayan and that he could not have known that Jai Narayan was a partner in the firm. The only evidence upon which the Court could have drawn any inference at all as to this point is the evidence of Ramchander Pandit, the brother of Lakshmi Nath, who says that he did not know Ram Narayan. It does not, however, follow from this that Jai Narayan was a stranger to Lakshmi Nath and that Lakshmi Nath's statement that Jai Narayan was a partner in the firm is incorrect.

In the absence, therefore, of any evidence to the contrary, I see no reason for disbelieving Lakshmi Nath's evidence that Sagar Mull came with Jai Narayan and was present when Jai Narayan signed the hundi. This disposes of the only point argued in this appeal, and the result is that it must be decreed with costs.

The arguments with regard to interest apply also to this case, but we think that the interest should be disallowed. The plaintiff will get a decree for the principal sum less Rs. 46-4-0, i.e., 4,953-12-0 with interest from the date of the suit till the date of the Subordinate Judge's judgment at 6 per cent. per annum, and interest thereafter at 6 per cent. on the total decretal amount till the date of the realization against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiff does not ask for any remedy against defendant No. 1.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree.

Will—Annuity, perpetual, payment of, out of specific property—Annuity, whether charge on property—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 101, 160, 161.

The operative words of a Will provided for the payment of an annuity to the first annuitant and to his sons, grandsons and so on in due order of succession, out of the rents and profits of certain specific property:

KASTURI MAL v. LAJJA RAM.

Held, that the intention was that there should be a perpetual annuity which constituted a charge upon the property specified in the Will.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Mymensingh, dated the 1st of October 1918, modifying the decree of the Munsif, First Court, at Mymensingh, dated the 12th of October 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mukundanath Roy (with him Babu Profulla Chandra Nag for Babu Indu Bhutan Eiswas), for the Appellant.—The annuity claimed by the plaintiff is not a perpetual annuity. It was payable as a legacy under a Will and was limited to the lifetime of the son of the testatrix. Then, again, the annuity payable to the plaintiff does not constitute a charge upon the property. And, lastly, the provision in the Will for the payment of a perpetual annuity is bad in law inasmuch as it offends against the provisions of section 101 of the Indian Succession Act, and cannot, therefore, be enforced.

Babu Jatindranath Lahiri, for the Respondents.—The Will itself makes it clear that the annuity is payable not only to the first annuitant but also to the heirs of the grantee generally. The annuity was thus intended to be descendible to the heirs of the grantee. The language of the grant makes it clear that the annuity was not intended to be limited in point of time. The Will further provides that the annuity is payable out of the rents and profits of certain specified properties. This is sufficient to constitute a valid charge on these properties. See Rajarajeswara Dorai v. Sundarapandiyaswami Thevar (1). Finally, section 101 of the Indian Succession Act, has no application to the facts of the present case. The suit is, therefore, rightly decreed by the Courts below.

Babu Mukundanath Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the present holders of certain properties the arrears of annuity said to be due to him. The suit has been decreed except as to a portion found to be barred by limitation in both the Courts below. The annuity in question is a legacy made under the Will of one Chandrabali Debya; and the questions urged before us are, first, that this annuity is not a perpetual annuity as held by the Courts below but limited to the lifetime of the son of the testatrix who died unmarried; secondly, that it does not constitute a charge upon the property, and, thirdly, that the provisions as to perpetual annuity offend against the provisions of section 101 of the Indian Succession Act. No doubt, as has been pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge, there is a reference in the Will to payment by the son of Chandrabali Debya; but that specific reference cannot be taken to limit in any way the generality of the operative words of this Will in which it is clearly provided that the annuity is to be received by the first annuitant, one Ram Yad Jamadar, and by his sons, grandsons and so on in due order of succession. These words make it clear that the intention was that this should be a perpetual annuity. It is further provided in the Will that this annuity is payable out of the rents and profits of the properties mentioned in the Will and this, as is held by the Courts below on the authority of the case reported as Rajarajeswara Dorai v. Sundarapandiyaswami Thevar (1), is sufficient to constitute a charge. The suggestion that the provisions under the Will as regards this annuity offend against the provisions of section 101 of the Indian Succession Act appears to be made in this Court for the first time. Section 101 does not appear to be at all applicable to the present case, the sections applicable being sections 160 and 161. For these reasons, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

(5), O. XXI, r. 63—Issues, framing of—Court, duty of—Execution of decree—Claim proceedings—Regular suit—Burden of proof—Hindu Law—Joint family—Debts incurred by father—Son, liability of.

It is the duty of the Court to frame proper issues arising from the pleadings in a case. [p. 752, col. 2.]

It is the duty of a litigant to produce evidence in respect of issues framed by the Court but he cannot be expected to produce evidence with regard to points not covered by the issues. [p. 752, col. 2.]

Where an executing Court can enquire into a question and does so and decides the question against an objector, then if the objector brings a regular suit to contest the correctness of the decision of the executing Court, the onus of proof lies on him. Where, however, there is no decision of the executing Court adverse to the objector, this rule does not apply. [p. 753, col. 1.]

In Hindu Law in order to render a son liable for his father's debts, the creditor must prove the existence of a debt due by the father, the mere existence of a decree against the father is not evidence against the son who was not a party to the suit in which the decree was obtained. [p. 753, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 12th May 1920, reversing that of the Mansif, First Class, Karnal, dated the 24th February 1919.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellant.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This judgment will cover the connected appeal No. 1666 of 1920.

Kasturi Mal obtained decrees against Niranjan Lal and in execution of those decrees attached certain property. Lajja Ram, the minor son of Niranjan Lal, brought objections against the attachment which were dismissed by the executing Court. He has now brought two regular suits for declarations that the property attached belongs to the joint Hindu family of which he and Niranjan Lal are members and is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decrees obtained against his father. The plaintiff alleges that the debts for which the decrees were obtained do not really exist, and that if they do exist, the debts were incurred for immoral purposes.

Both the lower Courts have concurred in finding that it is not proved that the debts are tainted with immorality. As regards the question whether the debts which form the basis of the decrees were really due by Niranjan Lal, the first Court framed no issue and did not discuss the point; so the first Court dismissed the suit. The learned District Judge went into the question of the existence of the debts and, coming to the finding that they were not proved, accepted the plaintiff's appeal and decreed the suits. The decree-holder has lodged a second appeal to this Court.

Counsel for the decree-holder does not deny that in such a case the plaintiff is entitled to challenge the existence of the debts, but he urges that if the plaintiff wanted the matter to be put in issue, he should have asked the first Court to frame an issue on the point. I think, however, that it is the duty of the Courts to frame proper issues arising from the pleadings. The plaintiff distinctly in the pleadings denied the existence of the debts and the first Court should have put the question in issue. Probably, because there was no issue with regard to the existence of the debts, the decree-holder produced no evidence on this point, and on his behalf it is urged in this Court that before it is held against him that the debts were not really due, he should be given an opportunity of producing evidence. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent it is urged that if the appellant wished to produce evidence on the point, he should have asked the lower Appellate Court to allow him to do so. I cannot, however, say for certain what was argued in the lower Appellate Court though certainly there is nothing in the judgment of that Court to show that the decree-holder asked for an opportunity of producing further evidence. Still, the fact remains that the point has been decided against the decree-holder without any issue being framed, and I think the District Judge should have asked the decree-holder whether he wished to produce evidence. It is the duty of a litigant to produce evidence in respect of issues framed by the Court and he cannot be expected to produce evidence with regard to points not covered by the issues. The case must, therefore, be remanded, so that the decree-holder may now have the opportunity of producing evidence with regard to the existence of the debts on which the decrees are based.

Counsel in this Court are not agreed as to the burden of proof, Counsel for the decree-holder urging that as the plaintiff was unsuccessful in his objections lodged in the execution proceedings, the onus probandi should be on the plaintiffs. This is, no doubt, the ordinary rule, see Ram-nath v. Bindraban (1), Gorind Almaram v. Kantai (2), Jamahar Kumari Bibi v. Askaran Boid (3) and Maung Po Hnyin v. Ma Hnyein (4), but in this particular case what the plaintiff is challenging is the existence of the debts. This was a point which the executing Court could not enquire into, as it could not, as an executing Court, go behind the decrees. Where the executing Court can enquire into a question and where it does so and decides the question against the objector, then, no doubt, when the objector brings a regular suit to contest the correctness of the decision of the executing Court, the onus of proof lies on him, but, as I have already shown, the executing Court could not go into the question of the existence of the debts, and so there is no decision of the executing Court on this point adverse to the objector.

On behalf of the plaintiff reliance is placed on Bhogwant v. Tursi Ram (5) which seems to me an authority directly in point. That judgment lays down that, in order to render a son liable for his father's debts, the creditor must prove the existence of a debt due by the father, and that the mere existence of a decree against the father is not evidence against the son who was not a party to the suit in which the decree was obtained. I hold, therefore, that the burden of proving that the father owed the debts lies on the decree-holder.

I remand both of these appeals for enquiry on the following issue:—

Were the debts, which form the basis of the decrees, due by Niranjana Lal?

The burden of proving this issue lies on the decree-holder and he should be allowed to produce evidence in proof of this issue in the first Court. The plaintiff will be allowed to produce evidence in rebuttal if he wishes to do so. The first Court, after recording evidence, should record a finding and then return the cases through the District Judge, who will hear arguments if the parties so desire and return the cases to this Court with his own finding on the issue.

The husband of a minor female mutwalli has, under the Muhammadan Law, no authority to act as mutwalli of the wakf estate, and any lease of that estate granted by him is void and not voidable. [p. 754, col. 2; p. 755, col. 1.]

Where, in answer to a suit for possession, the defendant contends that he has acquired a good title by adverse possession, the burden is upon him to allege and establish such title, and, if he fails to do so, he cannot set up a new defence for the first time in second appeal. [p. 755, col. 2.]

BIPIN BEHARI SAHA v. CHARU CHANDRA GHOSH.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sures Chandra Talukdar (with him Babu Gopal Chandra Das), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. Both the Courts below have decreed the suit. The present mutwalli of the wakf estate to which the lands in suit appertain being a minor lady, application was made for a temporary mutwalli during the lady's minority. In the meanwhile, the Judge appointed, pending that proceeding, one of the Court officers as a Receiver who leased the lands in suit to the plaintiff. My point is, that the Receiver so appointed was not properly appointed in accordance with law. If a Receiver has to be appointed certain formalities of the law must be gone through. There must be a decree. The lease was granted with the permission of the Court and I submit it is not open to the plaintiff to institute the present suit without the Court's permission. I have been on the lands for more than 12 years as a mourasi mokrari tenant to the full knowledge of the Receiver. The former mutwalli inducted me into the lands which I have been holding ever since. Under the circumstances, I cannot be evicted except with the express permission of Court. Refers to Upendra Krishna Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mahomed (1). My next point is, that the lease not having been avoided the suit is not maintainable. Refers to Madhu Sudan Mandal v. Radhika Prosad Das (2).

Babu Mohendranath Roy (with him Babus Satyacharan Sinha and Abinash Chandra Ghose), for the Respondents.—The question of limitation involved in the last point taken by the other side was not raised before except that Article 134 is not applicable. Of course, the lease was executed in 1898 by the minor mutwalli. But I submit that question should not now be allowed to be raised as that would necessitate a further finding of fact as to when the lady became major. Further, regard being had to the pleadings, they cannot raise the question now. As regards the other question, I submit the learned Courts below were perfectly within the law in decreeing the suit.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—The subject-matter of this litigation is a tract of land included in a wakf estate. The plaintiff-respondent seeks to recover possession of the land on the strength of a lease, dated the 19th June 1912, while the defendant bases his claim on a lease granted to him on the 16th November 1898. The case for the plaintiff was that the defendant never had a title to the property, and that if he had any title as a lessee, his interest had been terminated by a notice to quit. There can be no doubt, in our opinion, that the plaintiff has established his title, while the defendant has failed to prove his allegations.

As regards the title of the plaintiff, we observe that the present mutwalli is a lady who is still a minor. Proceedings were instituted before the District Judge for the appointment of a temporary mutwalli during her minority, and during the pendency of such proceedings the Court granted a lease to the plaintiff through one of its officers who was appointed Receiver. A doubt has been suggested as to the validity of the appointment of the Receiver, but it is plainly needless to investigate that question. The essence of the matter is that the Court had seisin of the estate by virtue of the proceedings which had been instituted before it for the appointment of a temporary mutwalli who would manage the properties during the infancy of the permanent mutwalli. The Court was not only competent but bound to make suitable arrangements for the up-keep and administration of the estate in his custody. The lease granted to the plaintiff was thus in substance an act of the Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction and must accordingly be pronounced valid and operative.

As regards the title of the defendant, it transpires that the lease was granted to him at a time when the wakf properties were in the hands of the infant mutwalli. The husband of the lady, who was a minor at the time, took it upon himself to grant a permanent lease to the defendant, who had notice that the property was included in the wakf estate. It is plain that the husband of the infant mutwalli had no authority to act in the matter. A question was raised in the Court below as to whether he was the guardian of the person or the property of his infant wife. Under the Muhammadan Law, the answer must plainly be in the negative. But even if the answer had been otherwise, it is plain that, although the guardian of the lady could take charge of her person and of her own personal properties, he would have no authority to act as mutwalli of the wakf estate held by her. The grant to the defendant was consequently made by a person who had no authority to intervene in the matter, and there can be no dispute that a grant made under such circumstances is void and not voidable. Reference may in this connection be made to the decision of the House of Lords in President and Governors of Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts (3) where it was ruled that a lease of land belonging to an eleemosynary Corporation, not in conformity with the provisions of the third section of the Statute of Elizabeth (13 Eliz. O. 10), is absolutely void and not merely voidable. The principle enunciated in that case, though ignored in Shama Charan Nandi v. Abhiram Goswami (4), which was reversed by the Judicial Committee in Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan (5), has been repeatedly followed in this Court; Chaitan Singh v. Sadhari Monin (6), Mathewson v. Sri Ram Kanai Singh (7), Krishna Pramada Dasi v. Dwarka Nath Sen (8) and the same conclusion was reached in Madhu Sudan Mandal v. Radhika Prosad Das (2) and Ishwar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kanai Ghose (9). The defendant, consequently, has no title and cannot successfully resist the claim of the plaintiff.

The defendant finally contends that he has acquired a good title by adverse possession. The burden clearly lay upon him to allege and establish such title. That burden has not been discharged. This much is known that when his title as lessee commenced, the estate was held by an infant mutwalli, and at the present moment also the estate is in the hands of another infant mutwalli. Whether during the interval, the disability of the first minor ever ceased and if it ceased, at what time it terminated, has not been investigated. The defendant has invited us to remand the case to the Court of first instance for investigation of this point. We are unable to accede to his request. The litigation has already lasted for six years and the point now taken was not the ground urged in the Courts below to defeat the claim of the plaintiff. His contention, on the other hand, was that he had a valid title to the wakf property under the lease granted to him on the 16th November 1898. That defense has completely failed.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Applicant.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision. The facts are these:—Two persons, Ram Sarup and Manni Lal, were partners in a shop. A debt was due to the shop from the present applicant, Sarju Prasad. The two partners brought a suit against him and against another person. The applicant admitted the justice of the claim but the case had to continue as against the other defendant. It was finally withdrawn as against the latter and a decree was passed in favour of Ram Sarup and Manni Lal on the 17th of July 1917. Ram Sarup has now put the decree into execution as a surviving partner of the firm. An objection was taken by the judgment-debtor that the other partner of Manni Lal had actually died on the 7th of July 1917, that is, prior to the date of the decree and, therefore, the decree could not be executed. The Court below did not go into the question of fact as to whether Manni Lal did or did not die prior to the 17th of July 1917. It has held that, assuming that he did die on the 7th of July 1917, it is not open now to the defendant to object to the execution of the decree. The point taken before me is that a decree in favour of a dead person is null and void and cannot be executed. Order XXII, rule 3, shows that, where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, and where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub rule (1), the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. Assuming that Manni Lal was dead, the fact remains that Ram Sarup, one of the plaintiffs, continued the case, and a decree was passed in his favour as against the present applicant, and that decree is capable of execution. Attention has been called to the decision of a Bench of this Court in Imamuddin v. Sadarat Rai (1). That case does not apply to the facts of the present case. That was a suit in which there was a decree for pre-emption of the whole property which was in favour of certain plaintiffs against two defendants instead of three, all three being owners of the property. There being no decree against the representatives of the deceased defendant, the decree remained clearly incapable of execution as it was impossible for the Court to put the pre-emptors into possession of the whole of the property, but in the present case, however, even assuming that Manni Lal was dead before the decree was passed, his death wiped him out of the case. There remains the fact that Ram Sarup obtained a decree against the present applicant for the recovery of a certain sum of money and that decree is capable of execution. I, therefore, see no ground for interference in revision. The application is dismissed with costs.

KAMINI KUMAR CHANDRA V. REBATI RAMAN DAS.

Chandra Dutt), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of balance of pay for a certain period due to the plaintiff from the Municipality. The plaintiff's case is that he was the Head Clerk and Accountant on a salary of Rs. 50 p. m.; that he was suspended on the 25th November 1915, under order of the then Vice-Chairman without any sufficient cause, and was at first allowed subsistence allowance at the rate of one-fourth of the pay per month; that the plaintiff was ordered not to go out of Silchar, without permission of the Municipality; that he was removed from service on the 27th April 1917, but that they did not allow the plaintiff his pay for the period of suspension less that amount of allowance already paid to him. The defense was that the suit was barred by limitation; that the Municipal Commissioners have got full powers under the law to dismiss an officer under it at any time without giving any reason whatever, and that the present suit did not lie. The Courts below have decreed the suit. My point is that the plaintiff, at best, might have claimed damages or compensation. He cannot claim pay. He is not entitled to get anything by way of damages or compensation as that was not his pleading. Refers to Mohammad Zahoor Ali Khan v. Musmmat Thakooranee Rutta Koor (1), Jugul Kishore Lal Sing v. Kartic Chunler (2). Farther, the Municipal Commissioners had every good reason to suspend the service of the plaintiff. He had been proceeded against criminally though unsuccessfully. There were strong reasons for believing that he was guilty of misappropriating money. All these and other reasons justified the dismissal without assigning any reason whatever for such action which the Municipality had full powers to do.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Birendra Chandra Das), for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the Chairman of the Silchar Municipality in a suit instituted against the Municipality by the plaintiff for recovery of wages. The plaintiff accepted an appointment under the Commissioners on the 25th July 1895, and held various offices from time to time, till ultimately he was appointed to be the Head Clerk and Accountant on a salary of Rs. 50 a month. While he held such appointment, he was suspended on the 25th November 1915 under orders of the Vice-Chairman. He remained under suspension till the 27th April 1917, i.e., for a period of one year, five months and two days, when he was removed permanently from this post. No reasons were assigned for his suspension or removal. In the present suit, he sues to recover his wages from the 25th November 1915 till the 27th April 1917, less the amounts which were paid to him by way of compassionate allowance for five months and five days during the period of suspension. In our opinion, there is no answer to the claim.

It is not necessary for us to investigate the powers of the Municipality to dismiss servants, because the plaintiff does not seek to recover damages for wrongful dismissal. It is perfectly plain that as the plaintiff was not dismissed till the 27th April 1917 and as no reasons were assigned for that removal from his office, he is entitled to his wages during the whole of the period for which he was under suspension.

It was contended for the appellant that the Municipality was entitled to remove the plaintiff without notice and without assignment of reason. We are unable to uphold this contention as well founded on reason and principle. It has been held in England that if no custom or stipulation as to notice exists, and if the contract of service is not one which can be regarded as a yearly hiring, the service is terminable by reasonable notice. In support of this proposition, reference may be made to the case of Fairman v. Oakford (3) where Pollock, C. B., pointed out that in the case of clerks in superior positions three months is regarded as the period of reasonable notice [see also the observations of Abbott, C. J., in Huttman v. Boulnois (4)]. The same view has been taken in the cases of Perill v. International Land Credit Co. (5), Gardal v. Fontigny (6), Oriental Bank Corporation, In re, MacDowall's (3) (1860) 5 H. N. 66 at p. 635, 29 L. J. Ex. 45; 157 F. R. 134, 120 R. R. 747. (4) (1827) 2 Car. & P. 510. (5) (1867) 16 L. T. 647. (6) (1816) 1 Stark. 198; 4 Camp. 375.

case (7). It is further stated in the judgment of the Court of first instance, and that finding has not been disturbed by the Subordinate Judge, that no reasons were assigned for the removal of the plaintiff; it has not been found that he was removed for misconduct alleged and proved.

—Rent Court decree, whether "debt".

A Rent Court decree is a 'debt' within the meaning of section 10 (1) (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920.

First appeal from an order of the Additional Judge, Moradabad, dated the 24th July 1920.

Mr. Rama Kant Malhotra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The question for determination in the Court below was, whether certain money due from the appellant Munna Singh under the decree of a Rent Court, was or was not a "debt" within the meaning of section 6 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, No. III of 1907, or section 10 (1) (a) of the present Act, No. V of 1920. The learned Additional Judge, without giving any reasons, has said that he does not think that a decree passed by a Rent Court can be considered as a "debt" for the purposes of the Insolvency Act. We cannot conceive of any definition of the word "debt" which would exclude the decree in question from the operation of the provisions of the Provincial Act above referred to. The respondent apparently relies on section 193 of the Local Tenancy Act, No. II of 1901, read with section 56 (2), the repealing section of the Provincial Insolvency Act, No. III of 1907. A question might conceivably arise, as, for instance upon an application by the holder of the Rent Court decree for the ejectment of the tenant under section 17 (a) of the Tenancy Act, as to whether or not the leave of the Insolvency Court was necessary before such an application could be made. That question, however, is not before us. The debtor has brought his case within the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act; he has committed an act of bankruptcy by presenting his petition and he has proved the existence of a "debt", namely, this Rent Court decree, far in excess of the prescribed minimum of Rs. 500. He was entitled to his order of adjudication the legal consequences of the same to be left to work themselves out.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. I think I can understand the learned Judge's reason. I think, he regarded the Insolvency Act as a method of execution. As a matter of fact, it is a method of evading execution.

BY THE COURT.—We set aside the order of the Court below and adjudicate the appellant an insolvent. We return the record to that Court in order that proper proceedings in the insolvency may be taken.

A sale held ostensibly under the Public Demands Recovery Act, by order of a Certificate Officer, without notifying the date, time and place of the sale is a nullity, and section 37 of that Act is no bar to a suit to obtain a declaration that the sale is null and void. [p. 760, col. 1.]

Appeals against decrees of the District Judge, Rungpur, dated respectively the 19th of September and 8th of May 1918, reversing and affirming decrees of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated respectively the 26th of January and 27th of July 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chandra Ghose (Jr.) (with him Babu Surat Chandra Khan), for the Appellants. —The Public Demands Recovery Act, III of 1913, is a self-contained Act. The procedure for sales under the Act is laid down in the rules. In the present case the place and the hour of sale was not specified. The sale under such circumstances can at most be only an irregular sale. The remedy of the aggrieved party was in the Act itself. He cannot come to the Civil Court to get a declaration that the sale was a nullity. Such a suit is barred under the provisions of section 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act. I admit that the sale was held in contravention of rule 32 of the rules appended to the Public Demands Recovery Act, but still, the sale was a sale under the Statute and can be set aside only by the Certificate Officer. Refers to Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (1) and Surno Moyee Debi v. Dakhina Ranjan Sanyal (2). The present suit is, therefore, clearly barred under section 37 of the Act.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta (with him Babu Dinesh Chandra Ray, for the Deputy Registrar, and Biraj Mohan Mojomdar), for the Respondents, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for declaration that a sale held under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, on the 12th September, 1913 was a nullity. The Courts below have decreed the suit.

On the present appeal it has been contended that the suit is barred under the provisions of section 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act. In our opinion, this contention cannot possibly be sustained, as, in the events which have happened, the sale cannot be regarded as a sale under the Statute.

It appears that a date had been fixed for the sale of the property, but no sale took place on that date. Thereupon, on the 5th September 1913, the Certificate Officer passed the following order: "Put up for sale, but no bid in Court, Nazir or Naib-Nazir to sell locally within 12th September." At the sale which actually took place on the 12th September, there were no bidders, and the property in suit was sold along with five other properties for an aggregate sum of Rs. 55. The allegation of the plaintiffs is, that the particular property now in suit is worth at least Rs. 3,000. The appellant has contended that, although the sale was held in contravention of Rule 32 of the rules appended to the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, the sale was a sale under the Statute and can be set aside only by the Certificate Officer, and in support of this proposition he has referred to the cases of Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (1) and Surno Moyee Debi v. Dakhina Ranjan Sanyal (2). These cases are clearly distinguishable. In the first case, the sale was held before the expiry of the 30 days which should intervene between the publication of the sale proclamation and the actual sale. In the second case, there was no hour fixed for the sale as required by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. The present case, however, is very unlike the two cases mentioned. Here no date was fixed for the sale; no time was fixed for the sale; no place was fixed for the sale; for, although it was stated that the sale was to be held locally, this was meaningless, because the property to be sold was situated in six different places. Consequently, neither date, nor hour, nor place of sale was specified. Now, the Statute clearly contemplates a public auction, that is to say, an auction where members of the public will be in a position to offer bids in competition against each other. But if a sale is held, as was held in this case, without date, hour and place previously fixed it is clearly impossible for the public to attend and to bid. Under such circumstances, we cannot hold that this was a sale as contemplated by the Legislature; the sale was in substance a colourable exercise of the powers conferred on the Certificate Officer by the Statute. A sale of this description cannot be held to be a sale under the Statute, and section 37 is consequently not a bar to the suit. If the suit is not barred, then it is conceded that on the facts proved and undisputed, the decree of the Court of Appeal below must be sustained. The appeal is consequently dismissed with costs. The other two appeals also are dismissed with costs.

A deed of usufructuary mortgage provided for redemption on payment by the mortgagor of the mortgage-debt in the month of Jeth in any year. The mortgagor deposited the amount due in Court on the 22nd June 1910, the last day of Jeth, but as notice could not be served on the mortgagee within the month of Jeth, the mortgagee did not appear and the proceedings fell through, but the money deposited remained in Court. In 1916 the mortgagor brought the present suit for redemption and for damages for the last three years preceding the institution of the suit. The suit was dismissed on the ground that, as notice of the deposit could not be given to the mortgagee in the month of Jeth, the tender was not a valid tender. On second appeal:

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for redemption. The facts are not at all complicated and are shortly these:—The predecessors in title of the plaintiffs made a usufructuary mortgage of certain property on the 15th of July 1862. On the 22nd of June 1910, the last date of Jeth, the plaintiffs deposited in Court the requisite amount of the mortgage-money for payment to the mortgagees-defendants that being the last date of Jeth as stated above, notice could not be served on the mortgagees within the month of Jeth. The mortgagees did not appear and those proceedings fell through. The money, however, remained in Court all along. The plaintiffs-mortgagors brought a suit in the year 1915 for redemption of the mortgage and they claim damages for the last three years preceding the institution of the present suit. The defendants contended inter alia that the amount of the tender in the proceedings under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act was not enough and they further contended that the tender was not made at the proper time. The first Court came to the conclusion that the tender was a right one both as regards the amount and the time. It accordingly decreed the suit for redemption and for three years' mesne profits preceding the institution of the present suit. The mortgagees went up in appeal. The learned Judge of the lower Court, without entering into the question whether the amount tendered by the mortgagors was sufficient or not, came to the conclusion that, because notice of the deposit made by the mortgagors in Court on the last day of the month of Jeth could not have been given to the mortgagees in the month of Jeth, therefore, the tender was not a valid tender and, being as such inoperative, he dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs-mortgagors come here in second appeal and their contention is that the tender on the last day of Jeth by deposit in Court was a valid tender and that the suit has been wrongly dismissed. It was further contended on their behalf in argument that, in any event, they should have been allowed a decree for redemption from the beginning of the year succeeding the next month of Jeth. Before deciding this point we asked the Court below to submit to us a finding on the question whether the amount tendered by the mortgagors-plaintiffs by deposit in Court was sufficient or not, inasmuch as the lower Appellate Court had failed to decide this particular point. The finding has now come back and is to the effect that the amount deposited by the plaintiffs in Court was sufficient to discharge the mortgage. The only point which now remains for us to consider is, whether the amount deposited by the plaintiffs-mortgagors in Court on the last day of Jeth was or was not a sufficient tender within the meaning of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act to enable them to obtain possession of the property and damages up to next Jeth. A large number of cases have been cited to us but we do not think it necessary to discuss all of them as they are not strictly in point. There is no doubt that a suit for redemption can lie even without a tender as required by section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act; see Hait Singh v. Pehari Lal (1). Of course, at whatever time the suit might be instituted in such a case, the decree for redemption would only take effect from the time fixed in the decree, or in case of mortgages where any particular period of the year is fixed from which a mortgagee is to give up possession, from such a date next following the decree. In the present case, however, the money was to be paid on the last day of the month of Jeth in any year. The money, as we have stated above, was deposited on the last day of Jeth 1910. The argument placed before us is that, as the mortgagees could not be served with notice of this deposit in Court in the month of Jeth, therefore, the tender was not a valid one and, therefore, the suit for redemption was to fail. This is the ground on which the Court below has dismissed the suit. In our opinion, this ground was not sufficient for the dismissal of the suit. As we have stated above, even if this tender was not enough to warrant the Court in passing the decree for redemption from the date of the deposit it was certainly proper and legal for the Court to have passed a decree from the last day of Jeth next succeeding the date of the deposit. In the present case, having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs have claimed damages for the three years next preceding the institution of the present suit only and not from the date of the deposit, it is not necessary for us to decide this point. The plaintiffs would in either view be entitled to a decree for possession as claimed and damages for three years preceding suit. As the suit has been dismissed by the Court below on a preliminary point this case must go back for the trial of the issues left undecided according to law. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, remand this case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code with directions to re-admit the appeal to its original number on the register and to dispose of it according to law. Costs of this appeal including in this Court-fees on the higher scale will be costs in the cause.

Where a portion of the land comprising an estate is treated as a separate entity from the remainder of the estate, it is not inequitable to allow that portion to be partitioned. [p. 764, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Hooghly, dated the 25th of November 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, Additional Court, at Serampore, dated the 26th of July 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nogendra Nath Ghose, for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for partition. The defence in substance was that the suit was for a partial partition and that a certain other property should have been included in the plaint for partition. The case once came up before this Court in Second Appeal No. 342 of 1915 which was remanded. The present appeal is against the order passed on remand. The facts are briefly these. The plaintiffs were entitled to a 3-annas-4-gandas share in the entire towzi and amongst other co-sharers defendant No. 4 Karim Bux who is my vendor owned an 1-anna-12-gandas share. In 1903 all the co-sharers of the towzi instituted a suit for recovery of a plot of land within this Mouza against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and obtained a decree. Then, subsequently, the plaintiffs are purported to have purchased in specific plots a share amounting to 11 annas-4-gandas of the plot. So that they say they have 14 annas-8-gandas share in this plot and 3-annas-4-gandas in the rest of the entire towzi. One case is that subsequently to the suit I purchased an 1-anna-12-gandas from the defendant Karim. Before I purchased, Karim represented to me that there was a partition of his share in the towzi, that certain plots were allotted to him, and that he obtained a separate account under section 13 of Act XI of 1859. Then Karim professed to sell these specific plots and then in the sale-deed there occurs a passage which shows that the idea was that if for any reason it turned out that I shall not be entitled to a separated share, then I shall be entitled to an undivided share. Hence the present suit. My point is that I am the owner of an 1-anna-12-gandas of the entire Mouza. They cannot ask for a partition of the specific plot only. They must bring the entire towzi into the hotchpot.

[BUCKLAND, J.—Supposing A. sells his share to B., then could not B. sue for partition for his only bit in that entire property?]

I do not concede that, because the vendor can never say that that portion particularly will ever come to him on partition. The entire property will have to be brought into the hotchpot on equitable consideration to partition an undivided share. Refers to Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das (1).

Babu Prokash Chandra Pakran, for the Respondents.—The Munsif on the first occasion found that the point was not pressed. The Court below has on remand found that both the points referred to it for decision were in my favour. It is possible that by arrangement they have been possessing particular plots. In such a case I submit partial partition is permissible. Refers to Hem Chandra Chowdhury v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (2).

Babu Nogendra Nath Ghose replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition and is preferred by the third defendant. The plaintiffs are the owners of one fifth share in a certain towzi and Karim Bux, the predecessor in interest of the appellant, owned one tenth share of the same towzi. In 1903, the plaintiffs and Karim Bux and other co-sharers joined in bringing a suit to recover some lands from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and they obtained a decree and were put in possession of the land. After possession had been delivered, Karim Bux sold his interest in the towzi to defendant No. 3, the present appellant. The plaintiffs have now brought this suit for partition of the decretal lands. They say that in addition to their 3-annas-4-gandas share in the whole towsi which extends over the decretal land they have acquired a further share of 11-annas-4-gandas in the decretal land making their total interest in that portion, 14-annas-8-gandas, and that the defendant No. 3 as the successor in interest of Karim Bux owns the remaining 1-anna-12-gandas.

The appellant set up a two-fold defence; one is, that the suit was one for partial partition and, therefore, could not be maintained, and the second, that after the suit in 1903 and before his purchase, there was an amicable division among all the co-sharers, by virtue of which Karim Bux became entitled to the separate possession of certain specific plots of land, one of which was the plot obtained by the suit of 1903 and that the appellant was similarly entitled to hold separate possession of the land now in suit.

The first Court gave a decree for partition. Defendant No. 3 preferred an appeal, but that was dismissed. He then preferred a second appeal and the case was remanded to the Subordinate Judge for re-consideration. The learned Judges referred to the first line of defence set up by the appellant and then turned to the second line and remarked, that if the allegation of an amicable partition were true, it might furnish a complete answer to the claim for partition and they said that the plaintiffs must establish that in respect of the land in suit they and the third defendant were not only joint owners but were also entitled to joint possession. When the case went again to the lower Appellate Court, the learned Judge said that "in order to determine whether the plaintiffs were entitled to joint possession, it must be found whether the vendor of the third defendant (that is, the appellant), was entitled to exclusive possession or to joint possession. The point for determination, therefore, is, was defendant No. 4, the vendor of defendant No. 3 by mutual arrangement with his co-sharers, placed in exclusive occupation of the land in suit as representing his share of the estate." After examining the evidence on this point, he came to the conclusion that there was nothing to show that the land in suit was ever in the exclusive possession of defendant No. 4 or that the other co-sharers had any specific land in their exclusive possession, and he implied that, in consequence, the plaintiffs were entitled to joint possession.

The argument now put forward on behalf of the appellant is, that the case is one in which a partial partition should not be allowed. It is conceded that there is no hard and fast rule prohibiting a partial partition under any circumstances; but it is said that the present case is one in which a partial partition should not in equity be allowed.

It appears to me, however, that this argument has no substance in it. The learned Subordinate Judge finds with regard to this land now in suit that after the decree was obtained in the suit in 1903 all the co-sharers except Karim Bux sold their interests in the lands obtained in that suit to the predecessor of the plaintiffs because he had borne the expenses of the suit and they were unable to repay him their shares. It appears, therefore, that the co-sharers treated this decretal land as a separate entity in certain respects from the remainder of the estate, and, in these circumstances, I do not think there is anything inequitable in allowing this separate portion of land to be partitioned.

In my judgment the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

BUCKLAND, J.—I agree.

property of Company—Winding-up, application for, subsequent to attachment—Sale of property thereafter, effect of—Sale, adjournment of—Fresh proclamation of sale, absence of, whether vitiates sale—Appeal by Liquidator—Sanction of Court, whether necessary—Procedure.

Where, long previously to the presenting of an application for winding-up a Company, the immoveable property belonging to the Company was attached in execution of a decree, and was ultimately sold after a winding-up order had been passed and the Official Liquidator applied to have the sale set aside on the ground that, under section 232 of the Companies Act, the sale of the property was a putting into force of an execution within the meaning of that section :

Held, that, for the purposes of section 232 of the Companies Act, the execution was put in force on the date the property was attached, and as that date was long anterior to the date of the application for winding-up, the sale was not invalid. [p. 765, col. 2.]

Where property is repeatedly proclaimed and put up for sale, and no bidders are forthcoming, the fact that the sale is adjourned to, and held on, a subsequent date without issuing a fresh proclamation, although irregular, does not, in the absence of substantial loss suffered by the judgment-debtor in consequence of this procedure, vitiate the sale. [p. 764, col. 2.]

A Liquidator appointed in a winding-up by the Court ought not to appeal in any case without the permission of the winding-up Court, and if he does so, he runs considerable risk, in the event of failure, of having to pay the costs out of his own pocket. [p. 766, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The appellant in this case is the Official Liquidator of a Company, known as the Kayasth Trading and Banking Corporation Ltd. This Company was brought into liquidation on a winding-up application presented to this Court by a creditor on the 26th of February 1920 and winding-up order was made on the 29th of May 1920. Long previously to this, the immoveable property belonging to the Company with which we are concerned in this appeal had been attached at the instance of certain creditors. During the year 1919 the property was repeatedly proclaimed and put up for sale. For reasons with which we are not now concerned the Court had seen fit to fix a reserve price of Rs. 30,000 and at one sale after another no one came forward prepared to bid this price. The judgment-debtor, that is to say, the Company, had, in the meantime, more than once represented to the Court that there was a reasonable prospect of their being able to dispose of the property to greater advantage by private treaty. The reasonable price suggested in these various petitions to the Court was from Rs. 35,000 to Rs. 40,000; but as a matter of fact the Company, although allowed abundant opportunity by the Execution Court, had not succeeded in finding a purchaser prepared to give even as much as the reserve price of Rs. 30,000 which had been fixed for the auction-sale. Finally, the property stood advertised for sale on the 26th of February 1920, the very day on which the winding-up proceedings were initiated by the presentation of a petition on the part of another creditor, in this Court. Once more, there was no bidder prepared to offer the reserve price and the amin reported accordingly. The Court's order on his report was that the decree-holder be allowed 14 days within which to make some further application. On the 1st of March 1920, however, the Court received from the Special Manager, Court of Wards, who is now the principal respondent to this appeal, a communication expressing his willingness to pay Rs. 32,000 for the property under attachment. On this the learned District Judge fixed the 3rd of March 1920 for auction-sale. No fresh proclamation was issued and we understand that no bid was received except the respondent's bid of Rs. 32,000. The sale was concluded upon this basis and has since been confirmed by the execution Court, in spite of protests by the judgment-debtor. The appeal before us is against the order confirming the sale, or the order overruling the judgment-debtor's objections to the sale. Two distinct points are taken, one under the Code of Civil Procedure, and one under the Indian Companies Act. We may take them in this order. It is contended that the learned District Judge in fixing the 3rd of March 1920 for the auction sale, without issuing a fresh proclamation, committed a material irregularity and that, by reason of this irregularity, the appellant has suffered substantial loss. In the view which we take on the question of substantial loss, it is not really necessary for us to discuss the question of the alleged irregularity at any length. We may say simply that, in our opinion, there was an irregularity committed in this matter. As we look at the point, the order actually passed by the execution Court on the 26th of February 1920 was in effect an order adjourning the sale sine die. No doubt, in passing his subsequent order of March the 1st, 1920, the learned District Judge was actuated simply by a laudable desire to save the executing creditors from having to pay fresh proclamation fees, which they had fruitlessly done over and over again in the course of the previous year. We think, however, that, as a strict point of law, his powers of adjournment were exhausted by the order of the 26th of February 1920 and that his order of March the 1st, 1920, was really an order fixing a new date for the sale and that a proclamation should have been issued. We feel, however, perfectly satisfied that no substantial loss was suffered by the judgment-debtor in consequence of this procedure. The case in favour of the alleged substantial loss begins and ends with the fact that, since these proceedings were concluded, that is to say, in the month of August last, the Municipal Board of Gorakhpur suddenly came to a resolution that they were prepared to acquire this property for Rs. 40,000. Why they should have arrived at this resolution in the month of August 1920, when the property had been advertised for sale over and over again in the year 1919 and could then have been acquired by any one prepared to bid Rs. 10,000 less, it is impossible for us to say; but for the purposes of this appeal it is quite sufficient to make the point that there is not the slightest reason to suppose that, if a fresh sale proclamation had been issued in the month of March 1920, either the Municipal Board of Gorakhpur or any one else would have bid any sum in excess of the sum of Rs. 32,000 actually bid and since paid by the respondent. The Municipal Board of Gorakhpur obviously was not prepared in that month to pay Rs. 40,000, or any other sum, for this property. We, therefore, overrule the objection taken under the Code of Civil Procedure.

The point taken under the Companies Act is based upon the wording of section 232, considered along with section 168, of the said Act. According to the earlier of these two sections the winding-up proceedings are deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition. In this case, therefore, these proceedings commenced, within the meaning of this section, with the presentation of the creditor's petition to this Court on the 26th of February 1920. The relevant words under section 232 are the following:—

"Where any Company is being wound-up, any attachment, distress or execution put in force without the leave of the Court after the commencement of the winding-up, shall be void."

The appellant asks us to hold that the sale of the property was a putting in force of an execution within the meaning of this section. The expression which we have quoted is taken bodily from the English Law and is not altogether reconcilable with the rules of our Code of Civil Procedure on the subject of execution of decrees. We take note of the fact that, in the Companies Act itself, provision is made for two distinct contingencies. The Court to which the winding-up petition is presented can, if it sees fit to do so, pass an order the effect of which would be to suspend all proceedings, including execution proceedings, against the Company's assets for the period between the presentation of the petition and the passing of the winding-up order. Secondly, on the passing of the winding-up order, all proceedings, including proceedings in execution, are automatically suspended unless the leave of the Court be obtained. In the present instance, no interim order was passed by the Court in charge of the winding-up, and we may say that on looking into the matter we think it very unlikely that any such order would have been passed if it had been asked for. Looking at the scheme of the Companies Act as a whole, and also at the English authorities in which the expression with which we are concerned has been interpreted, we have no doubt that the words "any attachment, distraint or execution put in force" must be considered as a whole and that in this particular case the execution with which we are concerned had been "put in force" within the meaning of this section long prior to the 26th of February 1920. It was in fact put in force for the purposes of this section when this particular property was attached. This plea, therefore, also fails and we dismiss the appeal accordingly with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

With regard to the Official Liquidator, we think it fair to say that the point taken by him under the Companies Act was, in our opinion, so far arguable that it was not improper for him to raise it before this Court, so that we see no objection to his taking the costs of this appeal out of the assets of the Company.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. With regard to the point under the Companies Act, there would appear at first sight superficial difficulty in reconciling section 232 with section 168 which says, that the winding-up shall be deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition, and with the provisions vesting in the Court the power to stay or to allow execution proceedings after presentation of the petition or even after the winding-up order. But these sections are lifted verbatim from the English Act and have been substantially in force in England since 1857. It was decided by the English Court of Appeal in dealing with the very question now raised before us, as long ago as 1864, that section 232 of the Indian Companies Act of 1913 must be read with and controlled by sections 169 and 171. In addition to that, in applying this law to India, it must be noted that the words "putting in force" are not strictly applicable to the machinery for issuing execution in this country. After all, they really mean no more than putting in motion, and it has been decided in England that where the writ for possession has been handed to the Sheriff or the Sheriff has actually entered, execution has been "put in force" within the meaning of that section. Moreover, if the matter had come before me sitting as the Judge in winding-up and there had been an application by the Company either before the actual winding-up order, or after it to stay further proceedings by the decree-holder under this decree, I am quite satisfied, after examining the authorities on the subject in England, that it would have been my duty to have allowed the execution to proceed. For example, where a creditor has issued execution bona fide, that is to say, applying that term to India, has applied for execution, which in this case he did as long ago as 1917, and the Sheriff has been put in possession before the presentation of the petition, the creditor will not, except under exceptional circumstances, be restrained from selling. If a sale were shown to be likely to be ruinous to the good will or assets of the Company the creditor would, according to the English practice, be restrained from selling but allowed a first charge on the assets of the Company in the winding-up for his debt and costs as a condition of granting the stay. It has further been held that, where a Company has vexatiously delayed its creditor so that he could not obtain a decree before the presentation of the petition and had to issue execution after the winding-up had taken place, nonetheless he has been allowed to proceed with his execution. Secondly, while agreeing with what my brother has said about the costs in this case, I would draw attention to the recognized practice with regard to Liquidators, who are officers of the Court, and not ordinary litigants at all, that a Liquidator appointed in a winding-up by the Court ought not to appeal in any case without the permission of the winding-up Court, and if he does so, he runs considerable risk, in the event of failure, of having to pay the costs out of his own pocket.

Where there are several hereditary trustees of a public charitable trust, there is nothing improper in one of them being appointed as managing trustee for certain purposes by the other trustees, though so far as acts like the institution of suits, etc., are concerned, they must all be parties and must act after mutual consultation [p. 769, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Balasubramania Aiyar, for the Appellants.—There was no notice to quit. Any way, the plaintiff alone could not determine the defendant's tenancy without getting the other trustees to join him. It is necessary that all the trustees should act together in such an important matter as the recovery of possession of trust properties. The essence of their function is that all of them should act jointly in any matter relating to the trust after mutual consultations. One trustee cannot substitute his discretion for that of his co-trustees.

The division of management is invalid as it has the effect of splitting up responsibility such a division cannot be made in the case of public trusts. Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (1).

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondents.—The question of want of notice was not taken in the lower Court though the plaintiff averred that he gave notice in his plaint.

Notice to quit is a formal matter and does not involve the exercise of discretion where a trespasser has to be evicted. Joint action and mutual consultation are necessary only in graver matters affecting the trust.

The division of management among trustees is not illegal. Raja Ram v. Ram Ebcy (2). The observations of the Privy Council in Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (1) are not opposed to this view. The razinama was further sanctioned by Court as beneficial to the parties.

JUDGMENT.

SADARIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 2 are the appellants. The plaintiff and defendants Nos 5 and 6 were minors when this suit was brought. The plaintiff's adoptive father, Srinivasa Pillai, and the father of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6, Annamalai Pillai, were co-trustees of the plaint choultry charity. The trusteeship seems to have been hereditary. As regards this custom of hereditary trusteeship I quoted in Subramania Aiyar v. Lakshmana Goundan (3) a learned writer who recently said: "The error of decadent India has been to lay too much stress on the law of heredity in connection with national organization, to assert loudly with false claims of degenerate pseudo-religion and pseudo-science that that law is the sole arbiter of pseudo-physical type, and to forget, to ignore and refuse recognition now altogether in theory to the equally important and equally operative law of...the effects of Individual Taras." Further on, I remarked in that case, "the fondness for introducing the hereditary principle even in such matters as succession to trusteeships, succession to priestly functions in a temple and even to the function of a cook or garland weaver in a temple has been due to this perverted and grossly exaggerated worship of the hereditary principle which is the bane of the modern caste system." However, having this anomalous principle of law recognizing hereditary trusteeship to work with, it is no wonder that inconveniences arise when the holders of such offices become numerous in the course of hereditary succession or when they are minors as in this case. To get rid of such inconveniences, the Courts had to employ their ingenuity; and they have held that arrangements which, according to the strict law regulating trusts may not be treated as sound, are not improper when we have to deal with these hereditary trusteeships.

ANGAMUTHU V. RAMALINGA PILLAI.

It appears from the findings of the lower Appellate Court that the two former trustees, namely, the plaintiff's father and the father of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were, for convenience of management, agreed each to be sole manager of half a dozen out of the dozen or so shops belonging to the trust. The present suit is for the recovery of possession of two of these half a dozen shops which the plaintiff's father was separately managing. They had been leased in 1898 under Exhibit G to the 1st defendant, the rent deed having been executed in favour of both the trustees. The plaint, as I understand it, alleged that the plaintiff's father alone had been receiving the rents of those two shops notwithstanding, that the document was executed in favour of both trustees just as the father of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 was receiving the rents of other shops separately by arrangement between the two trustees. Till 1909, the first defendant was recognizing the plaintiff's father and the plaintiff's guardian was entitled to receive the rents and was paying them the rents. Then he wanted the right to hold the shops in possession thereafter, no longer as a tenant but as a usufructuary mortgagee. In the year 1910, therefore, under Exhibit T, which was executed by the father of the fifth and sixth defendants (the plaintiff's father having then died), he obtained the shops as usufructuary mortgagee. That mortgage has been found by the lower Courts to be invalid against the trust. The plaint alleges that the first defendant thereafter has been withholding the rent and, notwithstanding notice given to the defendants to quit, they have not given up possession. The first defendant has assigned over his mortgage-right (which, as I said, is worth nothing) to the second defendant and remained ex parte in this litigation. The second defendant did not deny the allegations in the plaint that the first defendant was attorning to the plaintiff's father till about 1909 and paying rents for these shops to them nor the fact that notice to quit was given. He relied upon the authority of this usufructuary mortgage in favour of the first defendant executed by the father of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 and assigned over to the second defendant.

The lower Appellate Court decided the case on these pleadings and on the facts found by it in favour of the plaintiff. One fact more has to be stated, namely, that in 1911 a suit was brought by the plaintiff against his father's elder brother (the father of the defendant's Nos. 5 and 6) who died pending the suit and against other persons in respect of some other shops. In that suit, the guardian of the plaintiff and the guardian of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 with the permission of the Court, entered into a razinamah in January 1913, Exhibit B, whereby among other things, it was agreed that the two guardians of the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 should receive the rents of separate shops just as the fathers of the minors had been doing previously. Of course, the guardian of the plaintiff was not intended to receive the rent after he ceased to be the guardian of the plaintiff, that is, after the plaintiff attained majority. As I understand the razinamah, it was to be in force so long as all the minor parties to it represented by their respective guardians remained minors. The Court evidently thought that such a razinamah was in the interests of the minors and was not against the interest of the institution. It was, however, argued that such a division of management (which, of course, did not absolve the managers from joint and several liability to the endowment, for acts of malfeasance or misfeasance by any of the managers) was invalid and could not be recognized. There seems to be some support afforded to this contention in the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (1), where their Lordships seem to be inclined to confine such a division of management to private and family trusts, whether religious or charitable. In Raja Ram v. Ram Bhoj (2) Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., no doubt held that such a division of management (even a division of properties for management) was not improper in the case of public charitable trusts also like the present. As I think that the decree of the lower Appellate Court, if the other contentions of the appellant are found against, might be modified by giving a decree with possession to the plaintiff's next friend on behalf of all the trustees including the fifth defendant who has now become a major and the sixth defendant who is now under the guardianship of the fifth defendant (as co-trustees of the institution) it is unnecessary to express any final opinion on the question whether Raja Ram v. Ram Bhoy (2) must be deemed to have been overruled by the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (1) already referred to. As to the other objections raised by the second defendant, he is not entitled to raise it in second appeal as he has not denied the plaintiff allegation of notice to quit. Even assuming that he is entitled to notice to quit, I think that when the first defendant obtained his mortgage, and professing to hold under that mortgage assigned it over to the second defendant, he repudiated his status as tenant and was not entitled to notice to quit and his assignee the second defendant standing in his shoes was a fortiori not also entitled to notice. However, even if they were entitled to notice, what has not been denied in the written statement ought to be treated as admitted.

As regards the question whether the notice given by one of the trustees is sufficient, I do not think there is anything improper in one of the several trustees being appointed as managing trustee for certain purposes by the other trustees though so far as acts like the institution of suits, etc., are concerned, they must all be parties and must act after mutual consultations. As regards the cases in which it has been held that, in a matter of discretion, one trustee cannot act without consulting the others I do not think those cases apply to matters where no question of discretion is involved. Discretion has to be used as regards the propriety of redeeming a Kanom of the trust properties or renewal of a mortgage and other similar acts, but no such question of discretion arises where, in the interests of the trust, a trespasser has to be ejected.

In the result, I would confirm the decree of the first Court with the modification that, instead of plaintiff, the words "plaintiff and fifth defendant for himself and as guardian of the sixth defendant" shall be substituted and that, instead of "defendants," it shall be "defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4." Also, after the words "plaintiff and fifth defendant on behalf of himself and as guardian of sixth defendant" and "as trustees of the institution." The appellants will pay the plaintiffs cost in the second appeal.

SPENCER, J.—I agree to the proposed modification of the decree. I also agree with my learned brother that in other respects the appeal should be dismissed with costs. It was asserted in the plaint and not denied in the written statements that the first defendant was paying rent at Rs. 3 a month till 1909 and that he had not paid it subsequently. It was also found by the District Munsif that the usufructuary mortgage-bond executed by the father of defendants Nos. 5 and 6 in favour of the first defendant of which the second defendant obtained an assignment was not binding on the plaintiff, and this finding was not contested in the arguments before the lower Appellate Court. This is sufficient to dispose of the case of the first and second defendants.

Three main objections were raised on behalf of the appellants, who are defendants Nos. 2, 5 and 6 represented by the same Vakil. They are, (1) that the plaintiff was not competent to determine the tenancy without the concurrence of defendants Nos. 5 and 6 who are co-trustees, as trustees are bound to act together in such matters as recovering properties belonging to the trust; (2) that as regards the razinamah, Exhibit B, the guardian of a minor trustee cannot enter into an arrangement for the management of a trust estate which involves the exercise of the personal discretion of the trustees; and (3) that there was no valid notice to quit for the determination of the 1st defendant's tenancy.

As regards the first objection, there is the authority of a case in Raja Ram v. Ram Bhoy (2), where it was held that there was nothing illegal in an arrangement among the hereditary trustees of a charity that each should be in exclusive possession of different portions of the trust properties for the separate management and accounting for the income without any diminution of their joint responsibility for the proper discharge of their duties as regards the whole charitable institution. This authority has not, so far as I am aware, been shaken by any subsequent decision. The Privy Council decision in Kamanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (4) which gave sanction to an arrangement for the management of a temple trust by terms is not opposed to Raja Ram v. Ram Bhoj (2). I do not mean for a moment to suggest that any amount of consent would justify the sanctioning of a transaction that would be opposed to public policy : but there is nothing in the terms of the arrangement in the compromise to suggest that this separate management of a certain number of shops was contrary to public policy. Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (1) was a case of administration of certain religious charities by the head of a mutt. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in their judgment make a distinction between private charities, that is, endowments for the charities of a family idol, and certain endowments such as those involved in that suit. They observed that Indian Courts had no jurisdiction to settle a scheme the effect of which would be to take away the sole power of management from the eldest son of the last head of the mutt. I can see no analogy between the position of the head of a mutt and that of the trustees who are managing the charity concerned in this suit, so that decision has no bearing on the facts of the case before us. Secondly, as regards the rasinamah, Exhibit B, it received the sanction of the Court and was embodied in the decree in Original Suit No. 211 of 1911. Even if the guardian of a minor is not capable of exercising that degree of discretion which is necessary for the purpose of consenting to a compromise, it has been held that a Court can supply the defect arising out of the minor's incapacity and, therefore, when the District Munsif gave his sanction to the rasinamah decree, the appellants' objection as to the guardian's capacity to act for the minor trustee is no longer tenable. Lastly, on the question of notice, the first defendant did not object to the want of notice. In paragraph 14 of the plaint, the plaintiff asserted that he had given two notices demanding delivery of possession of the shops. There is no denial of this assertion in the written statements. This objection, therefore, also fails.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4, 58, 63—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit for possession of pasture land, nature of—Ejectment—Revenue Court, jurisdiction of.

A suit for possession of land of which the defendant had the use for grazing cattle and for arrears of rent, is in effect a suit for ejectment against a tenant who is such by reason of his enjoying a right of pasturage in respect of the land, and as such the suit is cognizable only by a Revenue Court. [p. 771, col. 2; p. 772, col. 1.]

Second appeal, from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 12th August 1918, modifying a decree of the Munsif, Deoria.

Mr. U. S. Baspai, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. P. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was brought in the Court of the Munsif of Deoria. The plaintiffs claimed, between them, to be the holders of the proprietary rights in respect of a particular plot of land 16 biswas in area. They said that this land had never been brought under cultivation, but grew from year to year a crop of tall grass known locally as khar. They alleged that the defendants had the use of this plot of land for many years by grazing their cattle over it, and cutting the tall grass if they saw fit to do so. They claimed that the defendants' enjoyment of this land gave them no status higher than that of a licensee, although they admitted that rent was annually paid by the defendants. Bringing the suit, therefore, in the Civil Court, they claimed a decree for possession and arrears of rent for three years at the rate of Rs. 5 a year. The defendants pleaded that the suit as brought was not cognizable by the Civil Court, but should have been brought as a suit for the ejectment of a non occupancy tenant in the Court of an Assistant Collector. They raised other pleadings upon which issues were framed regarding the length and nature of the defendants' possession, the amount of the rent and the necessity or otherwise for the issue of notice by the plaintiffs to the defendants.

prior to the institution of a suit for ejectment. The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiffs on every point, except as regards the amount of the rent, and passed a decree in their favour for possession over the land by ejectment of the defendants and for three years' rent at the rate of Rs. 1 a year. In appeal the Additional Subordinate Judge has held that the claim for arrears of rent was not maintainable in the Civil Court, but that the claim for possession by ejectment of the defendants was so maintainable, and had been rightly decreed. He amended the decree of the first Court accordingly. The appeal before us is against the decision of the lower Appellate Court. Various points have been taken and argued with much keenness. It is contended that the land in suit is in fact held by the defendants for agricultural purposes within the meaning of section 4 clause (2) of the Local Tenancy Act, II of 1901. Further, that whether this be so or not, the defendants have been paying rent on account of rights of pasturage within the meaning of the definition of the word "rent" in clause (3) of the same section, and are, therefore "tenants" within the meaning of clause (5). From this it is further argued that, if the defendants be held to be tenants upon this basis, they can only be non-occupancy tenants, and are, therefore, liable to ejectment, if at all, by means of a suit brought under section 63 of the aforesaid Tenancy Act, read with section 58, of the same. If the suit is one which should have been brought in the Court of an Assistant Collector the cognizance of the Civil Court is barred by section 167 of the same Tenancy Act. A farther point has been taken that the position of the defendants is in any case not that of mere licensees, that they have a prescriptive right to the enjoyment of this land which cannot be revoked at the will and pleasure of the plaintiffs and that, if the suit is treated as one cognizable by the Civil Court, then it is a suit against lessees, so that notice was necessary under the appropriate provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882. This case has been referred to a Bench of two Judges because of a conflict of authority in this Court on the question of the definition of agricultural land and as to the effect of sections 58 and 63 of the Local Tenancy Act. The authority of Mr. Justice Chamier in Abdul Qayum v. Fida

Husain (1) is quoted for the proposition that a suit against a tenant of grazing land or in respect of ejectment from land solely used for the purposes of pasturage is not entertainable by the Revenue Court. This decision is based on an older decision by the same learned Judge, which was not called in question before him in Abdul Qayum v. Fida Husain (1), and that again purports to follow a reported case of the Board of Revenue. Mr. Justice Chamier obviously read section 51 of the Tenancy Act as if the words "from his holding" were to be understood after the word "ejectment" from the previous section. He says, in the case in which he first dealt with this question, that both sections 57 and 58 obviously refer to ejectment from a holding. There is clear authority of this Court to the contrary in the decision of a Bench of two Judges as Rameshar Singh v. Madho Lal (2). According to the practice of this Court, the decision of a Bench of two Judges should be followed rather than that of a single Judge, if there appears to be conflict between them. We agree, moreover, with the reasoning of Mr. Justice Ryves in Rameshar Singh v. Madho Lal (2). One thing seems to be put quite beyond question by the wording of the definitions of the words "land" and "tenant" in section 4 of the Local Tenancy Act, II of 1901, and this is, that a man may be a "tenant", subject to the provisions of that Act, without being the tenant of a "holding". It seems clear, therefore, that we ought not to import into section 58 of the Tenancy Act any reference to a "holding" from the previous section. On the general principles governing the interpretation of Statutes, the more correct view would seem to be that the omission of all reference to a "holding" in section 58 was intentional, and was due to the fact that the framers of the Act recognized the point to which we have already called attention, namely, that a non-occupancy tenant need not necessarily be the tenant of a holding. The decision of the Board of Revenue, which weighed with Mr. Justice Chamier, proceeded upon a very peculiar and unusual state of facts and we very much doubt whether it could be applied to a case like the present, where the defendants are in the enjoyment for grazing purposes of a specified and limited plot of land. It is clear, moreover, from the recital of the facts in the judgment of Mr. Justice Ryves in the case of Rameshar Singh v. Madho Lal (2) that the Board of Revenue is quite prepared to entertain a suit in ejectment against a tenant who is such only by reason of his enjoying a right of pasturage in respect of a particular area. We do not say that the question is altogether free from difficulty, but both the weight of authority in this Court and our own opinion as to the correct interpretation of section 53 and of the definitions in section 4 of Local Act, II of 1901, are clearly in favour of the appellants. On this ground alone the order of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside. It seems, in any case, a wholly anomalous and undesirable result that the plaintiffs should be referred to one Tribunal for the decision of a claim to rent in respect of this land and to a different Tribunal in respect of their claim to possession over this land. We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the decisions of both the Courts below and, giving effect to the objection of the defendants on the question of jurisdiction, substitute for the decree of the first Court an order returning the plaint for presentation to a Court having jurisdiction, namely, the Court of an Assistant Collector. The appellants are entitled to their costs of this litigation.

Appeal from the decree of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, dated the 19th November 1919, reported as 59 Ind. Cas. 71, affirming that of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 28th April 1919, dismissing the plaintiffs' claim.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this present appeal arises are given in the judgment of Raoof, J., dated the 19th November 1919, in Civil Appeal No. 1426 of 1919, and in the order of the Full Bench in the present appeal, dated the 2nd June 1920*.

The Trial Court and the District Judge held that the plaintiffs' suit for possession of the land mortgaged was barred by time and by the provisions of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. Raoof, J., held that the suit was barred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, and upheld the orders of the lower Courts on that ground alone without deciding the question of limitation. The Full Bench of this Court having held that the suit is not barred by Order II, rule 2, it remains to decide whether it is barred by limitation. We proceed now to decide this point.

The plaintiffs in their plaint said that the suit was in time on account of certain payments alleged to have been made by the defendants, but the Courts below held that these payments were not proved. In the lower Appellate Court the plaintiffs further urged that the defendants' admission in their written statement, dated the 25th June 1906, in the former suit was an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act which saved limitation. The District Judge, however, said that this was not mentioned in the plaint filed in the present suit as it ought to have been in accordance with the provisions of Order VII, rule 6

*See 59 Ind. Cas. 71.—[Ed.]

PARMESHRI DAS v. FAKIRIA.

Civil Procedure Code. He relied on Gobinda Mal v. Santa (1) and, holding that this admission could not be relied upon in arguments, agreed with the Trial Court that the suit was barred by time. Gobinda Mal v. Santa (1), followed Jogeshwar Roy v. Raj Narain Mitter (2) and held that under Order VII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs were bound to show in the plaint the grounds upon which exemption from the law of limitation was claimed and that, as there was no mention in the plaint of the alleged acknowledgment of liability by the defendants, plaintiffs could not be allowed to rely on it. It was pointed out in the course of the judgment (see page 295 of the record) that in that case the plaint did not even remotely suggest that any acknowledgment of whatever description had been made by the defendants so as to make section 19 of the Act applicable. The Judges, therefore, had no hesitation in following the principle underlying the Calcutta case. The present case is distinguishable, inasmuch as one ground of exemption was mentioned in the plaint, and, therefore, the provisions of Order VII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, were complied with. In Hingu Miah v. Heramba Ohandra (3) it was pointed out that the case of Jogeshwar Roy v. Raj Narain Mitter (2) did not lay down any inflexible rule of law, and it was held that if the plaint shows the ground of exemption the requirements of the Code were satisfied, but this does not preclude the plaintiff from taking another and an inconsistent ground to get over the bar of limitation if he believes that the latter is the true ground; and the Court allowed the plaintiff to urge that the suit was not barred by limitation for a reason different from the one assigned in the plaint (see page 147*). A ruling to the same effect is that in the case of Yakub Ebrahim Sayani v. Bai Rahimat-bai (4), where it was held that where a plaintiff does satisfy the requirements of section 50 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 by stating what is in his opinion the ground upon which he intends to get over the bar of limitation he ought not to be precluded from taking another and not inconsistent ground should he be later advised that the latter is the true ground. Jogeshwar Roy v. Raj Narain Mitter (2) was dissented from in Ram Sukh Das v. Ghulam Muhammad (5), where it was held that the provisions of Order VII, rule 6, should be construed in a reasonable and liberal spirit and, save under very exceptional circumstances, the Court of first instance should allow the plaintiff to amend his plaint so as to state the ground of exemption from the law of limitation. Jogeshwar Roy v. Raj Narain Mitter (2) and Gobinda Mal v. Santa (1) were distinguished. In our opinion, the present case is also distinguishable from the two latter cases. Here a ground of exemption was stated in the plaint, though the plaintiffs subsequently sought to rely upon another ground. We agree with the interpretation put upon the law in Yakub Ebrahim Sayani v. Bai Rahimat-bai (4) and Hingu Miah v. Heramba Ohandra (3) and consider that the plaintiffs should not be debarred from putting forward the admission of the defendants made by them in their written statement of the 25th June 1906. We note that a copy of that statement was filed in the Trial Court on the 11th January 1919, the case being decided one month after that date. The list which was filed with the copy makes it clear that the object of the plaintiffs was to show that the defendants had admitted the plaintiffs' right to possession of the land mortgaged. It is, therefore, clear that in the Trial Court they attempted to rely on this statement. A perusal of the statement shows that it clearly amounts to an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, and the present suit, having been brought within 12 years of the date of that acknowledgment, is within time under Article 135 of the Limitation Act.

It is also urged by Counsel for the appellants that the plaintiffs in the previous suit having elected to sue for interest only had no right to sue for possession, and that, when a fresh default

Second appeal from a decree of the Second Additional Judge, Aligarh, dated the 27th of February 1918, confirming a decree of the Additional First Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Second Appeals Nos. 649 and 650 of 1918 are between the same parties and arise out of the same suit. On the 18th of November 1891 one Har Narain executed a mortgage-deed for a sum of Rs. 900 in favour of three persons, Sahab Ram and his brother, Ajai Ram, and their cousin Har Prasad. On the 30th of July 1911 Sahab Ram and Ajai Ram brought a suit for sale against the mortgagor on the basis of the deed. At that time Har Prasad was dead. He left a widow, Govindi, and there was one Brij Narain, the son of Ajai Ram, on whose behalf a claim was put forward by Sahab Ram that he was the adopted son of Har Prasad. Therefore, he and Musammât Govindi were made pro forma defendants to the suit. She applied to be made a plaintiff, claiming to be the heir of Har Prasad. Sahab Ram took no exception to this application, in fact, he agreed on the condition that she would pay "half" the costs of the suit. She agreed to do this and was made a plaintiff. An application was also made on behalf of Brij Narain to be made a plaintiff to the suit and he was made a plaintiff but without any condition as to the payment of costs. On the 23rd of November 1911 the suit was dismissed on the ground that the whole of the debt had been paid to Sahab Ram. Those payments apparently were found to have been made in the years 1897 and 1903. Har Prasad had died in the year 1892, so these payments were made to Sahab Ram subsequent to the death of Har Prasad. On the 2nd of December 1914, Musammât Govindi, respondent to the present appeals, brought this Suit No. 318 of 1914 to recover from Sahab Ram Rs. 1,950, a half share of the money which he had recovered from the mortgagor Har Narain, plus Rs. 100. The plaintiff claimed that the cause of action had accrued to her from the date of the decision of the suit when it had come to her knowledge that Sahab Ram had collected the money from the mortgagor. Sahab Ram raised four points in defense—

(1) He first of all pleaded that he had not received the money from the mortgagor

(2) He next pleaded that the suit was barred by time.

(3) He then pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled to more than a one-third share in the amount recovered, and, lastly,

(4) He pleaded that Musammât Govindi was not the heir as Brij Narain was the adopted son of Har Prasad and in his presence she had no title.

During the pendency of the suit Musammât Govindi applied to the District Judge for a succession certificate to enable her to recover this sum of Rs. 1,950 from Sahab Ram as being a debt due to the estate of her husband. The District Judge granted her a succession certificate and she produced it in Court. The Court of first instance held against Sahab Ram on all points except one, i. e., as to the share to which Musammat Govindi was entitled. It held that she was entitled to one third and not one-half of the sum recovered by Sahab Ram. Both parties appealed. Musammat Govindi urged on appeal that she was entitled to a one half share. The defendant pleaded that she was not entitled to anything at all. Whilst the appeals were pending, an appeal was preferred in the Succession Certificate case on behalf of Brij Narain to the High Court and, finally, the succession certificate granted to Musammat Govindi was withdrawn. It appears that in the year 1894 Sahab Ram had, as guardian of Brij Narain, applied for a succession certificate in respect to other debts which were due to the estate of Har Prasad. After the decision of the High Court an application was made for extension of the certificate of 1894 in respect to a sum of Rs. 1,950 which was said to be due to the estate of the deceased, Har Prasad, under a decree in a Suit No. 318 of 1914 by the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Ali-garh. Now, this decree was the decree which was passed by the Court of first instance in this very suit No. 318 of 1914 in favour of Govindi against Sahab Ram. On appeal, the District Judge held that Musammat Govindi was entitled to a one-half share in the amount collected by Sahab Ram. He held that the suit was not time barred, and that Brij Narain was not the adopted son of Har Prasad. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's claim in full and dismissed the appeal of Sahab Ram. Sahab Ram now comes to this Court. He practically presses all the same points again.

It is urged, firstly, that the succession certificate granted to Musammat Govindi having been withdrawn, she is no longer entitled to a decree against Sahab Ram. In our opinion, section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act does not apply to the facts of the present case. That section says that, "No Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person or any part thereof or proceed upon an application of person claiming to be so entitled, to execute against such a debtor a decree or order for the payment of his debt except on the production by the person so claiming of a succession certificate, etc." In the present case Musam-

mat Govindi is suing not a debtor of the estate of her husband but a person who has wrongfully collected debts due to that estate and is holding them as against her. The collection of the debts was made long after the death of Har Prasad. The money in Sahab Ram's hands is due to the heir of Har Prasad but Sahab Ram in no sense can be said to have been a debtor to the estate of Har Prasad. Section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act was clearly adopted to protect a debtor when called upon to pay a debt due by him to a deceased person. Har Narain, the original mortgagor, if he had not paid off the debt, would have been a debtor such as is contemplated under section 4. Sahab Ram, in the circumstances of the present case, is no such debtor and in our opinion Musammat Govindi had no necessity whatever to produce a succession certificate in this litigation. The decision of this Court in the matter of the succession certificate and relating to Brij Narain's alleged adoption, is in no way final or binding between the parties. Section 25 of the Act is very clear indeed on this point.

It is next pleaded that the question of adoption is res judicata by reason of an award passed in the year 1901. This award was passed in a suit brought by Musammat Govindi against Brij Narain in respect to the estate of Har Prasad. The matter was referred to arbitration. The decree which was ultimately passed in the case is not upon the record. The award of 1901 shows that, by an agreement of parties the arbitrators maintained each of the parties in possession of those portions of the estate of which they were already possessed. There is no decision in the award of the disputed question of adoption. It is true that in certain places in the award the word 'muthanna' (adopted) has been entered after the name of Brij Narain but above the line. This entry, according to the finding of the Court below, is a subsequent interpolation and not a genuine entry but in any case there is no decision in the award that Brij Narain is the adopted son. The arbitrators merely cut the knot without untying it. The decree passed on the basis of the award is not produced and there is no decision before us by any competent Court on the disputed question of adoption. The finding by the Court below on the evidence before it that the adoption has not been established is a finding of fact and as such is binding on us. The whole evidence has been discussed by that Court and we are bound by that finding.

In regard to the question of limitation, it is urged that limitation began to run as against Sahab Ram from the moment he collected the debt, that is, from the years 1897-1903, and the suit having been brought more than three years after the money was received by him is now barred by time. The plea comes very badly out of the mouth of Sahab Ram who, in the year 1910, instituted a suit against the original mortgagor to recover the mortgage-money on the ground that it had not been paid. If ever a fact is clearly proved it is beyond doubt in the present case that Sahab Ram, having collected the money, concealed that fact from Musammât Govindi who was entitled to a share therein; not only that, but he brought a suit (a suit which must have been false to his knowledge) to cover his tracks, and Musammât Govindi is fully justified in law in stating that it was not until the 23rd of November 1911 that she was aware of the collections of the money by Sahab Ram. Section 18 of the Limitation Act clearly would apply to the facts of the present case. When Musammât Govindi applied to be made a plaintiff in the suit Sahab Ram actually allowed her to be made a plaintiff and made her responsible for half the costs of the suit. The plaint was filed on the 2nd of December 1914. It was within time because the 23rd November 1914 fell on a holiday and the Courts did not re-open till the 2nd of December 1914. The claim was, therefore, within three years of the 23rd of November 1911 and is within time.

Finally, there remains the question of the share to which Musammât Govindi is entitled. We think the decision of the Court below on this point is quite correct, specially in view of the fact that when Musammât Govindi was made a plaintiff in the suit of 1910 Sahab Ram allowed her to be made a plaintiff on condition that she would pay half of the costs of the litigation, thereby tacitly admitting that she was entitled to half of the amount collected. There is no force in this appeal. We, therefore, dismiss it with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 18—Agreement to refer dispute to arbitration—Stay of suit—Discretion of Court—Burden of proof.

When a Court is apprised that a suit has been instituted in contravention of an arbitration agreement the Court has a discretion to stay the suit, and the burden lies on the plaintiff to show that some sufficient reason exists why the matter should not be so referred, and not on the defendant to show that no such reason exists. [p. 777, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated the 1st April 1920, refusing to stay the case for arbitration.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants.

Mr. Falir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case, a firm of Delhi merchants, sued the defendant, another Delhi firm, for a large sum as damages, alleging that the defendant had contracted to supply 75 cases of long cloth at certain rates, which are not in dispute, but had given delivery of 38 cases only.

On the 8th January 1920 the defendant put in pleas and, at the same time, an application under Schedule II, paragraph 18, that the suit might be stayed on the ground that clause 15 of the contract between the parties contained a provision to the following effect:—

"Any claim or dispute arising in connection with this contract, unless an amicable settlement can be arrived at, must be referred to arbitration in Delhi in accordance with the Survey and Arbitration Rules of the Delhi Hindustani Mercantile Association."

The Senior Subordinate Judge, following Ohaiju Mal and Company v. Gurmukh Singh-Bhagwan Das (1), a Single Bench judgment of the Chief Court, declined to stay the suit and the defendant has filed the present appeal in this Court.

Ohaiju Mal and Company v. Gurmukh Singh Bhagwan Das (1) is not an independent authority but follows another unreported Single Bench judgment which has been printed as Charles Louis Drefus v. Jai Chand (2), in which it appears to have been held that, despite an agreement to refer, a dispute arising from total non-delivery could not be treated as one for arbitration. The case, however, was heard on a petition for revision, no authority was cited, and it was considered that it would be inequitable in the circumstances to compel a merchant carrying on business at Lahore to submit to arbitration in Karachi.

Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has not been able to cite any other authority in support of his position and we are not prepared to draw the distinction for which he contends, as it is clear that there are both a claim and a dispute arising out of the contract between the parties. There is nothing invalid in the agreement to refer, and it has been held in Dinabandhu Jana v. Durga Prasad Jana (3), which follows Hodgson v. Railway Passengers' Assurance Company (4), that when a Court is apprised that a suit has been instituted in contravention of an arbitration agreement the Court has a discretion to stay the suit, and that the burden lies on the plaintiff to show that some sufficient reason exists why the matter should not be so referred and not on the defendant to show that no such reason exists.

We hold, therefore, that the reason given by the Court below for declining to stay the suit was incorrect and we allow the appeal. We do not, however, deal with the application on its merits, but remand it to the lower Court for decision in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 18 of the Second Schedule. Costs will be costs in the cause.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 25th of May 1920.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. K. Mukerji and Vishun Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Court below had to decide about the granting of a succession certificate for the collection of certain debts due to a deceased Bengali Brahmin, Babu Karnamoy Banerji. The rival applicants were a widowed daughter with no children and two sons by another daughter previously deceased. The learned District Judge has given preference to the sons. He had only to determine prima facie which of the parties before him had a preferential claim. We think his decision was clearly right. It has been contended before us, as it was in the Court below, that the daughter, who was a childless widow, should not be postponed to the sons of the other daughter in the matter of inheritance, because, under the provisions of the Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act, XV of 1856, there was always the possibility of her marrying again. In support of this, one case in the Calcutta High Court has been laid before us, as it was before the Court below. It is that of Sreemutty Bimola v. Dangoo Kansaree (1). The point in question is dealt with in a brief and summary manner at the close of a judgment dealing mainly with another matter. It is not referred to in a standard book, like Trevelyan's Hindu Law, where three other authorities of the Calcutta High Court are quoted for an interpretation of the law against the claim of this appellant. As long ago as the 14th of February 1865, in Binode Zomares Dabee v. Purdhan Gopal Sahee (2), the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court said that daughters who were barren, or widows without male issue, or mothers of daughters only, suo, under no circumstances, inherit. The same principle was followed in a later case to be found in Radha Kishen Manjhee v. Rajah Ram Mundul (3). The point has been recently re-considered by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Mukunda Lal Chuckerbutty v. Manmohini Debi (4), where the judgment expressly refers to the provisions of section 4 of the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act, XV of 1855. The terms of that section, to which we have referred, seem to bear out the view of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the latest reported decision. The Court below, in a proceeding of this sort, was clearly right in accepting the view of the law which seems to have been generally acted upon in the Calcutta High Court where cases under the Dayabaga Law are likely to come up for decision. Something has been said about a point taken as to the respondents, that is to say, the daughter's sons, not having performed the funeral ceremonies; but we can find no authority bearing out the contention of the appellant on this point. On the materials before him the learned District Judge was right in granting the succession certificate to the respondents. We dismiss this appeal accordingly with costs, including fees on the higher scale:

Where in a suit for a declaration of right to a khal and for recovery of possession by eviction of the defendant, the latter asserts that the disputed khal is a public navigable river, wherein he has a right to fish, either on the basis of prescription or by immemorial custom, it is necessary to determine, in the first instance, whether it is or is not a public navigable river, and it is for the plaintiff to prove that there was a grant of the bed of the river to the Zemindar at the time of the Permanent Settlement, or that, although the channel was a public navigable river, there was in reality a grant of several fishery in favour of the Zemindar. Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 7th of May 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court, at Bagerhat, dated the 27th of May 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Peari Mohan Chatterjee) for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of plaintiff's patni right and for recovery of possession and eviction of the defendants. The plaintiff's case is that he is a patnidar under the Government, that the khal in dispute belonged to him by virtue of the patni settlement from the time of the Permanent Settlement, and that the defendants had no right of fishery therein. The defence was that the defendants had a right to fish by prescription and that the river was a public navigable river. The Court of first instance gave a partial decree. The Court of Appeal below decreed the suit in full. I submit the learned Munsif was right in finding the river to be a public navigable and tidal river. His finding was based on inspection. The lower Appellate Court also seems to have accepted that finding. It does not find that there was any grant by the Government of the bed of the river at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The evidence of such a grant must be clear and conclusive. Refers to Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (1). The quinquennial papers are inadmissible to prove such grant. The first Court's finding that the plaintiffs had not exclusive user of the fishery and that the public used to fish in the river which was public, navigable and tidal, has not been displaced.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakraborty (with him Babu Frobodh Chandra Chatterjee), for the Respondents.—The appeal is wholly concluded by the findings of fact. The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiff had title to fish and that the defendants had no title thereto by prescription or immemorial custom. Refers to Attorney-General v. Emerson (2). I submit the defendants have not made out any good case for second appeal.

Babu Mohendranath Roy replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

MR. JUSTICE, ACB. C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for declaration of a patni right to what is described in the plaint as the disputed Sashikhali khal and for recovery of possession on eviction of the defendants.

The plaintiff is patnidar of an estate known as Perganna Rangdia, which bears No. 235 on the Revenue Roll of the Jessore Collectorate, and No. 163 on the Revenue Roll of the Khulna Collectorate. His case is that the disputed khal was settled with the Zemindar at the time of the Permanent Settlement and that the defendants have unlawfully exercised a right of fishery therein.

The defendants repudiated the claim and asserted that the disputed khal was a public navigable river, wherein they had a right to fish, either on the basis of prescription or by immemorial custom.

The Trial Court found that the river Sashikhali belongs to the plaintiffs as appertaining to the Perganna Rangdia, and made a decree in his favour for exclusive possession of a portion of the disputed stream. Thereupon, an appeal and a cross-appeal were preferred to the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge has decreed the claim in full. He has devoted a considerable portion of his judgment to the investigation of the question whether the defendants had established their alleged right to fish in the khal on the basis of either prescription or immemorial custom. His conclusion is, that the defendants have acquired no such right. This determination, in our opinion, is not liable to be challenged in second appeal. But the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon the question of the alleged title of the plaintiff is defective and cannot be supported.

The Subordinate Judge refers to the decisions in Hori Das Mal v. Mohamed Jaki (3) and Satcowri Ghosh v. Secretary of State for India (4) as authorities for the proposition that, in certain circumstances, a tidal and navigable river may become private property. But he has not found the nature of the stream in this particular case, which is a matter of vital importance for the determination of the controversy between the parties. If the stream was a public navigable river at the time of the Permanent Settlement, it is extremely improbable, as was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State for India (5), that its bed could have been settled with the Zamindar, as part and parcel of his grant. On the other hand, although the bed may not have been so settled, it is conceivable that a several fishery of a public navigable river which passed through the ambit of his Zamindari might have been granted to him. It is consequently necessary to determine, in the first instance, the nature of the stream, whether it was or was not a public navigable river. If the question is answered in the negative, the plaintiff may succeed by proof of a grant of a several fishery. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (1), such a grant of several fishery need not be established by a direct proof of the grant. The judgment delivered by Lord Sumner in the case just mentioned describes the various kinds of evidence which may be adduced in proof of an original grant of this description. The decision in Attorney-General v. Emerson (2) points to the same conclusion; Lord Herschell observed in that case that "the possession of a right of several fishery is evidence of the ownership of the soil over which it is exercised." It has undoubtedly been laid down in more than one case that the ownership of a several fishery raises a presumption that the freehold is in the grantee of the several fishery. And Baron Parke, in delivering the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber in Holford v. Bailey (6), said, "a several fishery is, no doubt, prima facie, to be assumed to be in the soil of the defendant." It is consequently necessary for the plaintiff to prove either that there was a grant of the bed itself of the Zamindari at the time of the Permanent Settlement (which would be consistent with the theory that the disputed channel was not a public navigable river but a khal as alleged by the plaintiff) or that, although the channel was a public navigable river, there was in reality a grant of a several fishery in favour of the Zamindar. On this point, evidence furnished by the thak map and the quinquennial papers will be of great value. Their weight must be determined along with such evidence as there may be on the record of exclusive user of a several fishery by the plaintiff or his predecessor. The respondents have urged that the case is concluded by the findings contained in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge on this point, but we are unable to accept that contention as well founded. On the other hand, there are expressions in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge which indicate that he did not realise the distinction between the different points of view from which the case should be approached.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remitted to him to be re-heard in accordance with law. The question of the alleged right of the defendants will not be open for re-consideration, it must be taken to have been finally decided against them; the only point for consideration will be the title of the plaintiff.

Costs will abide the result.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

SINGARIAH CHETTY v. CHINNABBI.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 153 of 1917, (Appeal Suit No. 364 of 1917, on the file of the District Court, North Arcot), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupathi, in Original Suit No. 198 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.—The present suit of the plaintiff is not maintainable. The plaintiff put in a claim based on this mortgage when fifth defendant attached the hypotheca before judgment in Original Suit No. 872 of 1913. The claim having failed, he filed Original Suit No. 919 of 1914 to set aside the order on the claim-petition which was also dismissed owing to plaintiff's failure to comply with an order as to payment of costs. The effect is that the order on the claim-petition has become conclusive within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code. Plaintiff cannot now, under the guise of enforcing his mortgage, re-agitate the same matter in contravention of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 63. Velu Padayachy v. Arumugamy Pillai (1) and Ramasami Chetti v. Atigiri Chetti (2). What was practically decided in the order on the claim-petition was the fifth defendant's right to treat the hypotheca as the property of 1st and 2nd defendants' was established in opposition to the plaintiff's right. That has been conclusively decided. The plaintiff's rights cease to exist.

Mr. O. Padmanabha Iyengar (with him Messrs. T. K. Srinivas Thathachariar and N. O. Vijayaraghava Iyengar, for the Respondents.—The claim order did not go beyond the proceedings in which it was passed. It is not conclusive against the auction-purchaser in another proceeding. The order does not affect the plaintiff's right to enforce his mortgage. See Umash Chunder Roy v. Rui Bullubh Sen (3), Ibrahimhai v. Kabulabhai (4) and Kamini Kant Roy v. Ram Nath Chuckerbutty (5).

suit on a mortgage-bond executed by the guardian of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of plaintiffs. Before its institution, the mortgaged property had been brought to sale by fifth defendant in execution of a decree obtained by him against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (Original Suit No. 69 of 1914 on the file of the District Munsif of Tirupati) and purchased by defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The latter opposed the suit alleging (1) that the suit mortgage was only a fictitious document without consideration, and (2) that the suit was otherwise not maintainable. The first defence, though successful in the Court of first instance, was found against by the Subordinate Judge in appeal; and we are not now concerned with it. The Subordinate Judge, however, in giving a decree for plaintiffs omitted to consider the objections to the maintainability of the suit; and it is with these, which have been pressed on us by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar on behalf of third defendant, the present appellant, that we have to deal.

The main objection is based on Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, and was considered and rejected by the District Munsif on issue No. 2.

The facts are these. Prior to Original Suit No. 69 of 1914, fifth defendant had instituted another suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Original Suit No. 872 of 1913, and had effected an attachment before judgment of the suit property under Order XXXVIII, rule 6. Plaintiffs preferred a claim based on their mortgage. This was dismissed. Thereupon, plaintiffs filed a suit, Original Suit No. 919 of 1914, for a declaration of their mortgage-rights and for a declaration that these would not be affected by the attachment.

This suit (Original Suit No. 919 of 1914) was eventually dismissed. The plaintiffs were first granted leave to withdraw it conditionally on payment of the costs of defendants; but, as they failed to do this within the time allowed, the suit stood dismissed.

Appellants contend that on the dismissal of this suit, the order on the claim petition became conclusive under Order XXI, rule 63; and that the result is to preclude plaintiffs from enforcing their mortgage against the suit, property under any circumstance whatever.

It has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Mallikharjuna Prasada Naidu v. Matlapalli Virayya (6) that Order XXI, rule 63, applies to orders on the claims preferred to property attached before judgment, and if appellant had purchased the property in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 872 of 1913, there could be no room for doubt.

This is, of course, a suit to enforce the mortgage, not to contest the order on the claim petition under Order XXI, rule 63. But that makes no difference. If plaintiffs are concluded from setting up their mortgage in connection with any proceedings taken against the property in pursuance of Original Suit No. 872 of 1913 and this effect, at least, must be given to the word 'conclusive' in rule 63 then it would be ridiculous to contend that they might, nevertheless, enforce it against a purchaser of the property in execution of the decree. Vide Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Velu Padayachi v. Arumugam Pillai (7). Mr. Padmanabha Aiyangar, however, for plaintiffs, seems to distinguish the case on the ground that appellant purchased in execution of another decree altogether, and that the order on the claim-petition is only conclusive as regards the parties to the same and for the purpose of the suit or execution in connection with which the claim was preferred. The correctness of this argument, of course, depends on the meaning to be attached to the word 'conclusive' in rule 63 of Order XXI.

On behalf of the respondents we are referred to Umesh Chunder Roy v. Raj Bullubh Sen (3), Ibrahimhai v. Kabulabhai (4) and Kamini Kant Roy v. Ram Nath Chuckerbutty (5). The first of these certainly appears to be authority in respondent's favour. The learned Judges say "the finding of the Court in the execution department that the sale was invalid, only meant that the sale was invalid as against the judgment-creditor, and as against any purchaser who might purchase at a sale held in execution following that attachment." The other two cases have no direct bearing on the point. In Kamini Kant Roy v. Ram Nath Chuckerbutty (5) the learned Judges only consider sections 13 and 373 of the old Civil Procedure Code. Not section 283, which corresponds to Order XXI, rule 63. In the Bombay case the decision turned on the necessity of bringing a suit to contest a claim-order on an attachment which was raised. So also in a case of this Court [Gollanipalli Subbayya v. Sankara Venkataratnam (7)]. In both these cases the learned Judges may be said to discuss the matter as if the effect of the claim-order did not go beyond the proceedings in connection with which it was passed, but the dominating factor of their decision is the release or withdrawal of the attachment.

On the other hand, we are referred to a decision of this Court Ramasamy Chetty v. Aligiri Chetti (2), which is just as strong an expression of opinion as Umesh Chunder Roy v. Raj Bullubh Sen (3), but the other way. The learned Judges say:—

"The statutory suit under Order XXI, rule 63, is to establish the right which the attaching plaintiff claims in the property in dispute. This, in our opinion, is the right to attach the property in question as the property of the defendant whenever it may be his interest to do so and the effect of not suing would be to debar him from claiming to attach such property at any future time."

As far as the cases go, we have, therefore, practically a decision of our own Court against one of the Calcutta High Court; and we should by preference follow the former. I think, moreover, that a consideration of the rule with reference to the facts of the present case leads to the same conclusion. The right in litigation in the claim petition and in Original Suit No. 919 of 1914 was the right of fifth defendant to treat this suit-property as the property of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in opposition to the mortgage-right therein set up by plaintiffs. The dismissal of plaintiffs' claim-petition, followed by the dismissal of their suit, Original Suit No. 919 of 1914, had the effect of conclusively settling the question as between plaintiffs and 5th defendant. It seems to me unreasonable to suggest that the result was only conclusive as regards the particular suit (Original Suit No. 872 of 1913) out of which the decision arose, and that it was open to the plaintiffs, in spite of this decision, again to contest the same person's right of proceeding against the same property in another suit. If they could not do so, then neither could they seek to enforce their mortgage against an auction-purchaser in the second suit. For, as Sadasiva Aiyar, J., has so clearly pointed out in the case already quoted (Velu Padayachi v. Arumugam Pillai (1)), the one is a necessary consequence of the other. "The conclusive establishment of the decree-holder's right to bring the property to sale free from the claimant's alleged encumbrance involves the right of the purchaser at the sale to get a title to the property free from such encumbrance".

(7) 42 Ind. Cas. 683; (1917) M. W. N. 851; 22 M. L. T. 496.

I would, therefore, hold that the order on plaintiffs' claim-petition is conclusive and that the suit-mortgage is not enforceable against the items of property dealt with therein. The decree of the lower Appellate Court should be modified accordingly. Plaintiffs should pay the costs of defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 throughout.

ODGERS, J.—The facts are fully set out in the judgment of my learned brother, and I agree that Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar's contention that the rights of the plaintiffs are now gone, must prevail by the terms of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code. The effect of this rule, combined with the fact that the Suit No. 9.9 of 1914 was dismissed as the plaintiffs did not pay the costs, will, in my opinion, debar the plaintiffs from re-agitating their rights again even though the proceeding be, as here, a regular suit on the mortgage. In other words, once the order became conclusive in the words of the rule, a suit on the mortgage is barred at any time. It is, however, strenuously contended by Mr. Padmanabha Aiyangar for the plaintiffs that the order is not conclusive against the auction-purchaser in another proceeding, and he relies on Umash Chunder Roy v. Raj Bullabh Sen (3). There a claim was rejected in attachment in execution of a decree for rent; the judgment-debtor paid off the decree and no sale was held. The effect of this was that the attachment ceased and any rights of the claimant became valid and she had no need to bring a suit to establish them. The learned Judges based their decision on the fact that the decree was paid off and in fact differed on that ground from the lower Court. Were it otherwise, the case may be said to be conclusive only as to the proceedings to which it relates. Reference may here be made to the passage in the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Velu Padayachi v. Arumugam Pillai (1). He says, at page 402*: "The auction-purchaser is entitled to take advantage of the order against the claimant in such a case" (if it is not set aside by a suit within one year) not because the purchaser is the representative of the decree-holder but because the order which established the right of the decree-holder to bring the property to sale against the claim of the claimant cannot be given effect to otherwise and was clearly intended by the Legislature to have the effect of precluding the claimant from putting forward his claim in opposition to the auction-purchaser at the sale held in pursuance of the order against the claimant." In the case reported as Ramasamy Chetty v. Aligiri Chetty (2) it is clearly laid down by Wallis, C. J. and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., that the effect of omitting to bring a suit is to bar the remedy. That was a case of attachment before judgment and the learned Judges say: "The statutory suit under Order XXI, rule 63, is to establish the right which the attaching plaintiff claims in the property in dispute. This, in our opinion, is the right to attach the property in question as the property of the defendant, whenever it may be his interest to do so, and the effect of not suing would be to debar him from claiming to attach such property at any future time. The fact that the attachment effected by him would, if it had not been raised previously, have come to an end by the dismissal of the suit does not affect his right to sue under Order XXI, rule 63."

I agree with my learned brother in preferring to follow the Madras decision, especially having regard to the grounds on which, in my opinion, the Calcutta decision was based. It is not necessary to discuss the point taken as to limitation and I, therefore, agree with the order proposed.

A transfer by a Hindu widow of her rights, being a valid transfer, the transferee is entitled to a decree as against the reversioners declaring his right to obtain possession as owner of the property transferred so long as the widow remains alive.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 27th of February 1918.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

This is a defendant's appeal. The two plaintiffs are the daughters of one Jagdeo Pande who died leaving two widows, Musammât Phul Kunwar and Musammât Hansrani. After his death these two widows on the 2nd of September 1913, made a gift of part of their estate in favour of the two daughters of Jagdeo conditional on the two daughters agreeing to support them, the two widows. There was a condition in the gift that if the widows were not supported they would have a right to set aside the gift and to take possession of the gifted property. The two daughters applied to the Revenue Court for mutation of their names. They were opposed by Mandeo, the first cousin of Jagdeo Pande, and the mutation was refused. Thereupon the plaintiffs brought a suit out of which this appeal has arisen for a declaration that they were the owners in possession of the shares specified in the deed of gift. Mandeo resisted the suit. He pleaded that Jagdeo had left a son Jamna who died two years after him, that the deed of gift was a conditional gift, that there had been no total surrender of the estate and that, therefore, the title to the estate had not passed to the donees. He also pleaded that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act was a bar to the suit as brought. The Court of first instance granted a modified declaration. It held that Jagdeo was entirely separate from Mandeo, also that the gift was not a gift of the total estate and that the gift was also conditional. But it held that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession of the estate during the life time of the widows. The widows were made pro forma defendants to the suit but the real defendant was Mandeo alone. He has since died and he is now represented by the present appellant, Kandhai Pande. On appeal the decree was upheld by the District Judge. Three points have been taken before us:

(1) That section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is a bar to the suit,

(2) That there has been no total surrender of the estate and that, therefore, the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree at all, and

(3) That the gift was conditional, void and not binding.

So far as section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is concerned, Mandeo, it is clear, was the only opposing defendant in the suit and as against Mandeo the plaintiffs could only obtain a declaration. In these circumstances, they could have asked for no further relief as against him. It is clear, therefore, that there is no force in this plea. So far as the other points are concerned, the declaration granted by the Courts below is a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the property gifted so long as the two widows remain alive. Whatever the nature of the gift may be, it is quite clear that the widows at least were entitled to part with their own rights as such widows, and Mandeo had no ground whatsoever to take any exception to such a transfer. The widows do not oppose the plaintiffs' claim and Mandeo is not in a position to contest the declaration that has been granted. The transfer by the widows of their rights as such was a valid transfer. It is clear, therefore, that there is no force in this appeal. We dismiss it with costs including fees on the higher scale.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 28, 260—Counterfeiting stamps, what amounts to.

Accused, a stamp vendor under the Forest Account Rules, altered some used stamps so as to resemble genuine un-used stamps, and affixed them to licenses issued to licensees for grazing cattle:

Held, that the alteration of the stamps amounted to counterfeiting within the meaning of section 28 of the Penal Code, and that the accused was guilty of an offence under section 260 of that Code. [p. 786, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the order of the Sub-Judge, Sangor, dated the 31st May 1920.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision made from Jail. No one appears in this Court in support of the application, though the revision application was drawn up by a legal practitioner. The applicant was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sangor, under section 260, Indian Penal Code, and the conviction, and sentence of rigorous imprisonment for one year, and a fine of Rs. 200 or in default further rigorous imprisonment for six months, have been upheld in appeal by the Sessions Judge. The charge against the applicant was that he used as a genuine stamp, namely, a forest stamp of the value of Rs. 2, on Exhibit P VII and six stamps of the value of Rs. 6-14 on Exhibit P-VI, knowing them to be counterfeit of stamps used by Government for the purpose of Forest Revenue. The fraud disclosed by the evidence is a most ingenious one.

The applicant used to issue licenses for cattle grazing in triplicate, in form given in Appendix C to Appendix XIV of the Central Provinces Forest Manual. These licenses are paid for by stamps affixed to the licenses, and the applicant was the licensed stamp-vendor under the system of forest stamps described in the Forest Account Rules. He was licensed vendor of the third class; that is to say, he purchased supplies of stamps from the Treasury for cash and received a discount on his purchases of one-anna in the rupee. The stamps, like the licenses, are in triplicate, and are pasted on the back of the licenses, so that the first part of the stamp is affixed to the third part of the license, the second portion of the stamp to the second part of the license and the third part of the stamp to the first part of the license. After the stamps are affixed the vendor tears off the second and third parts of the license bearing the first and second parts of the stamp and gives them to the purchaser, keeping the first part of the license with the third part of the stamp in the book of counterfoils which is periodically submitted to the Range Officer. The middle part is recovered, as far as possible, from the licensee by the Forest Checking Officer, while the licensee retains the third part bearing the first part of the stamp. A licensee will not pay the fees unless he sees that the proper number of stamps of the right value are issued to him on his license and the stamps are distinctively marked so as to be easily recognised by illiterate persons, so it would seem as if fraud were impossible. But the applicant devised a scheme with the connivance of some Forest Checking Officer. The Forest Checking Officer necessarily gets hold of a number of middle part licenses and stamps. As the middle part stamps are almost identical in appearance with the first part issued, the applicant, according to the prosecution case, got hold from some Checking Officer of some used middle part stamps and affixed them to the licenses issued to licensees, receiving payment in full as if the stamps had been new. In this way the applicant received from the licensees money for stamps for which he had paid nothing to Government, or rather he sold the stamps twice and paid for them only once.

The evidence shows that license, Exhibit P-6, was issued to one Ramlal Teli. Exhibit P-6 bears eight stamps of the aggregate value of Rs. 9 covering sixteen heads of cattle. The counterfoil, Exhibit P-9, bears only two stamps of the aggregate value of Rs. 2-2 covering eight heads of cattle. Two of the stamps on Exhibit P-6 are genuine, first part stamps corresponding with the third part stamps on Exhibit P-9. The remaining six stamps on Exhibit P-6 are middle part stamps, which should not have been affixed to the third part of the license issued to the licensee. Of these six stamps three are in their original condition, but three have been altered; the printed boundary line which is then in the middle part stamps has been thickened with ink so as to resemble the thick printed boundary line of a first part stamp.

Similarly, Exhibit P-7 is the license, third part, issued to one Darai Teli. It bears four stamps of the aggregate value of Rs. 2.13 covering seven heads of cattle. Its counter-foil, Exhibit P-10, bears only two stamps of the aggregate value of 13 annas, covering five heads of cattle. Two stamps on Exhibit P-7 are genuine, corresponding with those on Exhibit P-10. The extra two stamps on Exhibit P-7 are middle part stamps which have been altered to resemble first part stamps by thickening the boundary line with ink.

In the applicant's possession were found a number of old middle part stamps. The applicant denied this, but it is fully proved, as are all the other facts establishing the case against the applicant.

Not only have the two extra stamps on Exhibit P-7 been altered with ink, and three of the six extra stamps on Exhibit P-6 been similarly altered, but all eight extra stamps have been cut down to the size of first part stamps, the middle part stamps being longer than first and third part stamps. This is not easy to follow from a description, but a glance at Exhibit P-13 which contains a complete stamp in all three parts will make it plain. The eight extra stamps on Exhibit P-6 and Exhibit P-7 were thus counterfeited within the meaning of section 28, Indian Penal Code, since they were middle part stamps altered to resemble first part stamps in order to deceive the licensees, who were in fact deceived. They were sold to the licensees as genuine first part stamps, though they were in reality second part stamps altered to resemble first part stamps. Under section 28, Indian Penal Code, the imitation need not be exact. The applicant's conduct amounts to an offence under section 260, Indian Penal Code, though he might have been charged and convicted under other sections of the Penal Code. This disposes of the 6th and main ground of the revision application which is to the effect that, as the stamps used were genuine Government stamps they were not counterfeited; as the Sessions Judge says, the facts are quite different from those in Queen v. Shuroop Ohunder Dass (1).

(1) 2 W. R. 85, Cr.

The remaining grounds of the revision application do not call for detailed notice. The alleged illegality of the search by the Range Officer has been adequately discussed by the Sessions Judge, and I do not find that any evidence has been illegally admitted. The application is dismissed.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 7th September 1920.

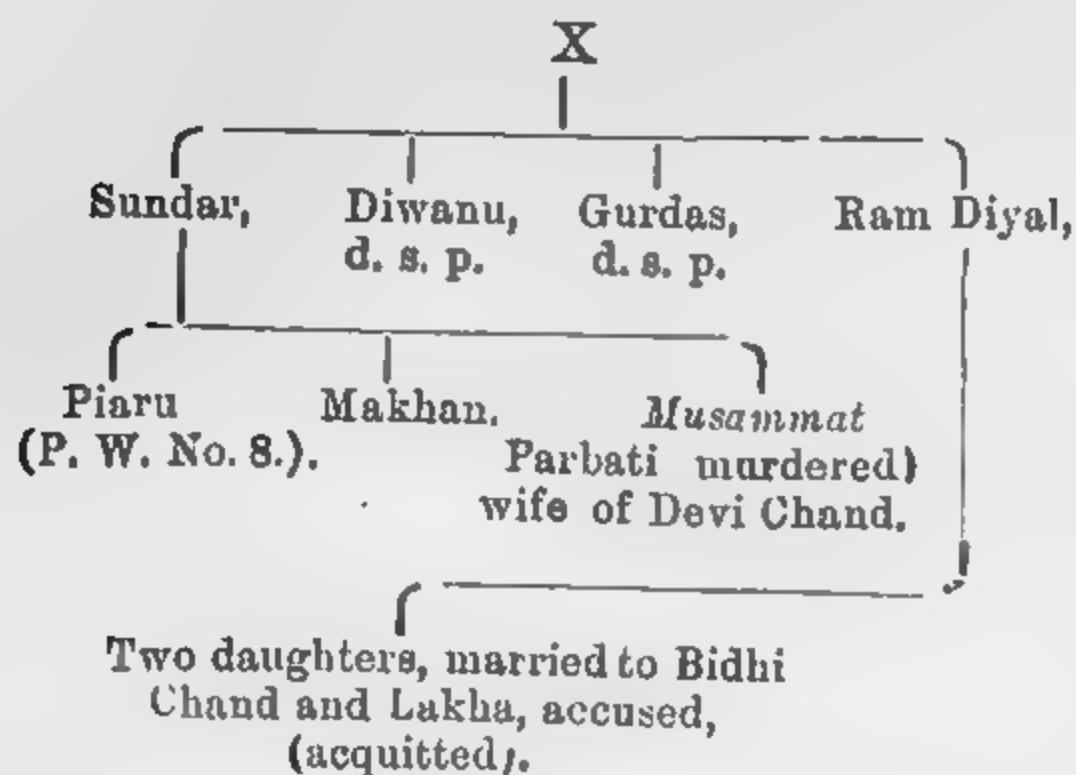

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ram Lal, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Ganga Ram and his son, Dammun, have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Hoshiarpur of the murder of Musammatt Parbati, wife of Devi Chand, at village Chatwal, on the night between the 16th, 17th of July 1920, and have been sentenced to transportation for life. They have filed a joint appeal to this Court through Counsel.

GANGA RAM v. EMPEROR.

The following pedigree-table will be of use for the proper understanding of the facts of the case.

Sundar and his brothers having died, the whole of the land owned by them has become the property of Piarn and Makhan both of whom were employed in the army. During their absence, the land was managed by Lakha, the husband of their first cousin. Piarn has given evidence to the effect that Bidhi Chand, who is married to another first cousin of his, wrote and told him that Lakha was wasting his property. Upon this Piarn secured his discharge from his regiment, came to his village and sent Lakha away to his own home. Bidhi Chand, however, remained in the village but a dispute arose between him and Piarn which resulted in Bidhi Chand also leaving Piarn's house. Lakha and Bidhi Chand are said to have resented the fact that they had lost control of the land. Ganga Ram was a tenant of the greater part of Piarn's land and it is in evidence that, in the month of Jeth before the murder, Piarn told Ganga Ram that he intended to cultivate the land in future himself and that Ganga Ram's tenancy was, therefore, to come to an end. There was admittedly no formal ejection proceeding, and, according to Piarn, Ganga Ram made no protest at his ejection, but merely said that he would see how long Piarn's new arrangement for the cultivation of his land would continue. Part of the new arrangement was that Musammât Parbati, whose husband was in the Forest Department, came from the village of Guranwara and began to keep house for Piarn and to help him generally in the management of his affairs.

The theory for the prosecution is that, in consequence of the resentment felt by them at losing control of Piarn's land, Musammât Parbati was murdered by Ganga Ram, his son, Dammun, Bidhi Chand and Lakha. On the night of the murder Piarn was, according to his own statement, which is not corroborated by any other evidence, absent from home, having gone to Guranwara. Though his statement that he was absent is uncorroborated, there is no evidence to contradict it and we see no reason for not accepting it. Kithu (P. W. No. 15) a boy of 12 years of age, is said to have been the first person who discovered that Musammât Parbati had been murdered. He says he told Musammât Dhalli, a neighbour, who told him to keep quiet and he accordingly did not inform anyone of what he had found. The next person, so far as is known, to discover the murder was Piarn himself on his return to the village at about 9 or 10 A. M. (one pahar of the day had passed, according to his own statement). He informed the lambardars and a report was made at the Police station in which it was not stated that any person in particular was suspected.

On the 20th of July Ganga Ram made a confession which was duly recorded by Raja Gajindar Singh, Honorary Magistrate, whose residence is two miles from the scene of the occurrence. On the 21st of July Dammun's confession was also recorded by the same Magistrate. On the 25th of July the case was taken up by the Committing Magistrate who, after recording most of the evidence for the prosecution, examined Ganga Ram who retracted his confession, alleging ill-treatment on the part of the Police. After Ganga Ram had been examined Dammun was also examined by the Committing Magistrate and adhered to the confession made by him to the Honorary Magistrate. There was, however, one discrepancy between the confession and the subsequent statement which has been referred to in detail by the learned Sessions Judge. In the Court of Session, Dammun retracted his confession and the reason he gave for making the statement which he did before the Committing Magistrate was that the Public Prosecutor had told him that, unless he repeated the statement which he made to the Honorary Magistrate, he would be made over to the Police constables to be beaten to death. This explanation the learned Sessions Judge considered to be quite absurd and we entirely agree with his view that the Public Prosecutor would never have made use of such a threat to a prisoner, and also that he would not have held out any inducement or hope of pardon in order to make an accused person confess. The confessions implicated not only the two present appellants but also Bidhi Chand and Lakha. The two latter have never confessed and have all along strenuously protested their innocence, and as there was no sufficient corroboration of the retracted confessions as against them, the Sessions Judge acquitted them.

At the time of the murder of Musammât Parbati, her 2½ year old female child was sleeping with her. She was found next morning in the house of Ganga Ram, appellant, which is at a distance of more than 100 karams from the scene of the murder. On the road between the two places there are two stiles and it is admitted that the child could not have crossed these stiles without assistance. In the confession it was stated that Ganga Ram took the child away to his own house immediately after the murder and there is evidence on the record to the effect that she was seen in the court-yard of Ganga Ram's house early on the morning after the murder. Musammât Devko (P. W. No. 12) says that she saw the child before sunrise wearing what she describes as an ulta kurta. This means that the child was wearing her kurta either inside out or back to front. The matter is of importance in view of the fact that Ganga Ram in his confession says that at the time of the murder Dammun gagged Musammât Parbati by thrusting the child's kurta into her mouth. Some stains of blood were found upon this kurta and it is probable that it got these stains at the time of the murder. It is also very improbable that Musammât Parbati put the child's kurta on her inside out or back to front, and the evidence of Musammât Devko makes it highly probable that it was one of the murderers who put the child's kurta on her after the murder and took her from that place to the house of Ganga Ram. This point has not been noticed by the learned Sessions Judge, but, in our opinion, it is important corroboration of Ganga Ram's confession.

Counsel for the appellants has commented upon certain discrepancies between the confessions of Ganga Ram and Dammun. The first of these is that, whereas Ganga Ram says that his son gagged Musammât Parbati with the child's kurta, Dammun himself says that he used his own chaddar for this purpose. In our opinion, this discrepancy is not of much importance. The murderers must have been in a great hurry and must have been much excited at the time of the murder and it is quite possible that Dammun may have forgotten with what article he gagged Musammât Parbati, or that Ganga Ram may have made a mistake as to what article was used for this purpose. The story of Piar Singh (P. W. No. 2) and the statement made by him to the Police which led to the discovery of the bangles and bracelets of the murdered woman have been fully detailed in the judgment of the Court below and we do not propose to discuss it. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge in his view that Piar Singh, who is the son of Ganga Ram, appellant, and the brother of Dammun, has made a false statement in order to help the appellants. We see no reason to doubt that it was he who produced the murdered woman's ornaments; but he may, however, easily have learnt where they were from either of the appellants, or it is possible that he may have got them back from Talsi to whom they are said to have been given by Dammun and have himself hidden them.

The second discrepancy in the confession commented on by Counsel is connected with these ornaments. In the confession before the Honorary Magistrate Dammun said that he made these ornaments over, just as they were, to Talsi; whereas in his statement before the Committing Magistrate he said that he broke them first before handing him over. It is impossible to say why Dammun changed his statement in this respect. The ornaments when found were not broken and Counsel urges that this fact contradicts Dammun's statement before the Committing Magistrate. No doubt, it does, but it does not contradict his original confession; for some reason or other, he thought it necessary to introduce this change. We are unable to say why he did so, and we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that it is not a sufficient reason for rejecting his confession.

The next point urged was that Ganga Ram gave no details as to how or where the murderers met. He proceeded at once to state how the murder was committed, whereas Dammun does give such details. Ganga Ram's statement was recorded first and that of Dammun one day later. Ganga Ram was probably allowed to make his confession in his own words, whereas it may have been thought necessary to get further details on the following day when that of Dammun was recorded. The omission of these details by Ganga Ram does not amount to a discrepancy.

The Sessions Judge has referred to the confession of one of the accused as corroborating that of the other. In connection with this, Counsel for the appellants has referred to Gangapri Kardepi v. Emperor (1) wherein it was held that the confession of one co-accused could not be said to be corroborated by the confession of another co-accused. In that case, however, there were eleven accused, seven of whom confessed, each one implicating himself and all the rest. These seven men were convicted on their own confessions, and the question which arose was, whether the remaining four accused who had not confessed could be convicted solely on the confessions of their co-accused when they were not corroborated by any independent evidence. It was held that, as against the persons who did not confess, the confession of one of their co-accused could not be said to be corroborated by the confessions of others. The facts here are different, for here we have both the accused confessing, and in such circumstances we see no reason why it should not be said that the confession of one of them corroborates the confession of the other.

After the appellants were examined by the Committing Magistrate on the 28th of July, there were two further hearings before him, one on the 17th of August and another on the 26th of August, but on neither of those occasions did Dammun, though he appears to have been represented by Counsel, retract his confession. Under these circumstances, we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that there are no reasons for holding that his confession was other than a voluntary one. As regards independent corroboration of the confessions, we do not think it can be said that there is any except the evidence as to the child's presence in Ganga Ram's house on the morning after the murder, but the corroboration furnished by this evidence is, in our opinion, extremely important and we hold that it is quite sufficient to support the convictions.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Behari Adraki has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Gaya under section 302, read with section 149, and sentenced to transportation for life.

* * * * *

The conviction of Behari has been based on his retracted confession and on two pieces of circumstantial evidence which the learned Sessions Judge accepts, namely, that Behari was seen at a well near the place where the body was buried at about midnight, and that he returned to his house after midnight, and was displeased when asked where he had been. Neither of these pieces of evidence can be said to directly corroborate the confession, for there is no mention in the confession either that

BIHARI ADRAKI v. EMPEROR.

Behari went to the well to get water or that he returned home after it, but they are no doubt circumstantial evidence supporting the likelihood of the confession being true.

There is nothing to show that the confession was made otherwise than voluntarily, as shown by the Sessions Judge. The appellant failed to show that there was any coercion employed by the Police or any one else, or that there was any irregularity in recording the confession. The motive for the murder is well proved, and the confession makes out that the appellant took an equal share with all the rest in causing the death of Ragho, he did not attempt to minimize the part he took in any way.

It is contended that Jagan was named as an assailant out of enmity because Jagan had named the appellant as one of the murderers; even if this is the case, the appellant still stated that he himself was one of the murderers, as stated by Jagan.

A confession made and retracted must always be open to some suspicion. Deputy Legal Remembrancer on behalf of the Government of Bengal v. Karun Baiyobi (1), Reg. v. Thompson (2) but it is sufficient for a conviction if the Court is satisfied that it was voluntarily made and true. Queen v. Sreemutty Mongola (3), Queen v. Bhuttun Rujurun (4), Queen v. Musammatt Jema (5), Queen Empress v. Gharya (6), Queen Empress v. Maiku Lal (7), Queen Empress v. Raman (8), Queen Empress v. Gangia (9).

When the appellant asserted that the confession was due to Police influence the learned Sessions Judge made careful inquiry and found that there was no such influence or coercion.

In Queen Empress v. Maiku Lal (7) it was decided that a retracted confession should not necessarily be rejected if there is no evidence on record to support the confession.

The credibility of such confession in each case is a matter for the Court to decide according to the circumstances of each particular case. If the Court is of opinion that the confession is true, it is bound to act, so far as the person making it is concerned, on that belief.

In Raghu Bhumi v. Emperor (10) it was held by this Court that, even a retracted confession may be acted upon so far as the confessing accused is concerned if, after applying the proper tests, the Judge is convinced of its truth.

In Ohheria v. Emperor (11) Ohamier, C. J., held the conviction on a retracted confession to be bad because the accused was a weak person who was likely to be easily influenced; the Court in fact was not satisfied that the confession was voluntarily made.

In Guja Majhi v. Emperor (12) this Court held that a conviction based on a retracted confession which was the only evidence connecting the accused with the murder was sustainable and in Emperor v. Kehri (13), the Allahabad High Court decided that, as regards the person making it, a retracted confession may even without any corroborative evidence form the basis of a conviction.

In Sheo Prasad Koei v. Emperor (14) Mullick and Atkinson, JJ., laid down that a conviction based on an uncorroborated confession is not bad if the surrounding circumstances point to the confession having been the outcome of a voluntary act on the part of the confessor and in absence of coercion by the Police or others. The fact of the retraction would not deprive the confession of its voluntary character. It is for the Court to decide whether it believes the confession or not, [Emperor v. Dhani (15)].

In the present case the Sessions Judge found the confession to be voluntary and believed it to be true. He noted certain other evidence which supported the likelihood of its being true. The two Assessors also found the confession to be true.

We see no good ground for finding that the lower Court and the Assessors were not right in the decision they came to as to the truth of the confession.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the conviction and sentence passed upon the appellant.

HIMSELF AND HIS BROTHER PROBODH
KUMAR DHAR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 403—Criminal breach of trust—Administrator, whether can be proceeded against without sanction of Court—Accounts passed by Court—Administrator, liability of.

Where an estate is entrusted to an Administrator by the Court in the exercise of its intestate jurisdiction, a complaint charging him with criminal breach of trust under section 406 of the Penal Code in respect of the goods entrusted to him cannot be entertained without the sanction of the Court appointing him. [p. 793, col. 2.]

The mere fact that accounts have been filed in the Probate Court, or even the fact that the accounts have been passed by the Court, does not absolve the Administrator from his liability for any particular sums of money which may have been misappropriated by him, and he may be sued in the ordinary way for such sums [p. 793, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta (N. D.), dated the 23rd April 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dasrathi Sanyal (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Mukerjee), for the Petitioner.

—The accused is the petitioner. He has been charged under sections 406 and 409 of the Indian Penal Code under the following circumstances. On the death of the petitioner's elder brother who had left behind him two minor sons, Prafulla and Probodh, your petitioner obtained Letters of Administration in August 1906 limited until the attainment of majority by the minor sons. The Letters of Administration were issued on the furnishing of two sureties and executing a bond for proper rendering of accounts as ordered by the High Court, in June 1907. Then the troubles began when Probodh, the eldest nephew, became major in 1913. It was at his instance in June 1917 that this Court, in its testamentary and intestate jurisdiction, ordered me to file an inventory and account of the estate and effects of my deceased brother. The order, however, did not reach me through proper notices and neither could I take any steps on that behalf. In the meantime, on 31st August 1917, an order of arrest was procured and on the 12th September 1917 I was arrested and brought to Court. On my furnishing proper inventory and accounts, as ordered by the Court, I was discharged, though my troubles did not cease here. The nephews then challenged my accounts as being false. On the 19th January 1920 Prafulla lodged a complaint against me under section 406, Indian Penal Code, on the allegation that the accounts filed by me in the High Court contained false items and numerous fraudulent entries out of which three were selected for the purpose of the said complaint. I was summoned to answer the charge and the case was transferred by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, to the file of J. P. Bonnerjee, Esq., Honorary Presidency Magistrate, for trial. On the 26th March 1920, Prafulla again lodged another complaint against me on the allegation that he had found out on further enquiries into the accounts submitted by me other instances of criminal breach of trust as an Administrator. This case also was transferred to the file of Mr. Bonnerjee for trial. On the 19th April 1920 I objected to this sort of harassing prosecutions and contended the illegality of these proceedings as being ultra vires. My petition was summarily rejected and summons were ordered to issue on 23rd April 1920.

KRISHNA LAL v. PRUFULLA KUMAR.

Against these two last orders the present Rule was obtained. I submit the charges brought against me are based upon the inventory and accounts submitted by me in compliance with the order of this Hon'ble Court. That being so, no prosecution could be started against me on those materials except with the sanction of the High Court. Refers to section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The High Court does not find any fault with the inventory and accounts I have submitted. The complainant, therefore, has no right in law to usurp the power of Court by starting prosecutions against me. Refers to section 98 of the Probate and Administration Act. That section provides for a prosecution under section 193 of the Penal Code with sanction of the Court granting administration. Express sanction of the Court is, therefore, a condition precedent to a prosecution of this sort. I submit, therefore, that in the absence of any sanction of the High Court, the present prosecutions are clearly unsustainable in law. Refers to Santok Chand v. Sujan Chand (1). That case clearly covers the present case.

Babu Frebodd Chanda Chatterjee (with him Babu Asutosh Ghosh), for the Opposite Party.—I submit the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the present case. The Court granting administration as well as the beneficiaries may prosecute an Administrator for his fraud. Criminal offences committed at any time are triable by all Criminal Courts and no want of express sanction would render the prosecution ultra vires. The complainant is, of course, bound to prove his case and satisfy the Court as to offence. My allegations were pressed before the High Court. I submit the mere failure on my part to obtain its sanction would not deprive me of my right to prosecute.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is, whether the Criminal Court can take cognizance of an alleged offence under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code against an Administrator appointed under the Probate Act, without the sanction of the Civil Court, when such Administrator has submitted his accounts to the Court.

(1) 46 Ind. Cas. 836; 46 C. 432; 22 O. W. N. 910; 28 C. L. J. 116; 19 Cr. L. J. 820.

It appears that the petitioner was appointed Administrator to the estate of his deceased brother by the High Court in its original jurisdiction on the 30th August 1905, the administration being limited until either of the two minor sons of the deceased, on attaining majority, would apply for a grant of Letters of Administration to himself. The elder minor attained his majority in 1913 and upon his application the High Court in its testamentary and intestate jurisdiction, ordered the petitioner to file an inventory and account of the estate and effects of the deceased. Subsequently, on his failure to comply, the petitioner was arrested by an order of the High Court in September 1917 and he filed the accounts of the estate and effects of the deceased and an inventory of the properties of the deceased which came into his hands, and it is alleged that he was thereupon discharged. On the 19th January 1920, Prafulla Kumar (the younger brother) lodged a complaint against the petitioner under section 406, Indian Penal Code, on the allegation that the accounts filed by the petitioner in the High Court contained false items and numerous fraudulent entries out of which three were selected by the complainant. On the 25th March 1920 the complainant made a further petition alleging that, on further enquiry, he had found out other instances of criminal breach of trust by the petitioner as Administrator.

The petitioner submitted a petition to the Magistrate praying that the proceedings might be quashed on the ground inter alia that he having rendered accounts to the High Court, the proper Court for making an enquiry as to the falsity or otherwise of the same, which covered a period of about 14 years, was the High Court, and that the Criminal Court was incompetent to go into such accounts. The petition was, however, rejected by the Magistrate and the petitioner thereupon moved this Court and obtained this Rule.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the prosecution is based upon the inventory and accounts filed by the petitioner in the High Court and the items in respect of which he has been charged in the Criminal Court being included in the accounts and inventory filed, the Criminal Court cannot entertain the complaint, at any rate, without a sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Reliance is placed upon the provisions of section 98 of the Probate Act. That section provides for filing of inventory and account by an Executor or Administrator, and sub-sections (3) and (4) of that section lay down:—

"(3) If an Executor or Administrator on being required by the Court to exhibit an inventory or account under this section intentionally omits to comply with the requisition he shall be deemed to have committed an offence under section 176 of the Indian Penal Code.

"(4) The exhibition of an intentionally false inventory or account under this section shall be deemed to be an offence under section 193 of that Code."

Sub-section (3) has no bearing upon the present case. It provides that the non-compliance with the requisition to exhibit inventory and accounts would constitute an offence under section 176, Indian Penal Code. Sub-section (4) lays down that the exhibition of an intentionally false inventory or account shall be deemed to be an offence under section 193 of the Code and, no doubt, the High Court, in its testamentary and intestate jurisdiction, if it were satisfied that a false inventory or accounts had been exhibited, might have granted sanction to prosecute. No objection, however, appears to have been taken to the inventory or accounts in the High Court and the complainant did not apply to the High Court for sanction. The question, therefore, is whether, in these circumstances, the Criminal Court is competent to entertain a complaint without sanction in respect of certain items which were included in the accounts filed in the High Court.

Now, the mere fact that accounts have been filed in the Probate Court or even the fact that the accounts have been passed by the Court, does not absolve the Administrator from his liability for any particular sums of money which may have been misappropriated by him and he may be sued in the ordinary way for such sums. See the case of Khitish Ohandra Acharya v. Osmond Feeby (2) the case of an Administrator pendente lite whose accounts had been passed by the Court. And if a suit can be maintained against an Administrator for sums misappropriated by him, even though his accounts might have been passed by the Court, it is difficult to see why he cannot be criminally prosecuted without the sanction of the Court.

The complaint, however, made against him is one for criminal breach of trust. The estate was entrusted to the petitioner not by the complainant, nor by any one through whom he claims, but by the Court in its intestate jurisdiction. In a recent case Santok Ohand v. Sujan Ohand (1) Chitty and Beauchroft, J.J., quashed the proceeding against the Receiver under section 406, on the ground (among others) that it was the Court and not the complainant who entrusted the goods to the accused. A charge of criminal breach of trust, therefore, cannot, under the circumstances, be maintained against the petitioner except with the sanction of the Court which appointed him Administrator. The present proceedings under section 406 against him must accordingly be quashed, and we direct accordingly.

Messrs. S. P. Sen and Baikunthanath Mitra, for the Accused.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga, under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, recommending that the convictions and sentences passed upon the petitioners be set aside. With the petitioners many others were convicted. The petitioners received non-appealable sentences and the others received appealable sentences. Of the accused convicted, those who had received appealable sentences appealed before the Sessions Judge and the petitioners filed an application in revision under section 435 of the Code for recommendation to this Court. The learned Sessions Judge held that the case led by the prosecution was not proved and set aside the conviction and sentences as against those who had received appealable sentences. He has now referred the case of these who had received non-appealable sentences. The reasons for this recommendation are those contained in the judgment delivered in the appeals by the other accused persons.

I have carefully considered the evidence in the case and the judgment, and I agree with the view taken by the Court below and hold that the convictions of the present petitioners must also be set aside.

The reference is opposed by the learned Assistant Government Advocate. He contends that the Court below was wrong in setting aside the conviction and in holding that the prosecution case was not proved. I had, therefore, to go into the merits of the case in order to satisfy myself whether the learned Judge had committed an error in his finding by taking a perverse view of the evidence in the case. I have also considered the arguments addressed by the learned Assistant Government Advocate, with the result that I agree with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge, though it is possible that in some respects the learned Judge has been hypercritical.

But the reference discloses the anomaly pointed out by me in the case of Pheku Jha v. Emperor (1); if I had differed with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge upon the evidence in that case the result would have been that the conviction of the petitioners would have been upheld. Whereas the convictions of those who had received appealable sentences and had taken more serious part in the occurrence would have been set aside. The anomaly would have been still graver, for the order in the reference upholding the conviction may have been passed, as in the present case, after the term allowed for the Government to move and present an appeal against the order of acquittal passed by the Court below.

In the present case the anomaly would have been still more serious, for the learned Assistant Government Advocate intimated that the Government intended to appeal against the order of acquittal passed by the learned Sessions Judge. I am, therefore, confirmed in my view taken of law on the subject in the aforesaid case, that the learned Sessions Judge himself, when dealing with the appeal of persons who had received appealable sentences, was competent to deal with the applications made by persons who had received non-appealable sentences. In my view, he was dealing with the whole case though the case came to him upon appeal by some of the accused persons. This used to be the practice, particularly in the District of Muzafferpur from where this case has come. The practice has been referred to in some of the cases which I quoted in the aforesaid case of Pheku Jha v. Emperor (1). That appears to me to be the right procedure.

The reference is accepted and convictions and sentences passed upon the petitioners are set aside.

—Sanction to prosecute—Application to superior Court—Court, power of, to make enquiry.

An application under section 195 (6), Criminal Procedure Code, to a superior Court to revoke a sanction granted by a Subordinate Court is not an appeal and should not be dealt with as such [p. 795, col. 2.]

There is nothing, however, in the Criminal Procedure Code which would prevent a Court, acting under section 195 (6) of the Code, from making a preliminary inquiry before deciding whether it should revoke the sanction which has been granted by a Subordinate Court. [p. 795, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 30th August 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 16th December 1918.

Babu M. N. Mukerji, for the Petitioner.

Sayad Mohsin Shah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which the present application for revision arises are as follows:—Muhammad Bashir, minor, through his next friend, Muhammad Baksh, obtained a decree for Rs. 150 in the Small Cause Court, Lahore, against Mr. Francis Darah. He applied for execution in the Small Cause Court but his application was infructuous. He then obtained a transfer certificate from the Lahore Court and applied for execution of the decree in the Court of Lala Gokal Chand, Munsif, Amritsar. The application which was filed in the Amritsar Court on the 3rd October 1918 was supported by an affidavit in which Muhammad Baksh stated inter alia (1) that a notice to show cause why he should not be arrested was served upon Mr. Darah at Lahore; (2) that upon the service being effected, Mr. Darah had run away from Lahore to Amritsar; and (3) that upon receiving another notice from the Amritsar Court Mr. Darah would again abscond. A warrant of arrest was issued against Mr. Darah and he paid up the amount due under the decree and applied for sanction to prosecute Muhammad Baksh for false statements alleged to have been made in the affidavit. Notice in regard to this application was sent to Muhammad Baksh but no personal service upon him was effected. Eventually, substituted service was effected and on the 16th December 1918 Lala Gokal Chand Munsif granted the sanction applied for. Muhammad Baksh, it appears, was absent in Australia when this sanction was granted and on his return he applied to the District Judge that the sanction should be revoked. The District Judge held that the Subordinate Judge was the proper officer to deal with his application. The Subordinate Judge has held that, at the time when the Munsif granted the sanction, there were no sufficient materials before him for arriving at the conclusion that the affidavit contained false allegations. He was of opinion that Mr. Darah should be given a further opportunity to show that the affidavit was a false one. He accordingly treated the proceedings before him as an appeal under the Civil Procedure Code and passed an order under Order XLI, rule 23, thereof remanding the case to the Munsif with a direction that he should give an opportunity to Mr. Darah to make out his case and hear the objections, if any, of Muhammad Baksh, and then decide the application for sanction according to law. Both parties have applied for revision of this order.

It is quite clear that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in considering the application before him as if it was an appeal under the Code of Civil Procedure. It was an application to the Court to which the Munsif was subordinate under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and under sub clause (6) of that section the Subordinate Judge had power to revoke the sanction. The proceedings before the Subordinate Judge were by way of revision and not by way of appeal at all. It is pointed out that Lala Gokal Chand has now been transferred from the Amritsar District, and that his successor could not grant sanction for an offence committed in the Court of Lala Gokal Chand. There is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which, in my opinion, would prevent a Court of revision, acting under section 195 (6) of the Code, from making a preliminary inquiry before deciding whether it should revoke the sanction which has been granted by a Subordinate Court. Section 476 of the Code expressly lays down that, when any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in section 195, and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court may make any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary. Mr. Darah presses that he may be allowed to adduce further evidence to show that some of the statements in the affidavit were false. He says that he has been disgraced by being arrested quite unnecessarily at the instance of Muhammad Bakhsh, and seeks redress therefor.

I, therefore, allow the revision and, setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, direct him to dispose of the application before him in accordance with law. He should himself make the further inquiry which he ordered the Munsif to make and, after having made it, should decide whether the sanction granted by Lala Gokal Chand should be revoked or not. This order also disposes of the cross-application for revision No. 86 of 1921, filed by Muhammad Bakhsh.

Warrant of attachment signed "By Order" by Serishtadar—Warrant addressed to Nazir—Nazir, power of, to delegate it to peon—Procedure, legality of.*

A warrant for the attachment of property in execution of a decree was signed by the Serishtadar of the Court "By order" and was addressed to the Bailiff Nazir of the Court, the warrant was delegated to a peon and the accused resisted him in executing the warrant: the Court directed the prosecution of the accused, under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for offences under sections 183 and 186 of the Penal Code, and that order was attached in revision on the ground that the warrant was neither legally made and signed, nor legally made over to the peon:

Held, that there was no illegality in the warrant, as the words "By order" showed that the Court had authorised the Serishtadar to sign it, and the Nazir had power to delegate it to a peon. [p. 797, col. 2.]

Civil criminal revision against the order of the Munsif, Kishanganj, dated the 8th May 1920, directing the prosecution of the petitioners.

FACTS.—On 8th May 1920 the petitioners were directed to be prosecuted by the Munsif of Kishanganj under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. The order, in brief, was as follows: "Whereas the men named below obstructed the peon, being a public servant, on 20th December 1919, in execution of a writ of attachment, dated the 18th December 1919, and snatched away from his custody the moveables and live stock &c.,...and thereby committed the offences enumerated in sections 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code..."

The writ referred to above was headed "in the first Court of the Munsif at Kishanganj."

"Money Execution Case No. 1994 of 1919."

It was addressed to "The Bailiff of the Court." It was signed as "By order—Udit-narayan Serishtadar, Munsif's Court." It was issued on 18th December 1919, and made returnable on or before 16th January 1920.

On the back of the writ the entries showed that it was made over to the Nazir on 18th December who made it over to the peon by name: the latter returned it after service on 22nd December and the Nazir returned it to Court on the same date with the following remarks thereupon: "Sir, It appears from the peon's report that the accused persons snatched away the property which was attached by him."

Mr. Athar Butain, for the Petitioner.—The writ of attachment, purporting to have been issued under Order XXI, rule 30, Civil Procedure Code, was not signed by the Munsif. The Serishtadar had no authority to sign it and, therefore, no offence has been committed. This is the settled Calcutta practice. Relies upon Deputy Legal Membrancer v. Mir Sarwar J. n (1).

The writ was addressed to the Bailiff of the Court and has been executed by the peon. In this case the Bailiff was the Nazir and he had no power to delegate to the peon.

HEM CHANDRA DUTTA v. GIRENDRA CHANDRA CHAUDHURY.

Cites Mohini Mohan Banerji v. Emperor (2).

Mr. Manohar Lal (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.—Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Mir Sarwar Jan (1) has been dissented from by a Division Bench of this Court: See Khidir Bux v. Emperor (3). The onus is on the petitioner to show that the Serishtadar had no authority. Here the writ, on the face of it, shows that it is signed "By order" and, therefore, prima facie the Serishtadar had authority to sign. Whether in fact this is so or not will be determined at the time of the trial.

The question as to the power of delegation was elaborately argued before your Lordship and the matter has been settled now in Doman Mahto v. Emperor (4).

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the setting aside of an order passed under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Munsif of Kishanganj, directing the prosecution of the petitioners under sections 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code, and also for the setting aside of an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate summoning the petitioners under those sections. The order under section 476 is attacked on the ground that the writ of attachment, which the petitioners are alleged to have resisted by seizing the property attached, was neither legally made and signed nor legally made over to the peon who served the writ. In the first place, it is argued that the writ was addressed to the Bailiff Nazir of the Civil Court and, therefore, it should have been served by him as Bailiff and not by a peon to whom he delegated it. It is now, I think, clearly settled that the Nazir of the Court has the power to delegate. The writ bears upon it the name of the peon to whom the delegation was made. Next, it is urged that the warrant of attachment has not been signed by the Munsif and so is of no effect. The writ is signed by the Serishtadar of the Munsif's Court By Order. It is contended that the authority by which the Serishtadar signed for the Munsif should have been stated on the writ, and several decisions have been referred to this effect. However, the ruling of Mullick and Thornhill, JJ., in Khidir Bux v. Emperor (3), shows that it was for the petitioners to show that there was no authority, and that it is to be presumed that the authority had been given. In my mind the mere entry of the words "By Order" shows that the Serishtadar had the Munsif's order to sign. I am unable to see that the writ of attachment, on its face, was such that the petitioners would be justified in resisting the attachment. The whole case before this Court depends upon whether the Munsif was justified, on the facts before him, in coming to a decision that a prosecution of the petitioners was likely to succeed. It is a question on which he was entitled to form his opinion and prima facie, having the writ and the report of the peon before him, he was fully entitled to take proceedings under section 476. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, too, having received the proceedings from the Munsif who had jurisdiction was justified in issuing summons under sections 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code. The points now put forward by learned Counsel for the petitioners can be urged when the petitioners are put upon their trial. The application is rejected. The application of the Crown for costs is rejected.

Rule against the order of the District Magistrate, Dinajpur.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta, for the Petitioner.—The petitioner has been accused of having defamed the complainant, opposite party, under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code. During the pendency of the proceedings the parties made up their complaint and a petition of compromise, wherein the petitioner apologised to the opposite party for the offence done, if any, which was accepted by the latter, was drawn up and filed with the peshkar of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate before whom the case was pending. On the petition being put up before the Court, the learned Magistrate sent for the complainant and had a talk with him in his private chamber in course of which the Magistrate expressed his disapproval of the compromise. Thereupon the complainant, who is a pleader of that Court, filed a petition praying for the withdrawal of the petition of compromise "for some special reason" without specifying the same. The Magistrate, accepting that petition, has adjourned the case and the case is being proceeded with. The present Rule has been directed against such course of procedure being followed and for the quashing of further proceedings. I submit, the procedure followed by the Magistrate is wholly illegal. The parties came to an amicable settlement, had a petition of compromise setting out the terms agreed upon and accepted by the parties, and duly signed by them, filed in Court. The Court was bound to accept the compromise under the circumstances. It had no further jurisdiction over the matter and ought to have acquitted the accused under section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is solely due to the undue interference of the Magistrate that the complainant resiled from the compromise. A compoundable offence, as in the present case, is compounded in law the moment the apology is tendered and accepted. Refers to Kusum Bewa v. Bechu Bewa (1), Mahomed Ismail v. Faizuddin (2). A compromise petition once filed cannot be withdrawn and the Court has no jurisdiction over the matter any further. In compoundable cases the composition is complete and effective even though no compromise petition has been filed in Court. Refers to Kumarasami Chetty v. Kuppusami Chetty (3). The allegation that the complainant signed under a misapprehension was not made in the subsequent petition of the complainant neither did he raise any objection on the ground of other terms and conditions of the compromise being omitted from the compromise petition. These are clearly after-thoughts on which no reliance should be placed. Refers to Emperor v. Gana Krishna Walunj (4).

Babu Ban Behari Sarkar, for the Opposite Party.—My submission is, that the compromise having been made under a misapprehension the compromise ought not to be acted upon. Further, all the terms upon which I agreed to settle the case were not incorporated in the petition of compromise. One of my terms, for instance, was that the accused must apologise to me for his offence in open Court. That has not been done. I submit, the Court was right in not acting upon that sort of prevaricating compromise. Further, the onus is on the accused to show that there was a lawful compromise. Refers to Murray v. Queen-Emress (5). The Court must be satisfied that there has been a compromise in reality. Here the finding is in my favour. A party to a compromise can resile therefrom before the passing of any order thereon by the Court. The case in Kusum Bewa v. Bechu Bewa (1) is not against me. The latter part of the head-note of the case is not quite accurate inasmuch as it is not borne out by the judgment. The case in Mahomed Kanni v. Pattani Inayathulla (6) is an extreme case and should not be followed. The case in Kumarasami Chetty v. Kuppusami Chetty (3) has no application to the facts and circumstances of the present case. I submit, the Court is bound to enquire as to the bona fides of a compromise before it can record an acquittal under section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

JUDGMENT.

This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate and the opposite party to show cause why the proceedings against the petitioner should not be quashed, or why a further inquiry should not be made into the petition of compromise.

It appears that the opposite party, who is a Pleader of the Thakurgaon Munsif's Court in the Dinajpur District, brought a case for defamation against the petitioner, who is a Muktear's clerk. The parties, however, came to an amicable settlement and a petition of compromise was filed in the case in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate before whom the case was pending. The petitioner denied that he had defamed the opposite party and said that, if any such defamatory words had reached the ears of the opposite party, the same were absolutely false, that the petitioner was sorry for it and tendered his sincere apology to the opposite party. The opposite party stated in the same petition that the accused having admitted that the defamatory words that he heard were false, and having expressed his regret at the circulation of the false rumour and having apologised in the above manner, he (the opposite party) did not wish to proceed further in the matter and he prayed that the case might be finally disposed of under the provisions of section 345, Criminal Procedure Code. The petition was signed not only by the petitioner but also by the opposite party himself. It was engrossed by his (the opposite party's) clerk, Gopal Chunder Das.

After the petition had been filed with the peshkar, the latter put it up before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Thereupon the Sub-Divisional Magistrate sent for the opposite party, and there was some talk between them as the result of which the Pleader put in another petition by which he wanted to withdraw from the compromise. That has been given effect to, and the case is being proceeded with against the petitioner.

We are of opinion that there was a lawful compromise under section 345, Criminal Procedure Code, which amounted to an acquittal of the petitioner, and that no further proceedings ought to have been taken against him.

Under sub section (2) of section 345, certain offenses can be compounded with the permission of the Court before which any prosecution for such offense is pending, and clause (5) also provides for composition where the accused has been committed for trial, or where he has been convicted and an appeal is pending, with the leave of the Court. In the other cases mentioned in section 345, no leave of the Court is required for compounding the offense. The offense for which the petitioner was being prosecuted was defamation, under section 500, and it was compoundable by the person defamed. The latter agreed and himself signed the petition filed in Court having accepted the apology offered by the petitioner. The offense, therefore, was lawfully compounded and the Magistrate ought to have directed an acquittal. Instead of doing that, he sent for the Pleader (the opposite party) and it appears from his report to the District Magistrate that it was he who asked the Pleader to withdraw the petition of compromise, on the ground that the petition was filed under a misapprehension, the misapprehension being that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had not approved of this compromise when he was informed of it by some Pleaders and Muktears on the morning of that day, whereas the opposite party was given to understand that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had approved of it.

We do not see what the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had to do with the composition of the offense under section 500, it being a private matter between the Pleader and the Muktear's Mohurrir. It is clear that it was after the talk with the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that the Pleader changed his mind.

It is said that there was an understanding with the opposite party that the petitioner would offer an apology in open Court. But the petition does not state that. The petition itself contained expression of apology by the petitioner, and acceptance thereof by the opposite party. That the petition was signed with knowledge of its contents is not, and cannot be, denied by the opposite party. The subsequent petition of withdrawal shows that the petition of compromise filed in Court was made by both parties, and it was prayed by the subsequent petition by the opposite party that the petition of compromise might be rejected.

There being no doubt of the opposite party having signed the petition or of compromise with knowledge of its contents and of which the Sub Divisional Magistrate was satisfied when he sent for the opposite party, as appears from his order, he ought to have acquitted the accused under the provisions of section 345, Criminal Procedure Code. See the case of Kusum Bewa v. Bechu Bewa (1).

We were referred on behalf of the petitioner, to two cases in the Madras High Court. In the case of Mohomed Kanni v. Pattani Inayathulla (6) Abdul Rahim, J., observed as follows: "A composition arrived at between the parties of a compoundable offence is complete as soon as it is made, and it has the effect of an acquittal of the accused under section 345, Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of that offence, though one of the parties, later on, resiles from the compromise and no statement or petition recording the compromise is filed in Court by the parties".

See also the case of Kumarasami Chetty v. Kuppusami Chetty (3).

It is unnecessary for us to consider the question whether the compromise of a case outside the Court is a valid compromise and must be given effect to, when no petition was filed in Court, and this was the question in those two Madras cases. Here the petition was filed in Court and signed by both parties, and we think it ought to have been given effect to.

The result is that further proceedings in the case against the petitioner are quashed and the Magistrate directed to record an order of acquittal against the petitioner.

Rule made absolute.

An order upon an appeal against an order sanctioning the prosecution of the appellant, contained the words: "The application is rejected", amounts to a refusal to consider the question, and is a material irregularity within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Sanction to prosecute for giving false evidence is not justified where there is no documentary evidence, and the question is of oath against oath.

Civil revision, from an order of the District Judge Agra, dated the 9th of March 1920.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Mr. U. S. Bapat, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from the decision of the District Judge of Agra, dismissing an appeal against an order of sanction to prosecute the applicant for giving false evidence. The only judgment passed by the learned District Judge in appeal is, "The application is rejected". I do not think that an order like this should be passed. An order like this passed in a sanction for prosecution case amounts to a refusal to consider the question and would, in my opinion, at least amount to a material irregularity amounting to illegality in exercise of its jurisdiction by a Court. In order to assure myself of the correctness of the order passed by the first Court I went through the record of the case. There is no documentary evidence whatever on the record to support the statement of the plaintiff as against the defendant. It is a pure question of oath against oath, and, in my opinion, the order of sanction granted by the first Court was not justified. I, therefore, accept this application in revision and set aside the order of sanction.

The starting point of limitation for an application to set aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud is, the date when the applicant had knowledge not merely of the factum of the sale, but a clear and definite knowledge of the facts which constitute the fraud, and it is for the other side to show that the applicant had such knowledge at a time from which, taken as a starting point, the application is barred. [p. 802, col. 2.]

P. applied to set aside an execution sale on the ground of fraudulent suppression of process and other irregularities, the Court rejected the application merely upon the deposition of the applicant and without considering all other evidence which he was prepared to give as regards the suppression of processes and other irregularities of which he complained:

Held, that the Court acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction. [p. 802, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the District Judge, 24 Parganas.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Apurba Oharan Mukherjee for Babu Saroda Oharan Maity, for the Petitioner.—This is an application under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The petitioner made an application under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside an execution sale on the ground of irregularities, fraudulent suppression of processes and consequent inadequacy of price. The petitioner, who is a pardanashin lady, was examined on commission, in the course of which she stated that she had hearsay knowledge of the sale some two or three months before the application to set aside the sale was preferred. Relying upon this deposition, both the Courts below held that the application for setting aside the sale was barred by limitation.

The Courts below should not have shut out all other evidence which the applicant was prepared to give regarding the suppression of processes and other irregularities of which she was complaining. The fact that she admitted hearsay knowledge of the sale two or three months before the date of her application is not sufficient to bar her application by limitation. She alleged fraud which must be held to have a continuing influence. In such a case, mere knowledge of the factum of the sale is not sufficient, the applicant must have definite knowledge of the facts which constitute the fraud before time can run against her. See Narayan Sahu v. Damodar Das (1). See also Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (2). This is a fit case in which your Lordships should interfere in the exercise of your revisional powers.

Babu Mohendranath Roy (with him Babus Penoyendranath Ganguly and Parashnath Mukherjee), for the Opposite Party.—An error in applying the Law of Limitation is not an error which can be corrected on revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Benode Behari Bhadra v. Ram Sarup Chamar (3). See also Ramgopal Jhoonjhoonwalla v. Joharmall Khemka (4) Mohim Ohunder Fal v. Ahmad Ali Khan (5). The provisions of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure are not applicable, although there might be an error in the decision touching the question of limitation. Your Lordships should not, therefore, interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Apurba Oharan Mukherjee replied.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order by which the District Judge of the 24 Pargannas affirms the order made by the Munsif, First Court, at Diamond Harbour. By the said order the Munsif rejected an application for setting aside a sale made on the ground of fraudulent suppression of process, certain irregularities, and insufficiency of price. Both Courts have held that the application was barred by limitation, and in coming to this conclusion they have proceeded merely on the deposition of the applicant who was examined on commission. In the course of this deposition she stated that she had hearsay knowledge of this sale some two to three months before the application was preferred. From the date of this hearsay knowledge of the fact of sale the Courts below are of opinion that limitation should run. We are unable to think that they are right in so holding. The applicant must have knowledge not merely of the factum of the sale, but a clear and definite knowledge of the facts which constitute the fraud before time can run against him or her. This is apparent from a number of reported cases, to one of which we may refer, namely, Narayan Sahu v. Damodar Das (1).

This case and other cases show that, when by a fraud of this nature, involving suppression of process and submission of false returns, the applicant is kept out of knowledge of the sale of his property such fraud must be held to have a continuing influence. Indeed, in such a case it is for the other side to show that the injured party had clear and definite knowledge of the facts which constitute the fraud at a time from which, taken as a starting point, the suit is barred.

In this connection we may refer to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (2). Relying upon these passages in her deposition in which the applicant admits hearsay knowledge of the sale two or three months before the date of her application, the Courts below shut out all other evidence which the applicant was prepared to give as regards the suppression of processes and the other irregularities of which she complains. Thus, they have not merely fallen into an error but also acted with material irregularity in the exercise of their jurisdiction and this, therefore, gives this Court jurisdiction to interfere under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In this view, we must set aside the orders of both the Courts below and remit this case to the Court of first instance in order that it may deal with it and dispose of it in accordance with law.

Costs of this Rule will be costs in the case. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

Order set aside.

Hindu Law—Partition-deed—Gift—Defeasance clause, validity of.

The principle that an estate once vested cannot be divested is not recognised as a general rule of Hindu Law, even of the Hindu Law of Succession. Therefore, a defeasance clause in a partition-deed of an estate that, if a particular event shall happen,—in this case a default in making certain payments,—the interest of the defaulter shall pass to another person, is not repugnant to any principle of Hindu Law. [p. 804, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 963 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 164 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The defeasance clause in the partition-deed providing for the divesting of the estate on the son's not paying kist is invalid. An estate once vested cannot be divested. Whether the clause is permitted by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act or not, under section 2 of the Act it is repugnant to the principles of Hindu Law: See Full Bench judgment in Krishna v. Sami (1).

Mr. K. Bashyam Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—The condition is perfectly valid. It is not opposed to any general rule of law nor is it against public policy. The partition was effected after the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act. The provisions of this Act allow of such dispositions subject to such conditions. In Krishna v. Sami (1) the Full Bench have stated that the rule that an estate once vested cannot be divested cannot be laid down without exception and that it is nowhere laid down in express terms by the Hindu commentators. Committee have made inroads on this principle, and the cumulative effect of all the rulings is, that the principle is disregarded in practice. Both under Hindu law and the Transfer of Property Act, the condition is valid. See Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (2), *Sreenutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. ## JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question in this case arises on the construction of Exhibit A, a document drawn by unprofessional hands, and is, whether, under it, the widow of one Srinivasa Aiyar, the vendor of plaintiff appellant, acquired any interest, which she could convey to him. The argument before the lower Appellate Court was apparently based on a translation of Exhibit A, which, like that made here, is inaccurate. It was conducted with reference mainly to the meaning of the expression "with absolute right," not to the general principles affecting the dispositions made. In the application of these principles to what actually occurred there was a mistake as to the contents of one phrase used. Here the argument proceeded on different lines.

By Exhibit A Nannu Aiyar and his sons, first defendant and Srinivasa Aiyar, husband of plaintiff's vendor, effected a partition, but we are concerned only with one portion of the settlement then agreed to, that relating to the property, of which half is claimed under Exhibit A, which was left in the enjoyment of Nannu Aiyar and Annapurni ammal, his wife. The terms on which they were to enjoy it and it was to devolve, are, according to the translation given in the District Munsif's judgment which, with consent of the parties, we adopt, except as to one point to be separately referred to, as follows:—

"(1) the properties shown in list 1 are to be enjoyed by Nannu Aiyar and Annapurni Ammal for their lifetime without any right of alienation. (2) Srinivasa Aiyar and first defendant (Appavier) shall pay the kist of the properties equally. (3) After spending (for funeral expenses) at the death of each of the two parents. (4) Srinivasa Aiyar and first defendant shall divide equally a 1/16th Pangu (a moiety of the whole) at the death of each of the two parents. (5) If the two do not agree and spend either for the payment of the kist of the said lands or for the funeral expenses, the survivor of the two, that is, Nannu Aiyar, and Annapurni Ammal, shall take the 1/8th Pangu of lands (the whole of the lands in list 1) absolutely, and (6) if the two do not agree and pay for the funeral expenses of the survivor and the kist of the lands, he who spends shall take absolutely the 1/16th Pangu, which was in possession of the survivor."

The figures in this extract have been inserted for convenience of reference; and, observing that no attempt was made here to dispute the lower Appellate Court's interpretation of the words "with absolute right" as conferring the fullest estate, I give in legal language the result, as it appears to me, with reference to each clause. Under (1) and (4) there is a creation of life-interest in favour of Nannu Aiyar and Annapurni Ammal, in a moiety of property each with remainder as regards each moiety to their sons. There are then conditions for the defeasance of these estates, in remainder, the son's obligation to pay the kist on the property throughout and to pay the funeral expenses on the death of each parent being stated generally in clauses (2) and (3), and the defeasances in case of default of the defaulting son's estate in either moiety being provided for later. If the default occurs during the lifetime of both parents, that case is not provided for and it is fortunate that it has not arisen. If default occurs during the lifetime of the surviving parent, under clause (5) such parent shall take an absolute interest in the whole property. If it occurs later after the death of the surviving parent, the non-defaulting son shall take the moiety which is in his or her possession. What is expressed and what I must, therefore, take to have been contemplated, is a life estate of each moiety in each of the parents (we have already decided to that effect in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 310 of 1915) with remainder as regards each moiety to the sons, subject to the conditions for defeasance on each of two different dates, those of the deaths of the two parents, at the one of both moieties in favour of the surviving parent, at the other of the moiety still in the parent's possession in favour of the non defaulting son.

There is no question of any defeasance on the death of Nannu Aiyar; and plaintiff, claiming under Srinivasa Aiyar, contends that the latter then acquired an absolute interest, which his legal representatives could convey in Nannu Aiyar's portion, the condition for defeasance in case of subsequent default, such as defendants allege, being unenforceable; and we have to deal with this contention. Exhibit A was subsequent to the Transfer of Property Act, and, if its provisions are applicable, there is nothing in them, against which the conditions for defeasance offend. For, the last sentence of the explanation to section 19 contemplates divesting of an estate once vested; sections 28 and 29 recognize conditions subsequent, as effective, although they must be construed strictly; and there is nothing in these conditions, which offend against public policy, or the rules contained in sections 10, 12, 21 to 25 or 27.

It is further, however, necessary to consider, with reference to section 2 (d), whether the conditions offend against any rule of Hindu Law and, in particular, whether the principle that the estate once vested cannot be divested is such a rule. It does not appear that the expression "rule of Hindu Law" has ever been the subject of comprehensive definition by authority, or that any criterion for the purpose of distinguishing between such rules and the principles deducible from particular classes of cases has ever been laid down. But for the present purpose it is sufficient that, as I shall show, the principle above referred to has been statedly or impliedly disregarded by the Judicial Committee in connection with dispositions of property and has never been recognised as a general rule, even of the Hindu Law of succession.

In Ramlal Mookerjee v. Secretary of State (6) the Judicial Committee found it unnecessary to deal with a plea that certain disqualifications, if they were conditions subsequent, were in violation of Hindu Law. But in Tarokessur Roy v. Soshi Shikhuressur Roy (7) it was held that a gift of one-third share to each of the testator's three nephews, with remainder to the survivor, in case any of them died without issue, was valid; Sreemully Soorjeemoney Dosses v. Denobundoo Mullick (3) being followed and the ground of decision being that the gift-over was to persons alive, and capable of taking on the death of the testator, to take effect on the death of a person also then alive. And in Kristoromoni Dasi v. Narendro Krishna Bahadur (8) the validity of a condition for the defeasance of a prior absolute interest by a subsequent event is assumed and it is added only that (1) the event must happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being at the time of the gift; and (2) a defeasance by way of gift-over must be in favour of some one in existence at the time of the gift; the Mullick and Tagore cases already cited being referred to as authority for these requirements. It is clear that in the case before us they are complied with.

To turn to the Hindu Law, it is true that Turner, C. J., in delivering the judgment of a Full Bench composed of all the learned Judges of this Court, referred to the rule that "an estate, which has once vested, cannot be divested by the occurrence of a contingency, which, if it had occurred prior to the period of vesting, would have curtailed or avoided the rights of the person in whom the estate has vested," Krishna v. Sami (1). But he went on to say that, "the rule that an estate once vested in a full owner cannot be divested is nowhere stated in so many terms by the Hindu Commentators," and that it could not be "laid down without exception in respect of property governed by the Mitakshara." The decision in the case before the Court, one of removal of a disqualification, was against its application. But in Narasimha Razu v. Veerabhadra Razu (9) it was applied, Krishna v. Sami (1) being distinguished, on the ground that the property there in question was unobstructed. In the latter case the question was of divesting by a subsequent birth of a son heir, and reference may be made to the analogous cases in connection with subsequent adoptions, as between adopted son and either the absolute estate of a reversioner or the estate of the widow, for instance, Sri Virad: Pratapa Raghunada Deo v. Sri Brozo Kishoro Patta Deo (10), Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Achary Ohowdhury (11), Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (12) and the authorities referred to in the recent Full Bench decision of this Court, Vaidyanatha Sastri v. Sarithri Ammal (13). The inference is against the existence of any rule of general application or of any which can be regarded as binding in cases of transfer of property to living persons or in any class of cases other than those to which it has in fact been applied. We have been shown no instance of the application of such a rule to cases resembling that before us, in which there is no question of succession, much less of such a succession as is involved in the authorities, to which reference has been made. In these circumstances, the conclusion must be in favour of the validity of the conditions in Exhibit A.

To apply those conditions to the facts, two breaches of them are alleged. If the decision depended on one of them, the default of Srinivasa Aiyar's heirs in respect of the funeral expenses of Annapurniamma, it might be necessary to call for a finding, because the lower Appellate Court has lost sight of the fact that the liability is, not for the expenses of the funeral, but for those of the obsequies up to the performance of the annual ceremony and it might, if that default were material, be necessary to call for a finding, as to whether plaintiff's tender was in time with reference to the latter. But that default is not material, when the other default relied on is established. The lower Appellate Court has found, and we must accept its finding, that Srinivasier's legal representatives failed to pay the kist, as Exhibit A requires them to do, from 1901 to 1912. No doubt, plaintiff offered to pay it during the proceedings before the lower Appellate Court and he contends here that he should be awarded the property on his making the payment. But there is no doubt that the condition was infringed, because, however strictly it is construed in favour of the person in possession of the estate, it has not been complied with, within a reasonable time; and there is no authority for the application, which plaintiff suggests, to the present facts of the principle on which transfers in favour of an innocent purchaser are avoided, on the advantage received by the transferor being restored.

In these circumstances, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree. In this case, we have to construe a partition-deed to determine what its legal effect is in the events that have happened. Exhibit A is the deed of the partition between the father and his two sons. It provides for the reservation of certain property for the father and his wife and for division in equal shares of the rest of the property between their two sons. There can be no doubt, on the language of the document, that the estate reserved to the father and the mother in the first instance was a life interest. Similarly, the estate reserved for the survivor of the two is also a life estate. There are some conditions which have now to be noticed. The first one relates to the sons paying the kist upon the reserved property. It states that in case the kist is not paid, the parents will have an absolute estate. A provision almost in identical terms is made with reference to the half estate of the survivor. Another clause is to the effect that the two sons should pay the funeral expenses of the father and of the mother. It provides that in case one of the sons alone pays the expenses and the other does not the son who defrayed the expenses should be the sole owner of the reserved property.

What happened is this. The father died in 1898. Soon after, one half of the property was divided between the sons equally. It must, therefore, be taken that the defeasance clause which gave the parents an absolute estate, if there was a failure to pay the kists, was not put into operation. In 1901, one of the sons died. He made a bequest of all his properties in favour of his wife. In that, he specifically refers to the share which would accrue to him on the death of his mother. The mother died in 1912. After her death the predeceased son's widow sold the half share in the property in the possession of the mother-in-law to the present plaintiff. On this title the plaintiff sues for partition and possession. The first defendant is the surviving son and the other defendants are his sons.

It has been found by the District Judge that, after the death of the father, the Government assessment was not paid by the widow of the deceased son. He holds that in consequence of this failure, the property in the possession of the mother was converted into an absolute estate. He has also found that, since the death of the mother, one-half of the funeral expenses have not been met by the daughter-in-law or her vendee. There was, apparently, an offer to pay the kist after 1912. In these circumstances, the question arises whether, on the death of the mother, the deceased son's widow acquired any right in the property of the mother-in-law, which would enable her to convey to the plaintiff her interest in it. The point is by no means an easy one. In the first place, we have to consider whether the rules contained in Chapter II of the Transfer of Property Act are applicable to this case. The last portion of section 2 lays down that nothing in the Second Chapter of this Act shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist Law. Therefore, if the provisions of the Second Chapter are in any way inconsistent with the provisions of Hindu Law, they should not be applied to this case. I have come to the conclusion that the particular provisions in the Transfer of Property Act, by which this case is affected, do not lay down any rule inconsistent with the Hindu Law. First of all I shall clear the ground by saying that the estate, which the partition-deed secured to the two sons was a vested one. The definition section of Chapter II makes that clear. The explanation to section 19 provides, "that an intention that an interest shall not be vested is not to be inferred from a provision that, if a particular event shall happen, the interest shall pass to another person." This is exactly what has been provided in the partition-deed, and to my mind, therefore, the estate which the two sons took was a vested remainder subject to the life-estate of the parents. The next section to which reference may be made is section 28 which deals with the defeasance of a vested interest. By that section an interest already ascribed may be subjected to a condition subsequent or a limitation, as an English lawyer would say, that in case a specified uncertain event shall happen, such interest shall pass to another person. By the same section this ulterior disposition is made subject to the rules contained in sections 10, 12, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 27. Examining these latter sections, it is clear that the condition in the partition-deed is not obnoxious to any of them. They deal with restraints upon alienation with property being divested in the event of insolvency or of an attempted alienation, with contingent interest, with transfers to members of a class on attaining a particular age and so on; I might also refer to section 31 of the Transfer of Property Act, which lays down a principle identical with the one enunciated in section 28. Therefore, if this case has to be decided under the Transfer of Property Act there cannot be much doubt that the defeasance clause which converted the life estate of the mother into an absolute estate would be regarded as valid. The English Law, to which I shall refer later on, is also to the same effect.

Before proceeding further, I shall have to see whether the rules contained in sections 19, 28 and 31 of the Transfer of Property Act are in any way opposed to the principles of Hindu Law. As far as possible, I shall refer only to the cases decided by the Privy Council. In Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dosses v. Denobundoo Mullick (2) it was laid down that a condition if one of the sons of the testator did not leave male issue, the other sons should take that share was an enforceable one. It was further held that the sons had become divided among themselves and that the widow of the deceased son was entitled to the accumulated income on her husband's share; but it was laid down that she was not entitled to the corpus, as, by the defeasance clause, her husband's estate vested in the surviving brothers. In Sreemuttu Soorjesmoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (3) Knight Bruce, L. J., said this: "This being so, we are to say whether there is anything against public convenience, anything generally mischievous, or anything against the general principles of Hindu Law in allowing a testator to give property, whether by way of remainder, or by way of executory bequest (to borrow terms from the Law of England) upon an event which is to happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being. Their Lordships think that there is not; that there would be great general inconvenience and public mischief in denying such a power and it is their duty to advise Her Majesty that such a power does exist." This is a clear enunciation that a defeasance clause, like the one with which we are concerned, is not repugnant to any principle of Hindu Law. The next case of importance is the well-known Tagore case (5). That case dealt with a large number of questions. One of the principles laid down was that it was not competent to a testator to create a new rule of succession; another, that an estate in favour of unborn persons should not be created by a Will. At the same time, their Lordships laid down that "it is competent to a Hindu in making his Will to make a provision that the estate which he creates and gives to the recipient of his bounty may be divested or defeated by some thing which takes place after. This is established by this case. It is admitted by Mr. Evans and Mr. Kennedy, and may be taken as absolute law." In Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhury (4) the same principle was laid down. Towards the end of the judgment, Sir R. P. Collier says "that their effect is to make the absolute estate before given, defeasible in the event of a failure of issue living at the time of her death, in which event the estate was to revert to the donor and his heirs. That there is nothing in such a condition repugnant to Hindu Law appears from the decision of this Tribunal as to an executory devise." In Tarokessur Roy v. Soshi Shikhuressur Roy (7) it was held that the gift-over of a life-estate was competent, it being to persons alive, and capable of taking on the death of the testator, and to take effect on the death of a person or persons then alive. No doubt, this related to a life-estate, but the principle is the same whether the divesting relates to a life-estate or to a vested remainder. In Raikishori Dasi v. Debenranath Sircar (14) a gift-over on the death of the surviving son was held good. The last of the Privy Council cases on this point, so far as I am aware, is Kristoromoni Dasi v. Narendro Krishna Bahadur (8). That case affirms the principles enunciated in the earlier decisions to the fullest extent. Lord Hobhouse states thus: "In stating the rule relating to the defeasance of a prior absolute interest by a subsequent event, it is important to add; first, that the event must happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being at the time of the gift, as was laid down in the Mullick case; and, secondly, that a defeasance, by way of gift over, must be in favour of somebody in existence at the time of the gift as laid down in the Tagore case (5)." Both these conditions are complied with in the present case. The event happened while one of the donees was alive, and the gift over was to the same person who was alive at the time of the gift and is still living. As was laid down in Sonatan Bysac v. Sreemuttu Jaggutsoondree Dossee (15), what a Court has to see is, whether the limitation either as regards the person who is to take, or the estate that is to be taken, violates any of the fundamental principles of Hindu Law. I am not aware of any rule of Hindu Law which prevents a donor from adding a limitation to the estate which is to be taken by providing that certain conditions should be complied with. No doubt, if the condition is opposed to public policy, or, in the language of Moore, In re, Trafford v. Maconochie (16) is against the policy of the law, the condition will be ignored and the bequest simpliciter will be given effect to. Section 23 of the Indian Contract Act recognises this principle as part of the law of India, if there is no such repugnant condition and if there is no text of Hindu Law, or a course of decisions in India, prohibiting a substantial gift for failure of a condition, there is no reason why the principles which have governed English Courts and which have found expression in the sections of the Transfer of Property Act, to which I have referred, should not be applied to the construction of Hindu dispositions of property. I shall now very briefly refer to the rule of English Law on this point. In Barchow v. Black, Pattison v. Henderson (17) it was pointed out: "The position of an absolute unlimited owner subject to a conditional gift-over is unknown to the Law of England but well-known to the Scotch Law. Hence, in Scotland, although a conveyance to a man 'and his heirs and assigns whomsoever' makes him an absolute owner..., there may follow a valid conditional substitution or gift over to which, on the occurrence of the contemplated events, effect will be given." The present day English Law is not as rigid as was believed in the last case. It has gone through various modifications which it is not necessary to refer to at any length now. In Avelyn v. Ward (18) the condition was that if the devisee failed to give a release within three months after the testator's decease, then the property should vest in some body else. This condition was enforced. In 28 Halsbury the various cases in the English Courts are summarised in paragraphs 1477 onwards. Numerous clauses of forfeiture or defeasance have been recognised. I may refer to one case in particular, namely, Oomiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury (19). The House of Lords in that case held that an absolute estate subject to an executory gift was enforceable. In Lovell, In re, Sparks v. Southall (20) Mr. Justice, P. O. Lawrence has come to the conclusion that a defeasance clause of this description should be regarded as a limitation of the estate and not as a condition. What has been referred to in the Scotch Courts as a condition subsequent is dealt with in the English Courts, either as an executory devise or as a limitation of an estate. When one remembers the tenacity with which precedents are adhered to, it is not surprising that the new nomenclatures should be utilized to get away from obvious inconvenient positions. However, if certain fundamental notions are not departed from it is clear that conditional dispositions of property will be given effect to, even by English Courts. The language employed by Mr. Justice P. O. Lawrence in the latest case suggests that he is inclined to accept the Scotch view of the law within proper limits without totally ignoring English precedents. The limits are approximately these:—(a) The condition must not be immoral or opposed to public policy; (b) it should not merely be a restraint upon alienation or an impediment to the enjoyment of the property; (c) it should not postpone the ultimate devolution, beyond the lifetime of a life in being, at the time of the bequest; and (d) the ultimate devolution must be either to the testator himself (this is not fully recognised by the text-writers) or to some one who was alive at the date of the bequest. To these limitations, if we add in India that the condition should not contravene any recognised principle of Hindu or Muhammadan Law, we have a set of principles. I do not say they are incapable of amplification, into which one can work in a greater principle than any of these, namely, that, as far as possible, the intention of the testator should be effectuated. Examining the present case in the light of the above conceptions I am of opinion that, on the death of the mother, who had acquired an absolute estate in the property, by virtue of the failure of the other son's heirs and assigns to pay Government kist, the son's widow did not inherit the half share which she sold to the plaintiff.

For these reasons, I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expl. IV, O II, r. 2—Mortgages, several—Successive suits by mortgagee, whether competent—Causes of action, distinct—Procedure.

Where two distinct mortgages are successively executed by the same debtor in respect of the same property and in favour of the same creditor, the causes of action on the two mortgages are distinct, and, although it is open to the mortgagee in bringing a suit upon the first mortgage to include the claim on the second mortgage, that course is not obligatory upon him. A subsequent suit, therefore, on the second mortgage is not barred either under Explanation IV to section 11 or under Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 812, col. 2; p. 815, col. 1.]

There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Transfer of Property Act to prevent the holder of two independent mortgages over the same property, who is not restrained by any covenant in either of them, from obtaining a decree for sale on each of them in a separate suit, subject, however, to this reservation that he cannot sell the property twice over, nor sell it under the second decree subject to the first. [p. 816, col. 2.]

Dwarka Nath Nandi v. Mritunjoy Patra, 3 Ind. Cas. 175, followed.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Bankura, dated the 25th of January 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Bankura, dated the 21st of February 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (with him Babu Bankim Chandra Mookerjee), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a mortgage suit. The facts may be stated shortly, thus. In 1899 the defendant and his brother who is dead, executed a simple mortgage-bond in favour of plaintiff's father in respect of the entire property belonging to the two brothers. Subsequently, in the next year, in June 1900, the defendant executed an instalment mortgage bond in respect of his share of the same property in favour of the same mortgagee, viz., the father of the plaintiff. One of the provisions of this latter bond was that, on failure by the mortgagor to pay two instalments of the money in succession, the mortgagee would be entitled to sue the mortgagor. On the strength of this clause the present suit was instituted in 1917. As regards the first mortgage, dated 1899, the present plaintiff who was the mortgagee obtained a decree for sale of the property upon a suit brought in 1911. In that suit the plaintiff did not mention about the subsequent mortgage of 1900. The decree of 1911 has not yet been executed. In the present suit my defence was, that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as there was already a decree against the same property, and that that decree might and ought to have included the claim made in the present suit. The first Court dismissed the suit on that view. But on appeal the suit was remanded for trial on the merits. It is against this order of remand that the present appeal has been preferred. My contention is, that the present suit is not maintainable in law. I submit the holder of two separate mortgages over the same property is not entitled to separate decrees for sale upon each of his separate suits. Refers to Dorasami v. Venkata-teshaya (1), Nattu Krishnama Chariar v. Annangara Chariar (2), Dhondo Ramchandra Kulkarni v. Bhikaji Gopal (3). The plaintiff should not have separate suits in respect of the same cause of action. Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly operates as a bar to suit of such nature. In the present case there were two mortgages in respect of the same property. The plaintiff had, therefore, one cause of action which he could not split up into separate causes of action for separate suits. If he had failed to mention the whole of his claim against the defendant he cannot turn round again and sue the defendant, for the satisfaction of the rest. Refers to section 11, Explanation (IV) of the Code of Civil Procedure, which also makes it incumbent upon a plaintiff to include all that might and ought to have been claimed by him against the defendant or else his subsequent suit will be barred. Refers to Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (4), Hari Narain Banerji v. Shama Sundari

NILE ROY v. ASIRBAD MANDAL.

Dasi (5), Dorasami v. Venkateshayyar (1); section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act. I submit, on considerations of equitable principles, the mortgagee is bound to bring one suit and claim one relief in respect of his successive mortgages. Then, there would arise another important point for consideration, viz., whether the property can be sold twice in execution of two separate decrees which would mean the doing away with the second mortgage. On all these considerations it would be meeting the ends of justice to dismiss the suit as being not maintainable, and this would also save the mortgagee from losing his rights under the second mortgage if he comes forward with a fresh suit based upon the two mortgages. In this view, therefore, the appeal should be allowed.

Babu Karunamoy Bose (with him Babu Phanindra Nath Das), for the Respondents.—As regards the difficulty in realising my dues under the second mortgage, I submit the difficulty is not insuperable. Refers to Dwarkanath Nandi v. Mriturjoy Patra (6). As regards section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act, I submit it must be read along with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as laid down in Order XXXIV, rule 12. Refers to Subramania Aiyar v. Balasubramania Aiyar (7). Then, as regards the first point raised by the other side that the suit is not maintainable because the plaintiff did not put forward his whole claim which he should have done, I submit Order II, rule 2 and Explanation IV to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not bear on the present case. Looking at the facts stated and alleged it is quite clear that the causes of action are distinct and the two mortgages did not form part of one and the same transaction. The failure of the plaintiff to include both in the same suit does not in the least affect the maintainability of a suit in respect of one of them only. The cases cited and relied on by the other side are all distinguishable from the facts of the present case. The onus is on them to prove that we might and ought to have made our claim on the second mortgage as a ground of attack in the former suit, in which they did not, raise the point as they ought to have done. I submit there being distinct obligations under two mortgages; I am perfectly entitled to adopt the present course and I will not be interfered with on equitable principles. Refers to Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythithatha Ayyar (8), Thirukrikot Madathil Raman v. Thiruthiyil Krishnan Nair (9), Ram Sahai v. Ahmadi Begam (10), Kashinath v. Nathoo Keshav (11).

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (u), of the Civil Procedure Code, from an order of remand made under Order XLI, rule 23, in a suit to enforce a mortgage-security. The defendant executed an instalment mortgage-bond in favour of the father of the plaintiffs on the 25th June 1900, in respect of his share in the disputed property. The bond provided that, if default was made in the payment of two successive instalments, the entire sum would become recoverable. On the 30th November 1917, the plaintiffs, upon the allegation that such default had been made, instituted the present suit for realisation of their dues by sale of the hypothecated property. It appears that on the 1st February 1899 the defendant and his brother, now deceased, had executed another simple mortgage in favour of the father of the plaintiffs in respect of the entire property. In 1911 the mortgagees sued to enforce that mortgage and on the 27th November 1911 obtained a decree for sale which has not yet been executed. In that suit no mention of the second mortgage was made by either party. The mortgagor-defendant resists the present suit on the second mortgage on the ground that it is not maintainable in view of the decree already made in the previous suit which might and ought to have included the claim now put forward. The Trial Court gave effect to this contention and dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge has overruled the objection in bar as untenable and has remanded the case for investigation on the merits. We have been invited, on this appeal, to examine the legality of the order made by the Subordinate Judge.

There has been a sharp difference of judicial opinion upon the question whether the holder of two independent mortgages over the same property, who is not restrained by any covenant in either of them, is competent to institute separate suits to obtain a separate decree for sale on each of them. The point was mooted before a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (12). The Court did not express an opinion upon the question, farther than this, that they were not prepared to endorse the decision of the lower Appellate Court that the second of such separate suits would be barred by the application of section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 (which embodied the principle that every suit must include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff was entitled to make in respect of the cause of action). When the case was taken up to the Judicial Committee, [Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (13)] Sir Ford North observed as follows, with regard to the difficulties which had to be removed from the plaintiff's path before he could succeed:—

"Among others, section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code was held to be a bar to his suit in the two first Courts. The Court of Appeal expressed some doubt whether that was correct. There might have been a nice question to be argued; but the appellant's Counsel did not open it and did not even read the section to the Committee." It was apparently not brought to the notice of the Judicial Committee that the same Full Bench which had, on the 10th November 1897, expressed a doubt on the question in the case then under appeal, had, shortly afterwards, on the 17th February 1898, made a definite pronouncement on the subject in Sundar Singh v. Bholu (14), and had ruled that there was nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Transfer of Property Act to prevent the holder of two independent mortgages over the same property, who was not restrained by any covenant in either of them, from obtaining decree for sale on each of them in a separate suit. This decision of the Allahabad High Court has formed the subject of much controversy in the other High Courts. Its correctness was questioned in Madras in the cases of Dorasami v. Venkataseshayyar (1) and Nattu Krishnama Ohariar v. Annangara Ohariar (2). But the authority of these cases has been considerably shaken, if they have not been actually overruled, by the decision of the Full Bench in Subramania Aiyar v. Balasubramania Aiyar (7), which affirms the proposition that it is open to a mortgagee to bring a suit for the recovery of his debt by sale of the properties mortgaged to him, subject to his interest in a prior mortgage. The same view has been recently approved in Patna: Jagernath Singh v. Mohra Kuvar (15). The Bombay High Court has, on the other hand, consistently refused to follow the rule enunciated in Sundar Singh v. Bholu (14) as will appear from Zeshavram Dulvaram v. Ranchhod Fakira (16) and Dhondo Ramchandra Kulkarni v. Bhikaji Gopal (3). In this Court, a doubt was expressed by Brett and Sharf-ud-Din, JJ., in Hari Narain Banerji v. Shama Sundari Dasi (5) where, however, the question did not actually require decision. But in Gobind Frasad v. Tek Narain (17) Brett and Vincent, JJ., ruled that a person having several mortgages over the same property was entitled to bring a suit on the earlier mortgages without joining in that suit his claim under the later mortgages. The cases in Bombay and Madras which were pressed upon the attention of the Court were all distinguished. In this conflict of judicial opinion, no useful purpose would be served by an examination of the facts of the particular cases where the question arose, it is sufficient to state that several of the decisions either entirely ignore or do not attach sufficient importance to the obvious distinction between the question of the right to institute a suit and the question of the nature and form of the relief which may be properly granted therein if the suit is held to be maintainable. We are here concerned primarily with the question, whether the plaintiffs-respondents were entitled to institute this suit. If the answer be in the affirmative, the subsidiary question would arise, what relief are the plaintiffs entitled to obtain.

As regards the maintainability of the suit, the undoubted right possessed by the plaintiffs in that behalf under the mortgage contract, is said to have been extinguished by the operation of either Order II, rule 2 (1) or Explanation IV to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. We are of opinion that neither of these provisions avails the defendant.

Order II, rule 2 (1) provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action. Rule 2 (2) provides that where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished. If rule 2 (1) is applicable to the circumstances of this case, rule 2 (2) plainly operates as a bar, but, in our opinion, rule 2 (1) has no application here. The rule provides in essence that the plaintiff shall not be entitled to split his cause of action into fragments and bring separate suits in respect thereof. But although the rule thus requires that every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising from one and the same cause of action, the rule does not further require that every suit shall include every claim or every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendant. This distinction has been emphasised by the Judicial Committees in the cases of Raja of Pittapur v. Suriya Eor (18), Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Hussain (19), Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (20), Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (21). In the case last mentioned Lord Moulton observed that "the rule is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action and not to the inclusion, in one and the same action, of different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transaction, the first part of the clause makes it incumbent on the plaintiff to include the whole of his claim in his action; the second portion makes it incumbent on him to ask for the whole of his remedies; the final paragraph is not intended to be an illustration of the foregoing provisions but a substantive enactment, making an obligation and a collateral security for its performance (which would otherwise be two independent causes of action), one cause of action for the purposes of the section." It may be conceded that particular instances may involve matters of considerable nicety and afford room for divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether the causes of action for the two suits are one or different. To mention one example only: the Courts are not agreed upon the question whether where several promissory notes have been executed for portions of the same debt, each promissory note creates a distinct cause of action on which a separate suit may be brought, Preonath Mukerji v. Bishnath Prasad (22), Anantanarayana Iyer v. Savittri Ammal (23). We are of opinion, however, that the case of two distinct mortgages, successively executed by the same debtor, in respect of the same property and in favour of the same creditor, is reasonably free from difficulty. The causes of action on the two mortgages are clearly distinct. It is not necessary to attempt to define the expression "cause of action" for our present purpose; it is sufficient to recall the description given by Lord Watson in Chand Kaur v. Partab Singh (24): "The cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up..., nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour." This substantially accords with the earlier statement by West, J., in Haji Hasam Ibrahim v. Manchooram (25) and Shridhar Vinayak v. Narayan (26) "a cause of action is to be regarded as the same if it rests upon facts which are integrally connected with those upon which a right and an infringement of a right have already been once asserted." See also the judgments of Esher, M. R., Fry, L. J., and Lopes, L. J., in Read v. Brown (27). Tested from the point of view thus indicated, the objection taken by the defendant proves unsustainable. The right of the plaintiffs to enforce the first mortgage depended upon facts entirely distinct from those essential for the establishment of their right to enforce the second mortgage; the right to sue upon the first security was neither enlarged nor abridged when the second security was given. The same point of view was expressed in different terms when the test was formulated by Scott, C. J., in Kashinath v. Nathoo Keshav (11), that if the evidence required to support the two claims is different in any material respects, the causes of action are different. Reference may, in this connection, be made to the judgment of Woodroffe, J., in Mandal & Co., v. Fazul Ellahie (29) where, after pointing out that the rule is framed to avoid the splitting of claims and remedies and to protect the defendant from being twice vexed for one and the same cause of action, the learned Judge quoted with approval the dictum of Garth, C. J., in Pramada Dasi v. Lakhi Narain Mitter (29) that care must be taken to give the section no wider construction than it would reasonably bear and emphasised the observation in Sesha Ayyar v. Krishna Ayyangar (30) and Umed Dholchand v. Pir Saheb Jiva Miya (31), that when parties choose to agree that there should be two instruments and two obligations, the Court is not justified in saying that there is only one obligation. This is well illustrated by the decisions in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (9) Thrikaikat Madathil Ramon v. Thiruthiyil Krishnan Nair (9), and Ram Sahai v. Ahmadi Begam (10), which are authorities for the proposition that section 43 of the Code of 1882, which has been re-placed by Order II, rule 2 of the Code of 1908, has no application to different suits upon different mortgages over the same property. The judgment in the case of Atab Pramanick v. Mehrulla Sardar (32), which purports to follow Keshavram Dularam v. Ranchhod Fakira (16), was pronounced upon an entirely different state of facts and cannot be treated as conclusive upon the question raised before us. We hold, accordingly, that Order II, rule 2, does not bar the present suit.

Explanation IV to section 11 is equally of no avail to the defendant. The explanation is in the following terms: "Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defense or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit." The "former suit" referred to here is the "former suit" mentioned in the substantive portion of section 11, which provides as follows:—

"No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised and has been heard and finally decided by such Court."

It will be observed that, when the defendant invokes the aid of Explanation IV, he assumes that when a plaintiff as second mortgagee sues to enforce his security and to cut off the equity of redemption under the second mortgage (which is really a mortgage of the equity of redemption under the first security) the parties litigate under the same title as they do when the plaintiff as first mortgagee seeks to enforce his security and to cut off the equity of redemption under that mortgage. We shall not pause to scrutinise the validity of this assumption, which, to say the least, is open to question. But, even on this assumption, the defendant must prove that the claim on the second mortgage might and ought to have been made a ground of attack in the former suit on the first mortgage. It is clearly not sufficient to show merely that it might have been made a ground of attack; if that had been the intention of the Legislature, the word "ought" might as well have been omitted. The result would then have been that a plaintiff would have been compelled to unite in one action all causes of action which he was at liberty to join under Order II, rule 3. Consequently, the defendant must establish, not merely that the plaintiffs might, but also that they ought to have made the claim on the second mortgage as a ground of attack in the former suit. In this connection, the circumstance is not wholly without significance that in the previous suit on the first mortgage, the defendant did not even suggest that such a course should be adopted. Now, as was observed by Lord Morris, in Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (4), it depends upon the particular facts of each case to decide whether a matter ought to have been made a ground for defence or attack in the previous suit. No useful purpose would be served by an attempt to frame inelastic formulas so as to impair the elasticity of the rule of the Code, expressed in the colourless words "might and ought—" words used by Lord Westbury in Hunter v. Stewart (33). An examination of the cases on the subject discloses that tests of various descriptions, both positive and negative, have been applied to determine, in individual instances, whether a claim which might have been, ought to have been included in the prior suit. It has been said, for instance, that where matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion, it cannot reasonably be held that they ought to have been included in the same suit: Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (4). On the other hand, it has been said that if the matters arise out of what may be regarded, for judicial purposes, as one transaction, several suits should not be permitted to proceed so as to render separate investigations necessary: Shridhar v. Vinayak Narayan (26), Haji Hasam Ibrahim v. Mancharam (25). The matter must, however, be regarded as essentially different where it did not originate in the same transaction and when it constitutes a wholly different right in the plaintiff, giving rise to a different duty on the part of the defendant. These and other tests, however, which may be discoverable from an analysis of the cases in the books cannot be treated as an exhaustive enumeration of all the requisites or conditions before the bar can be applied. As Wigram, V. C., said in Henderson v. Henderson (34), the Court has to determine whether the point properly belonged to the subject of litigation and whether the parties exercising reasonable diligence might have brought it forward at the time. In the determination of this question, in the circumstances of a particular case, the limitation must be borne in mind that, where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in and of adjudication by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the Court requires the parties to that litigation to bring forward their whole case and will not, except under special circumstances, permit the same parties to open the same subject of litigation in respect of a matter which might have been but was not brought forward as part of the subject in contest. From this standpoint, the view has been maintained that, where separate rights have been infringed, separate actions may be maintained, since the infringement of separate rights gives rise to separate causes of action: Serrao v. Noel (35) Brunsdon v. Humphrey (36), Parambath Manakkal v. Puthengattil Moosamu (37); see also the judgment of Garth, C. J., in Dinobundhoo Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (38) and of Lord Watson in Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (39). Reference may also be made to the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Moosa Goolam Ariff v. Ebrahim Goolam Ariff (40) and of Sir John Edge in Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad

Singh (41) where some of the tests already mentioned were applied by the Judicial Committee to determine the applicability of Explanation II to section 13 of the Code of 1882. The decision of this Court in Hari Narain Banerji v. Shama Sundari Dasi (5) furnishes an instructive illustration as to how two rights, originally independent, may, by union in the same person, become amalgamated and be thereafter treated as an indivisible entity. There a puisne mortgagee, under the provisions of section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act, paid off the prior mortgage and thereby became subrogated to his rights. He then sued to enforce his own mortgage and obtained a decree. He next sued to enforce his rights under the prior mortgage which he had satisfied. It was ruled that section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, was a bar to the second suit, as he might and ought to have included in the former suit the claim, not only under his own mortgage, but also that under the prior mortgage; the sum paid to discharge the latter was, it was said, an addition or accretion to the claim on his own mortgage. No such considerations arise in the case before us, where the securities were initially distinct and have throughout retained that character. We are accordingly of opinion that, although the plaintiffs might have included the claim on the second mortgage in the previous suit if they had so chosen, that course was not obligatory upon them, and the present suit is consequently not barred under Explanation IV to section 11, Civil Procedure Code.

We may add that in Dorasami v. Venkateshachayyar (1), reliance was placed on sections 61, 85 and 99 of the Transfer of Property Act as well as on the form of Decree No. 128 of Schedule IV of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, to support the view that the suit on the earlier mortgage should include the claim on the later mortgage, and that a suit for sale on the earlier mortgage subject to the later mortgage could not be maintained. Whether the provisions mentioned really justified the conclusion may be a matter for argument [Tajjo Bibi v. Bhagwan Prasad (42), Rhuda Baksh v. Alim-un-nissa (43), Ranjit Khan v. Ramdhan Singh (44).] But as pointed out by Wallis, C. J., in Subramania Aiyar v. Balasubramania Aiyar (7), Order XXXIV, rule 1 and rule 14 of the Code of 1908, which reproduce the substance of sections 85 and 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, with important modifications, do not lend even apparent support to the conclusion deduced from those sections. As regards section 61 it does not, in our opinion, justify the inference that in every case not exactly covered thereby, because the properties comprised in the two securities are different, it is not merely permissible to the mortgagee to claim simultaneous redemption of the two mortgages, but it is also obligatory on him to proceed against the mortgagor in the same suit in respect of both the securities. It is by no means improbable that section 61 was framed in its present form because the doctrine of consolidation of securities, which was intended to be rendered inapplicable, had been limited to cases where the owner of different estates mortgaged them to one person separately for distinct debts or successively to secure the same debt or the same debt with further advances [Shuttleworth v. Laycock (45), Pope v. Onslow (46), Jones v. Smith (47), Willie v. Lugg (48)]. This doctrine, as we know, was extended by logical deductions to such an extent that it was entirely abolished by section 17 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. In view of these considerations, we are not prepared to hold that section 61 may be legitimately regarded as indicative of an intention on the part of the Legislature to depart from the prevailing doctrine that a mortgagor may always redeem by paying the specific debt secured by the mortgage together with such prior liens as the mortgagee may have been compelled to pay for the protection of the mortgage. Nor can we invoke the aid of the rule that the equitable, like the legal, mortgagee, is entitled, as against the mortgagor and all claiming under him (who have not or are not allowed to retain the full benefit of the legal estate) to add to his original debt, subsequent advances or liabilities made or incurred upon the security or credit of the estate without notice of any mesne charge. This principle is founded substantially on the policy which underlies the doctrine of taking as against mesne encumbrancers. Section 80 of the Transfer of Property Act militates against the view that the Legislature could have intended the application of a principle analogous to that of tacking in the class of cases now before us. Indeed, it looks that, when section 61 was invoked in the case of Dorasami v. Venkateshayyar (1), the Court took recourse to a doctrine which was neither consolidation nor tacking but possessed some of the characteristics of both the principles. Finally, we cannot overlook that section 61 must be read with Order XXXIV, rule 12, Civil Procedure Code, which re-places section 96 and contemplates the possibility of sale of mortgaged property subject to a prior mortgage (see also Forms of Decree No. 79 in Appendix D to Civil Procedure Code, 1908). As Wallis, C. J., points out, some confusion may possibly have been created by an inappropriate use of the formula that "the rights of redemption and foreclosure are co-extensive" which has reference to the time for institution of suits to enforce such rights and not to their other incidents [Brown v. Cole (49)]. The substance of the matter is that, when it is asserted that the right to foreclose and the right to redeem are reciprocal, what is intended is that, since the right of the mortgagor and mortgagee are reciprocal and commensurable, redemption under the mortgage is cut off at the expiration of the same time that the right to foreclose is barred, unless by Statute a different time is fixed for redemption from that allowed for foreclosure. There is thus no escape from the position that the present suit is maintainable.

We have finally to consider what conditions, if any, should be annexed to the decree that may be made herein, for it is indisputable that the property cannot be sold twice in execution of the decrees in the two suits. There cannot be a sale on the first mortgage keeping alive a puisne encumbrance, for such a sale conveys the interests of the mortgagor and the mortgagee as they were at the date of the first mortgage and must, therefore, necessarily sweep away the subsequent encumbrance. On the other hand, if the property were directed to be sold in execution of the decree on the second mortgage subject to the rights of the mortgagee under the decree already made in his favour on the first mortgage, there might be needless complications and the property would not, almost to a certainty, fetch its proper values. The right course to follow in such circumstances is to direct that the property be sold free of both charges, whether the sale takes place in execution of the decree on the first mortgage or the decree on the second mortgage, and that the balance of sale-proceeds, after payment of incidental expenses, be applied in discharge of the dues on the first mortgage and the second mortgage, one after the other, the residue, if any, to stand to the credit of the holder of the equity of redemption. This accords with the view taken by Richardson, J., in Dwarka Nath Nandi v. Mritun'oy Patra (6), where he held that there was nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Transfer of Property Act to prevent the holder of two independent mortgages over the same property, who is not restrained by any covenant in either of them, from obtaining a decree for sale on each of them in a separate suit, subject, however, to this reservation that he cannot sell the property twice over, nor sell it under the second decree subject to the first. This, in our opinion, is an accurate statement of the law applicable to this class of cases.

We direct, accordingly, that this appeal do stand dismissed with costs and the order of remand be carried out on the lines indicated in this judgment.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1903), Sch. I, Art. 181—Mortgage suit—Preliminary decree—Final decree, application for, period for making—Decree against several defendants—Appeal by some defendants—Decree, when conclusive—Decree directing payment of prior mortgage but not specifying date of payment, effect of—Reasonable time, what is.

The limitation applicable to an application for a final decree in a mortgage-suit is that provided by Article 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and commences to run from the date when the preliminary decree becomes conclusive between the parties. [p. 818, col. 1.]

Where a decree in a mortgage-suit is against separate sets of defendants for separate amounts, and some only of the defendants appeal and confine their appeal to the amounts decreed against them, the decree as regards the non-appealing defendants becomes conclusive upon the expiry of the period of limitation for an appeal from that decree, or on the expiry of the date fixed for payment of the amount decreed, if that should be a later date, and not the date of the decree in the appeal of the appealing defendants, because that appeal, being limited to that part of the decree which directs the property of the appellants to bear a proportionate part of the decretal amount, is not an appeal against the whole decree. Consequently, an application for a final decree in such a case against the non-appealing defendants made more than three years after the preliminary decree has become conclusive, would be barred by limitation. [p. 818, cols. 1 & 2; 819, col. 1.]

Where a decree for sale in a mortgage-suit provides for payment of the amount of a prior mortgage as a condition precedent to sale of the mortgaged property, but omits to specify the date on which such payment is to be made, the payment ought to be made or tendered within a reasonable time, and, as such a decree is a decree for redemption of that mortgage, payment should be made within six months of the decree. [p. 819, col. 1.]

Drs. S. N. Sen and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for a final decree in a mortgage-suit. The application which is now the subject-matter of controversy was presented on the 12th of June 1917. The question is, whether this application was time-barred. The preliminary decree in the suit was made on the 30th of April 1912. The suit was brought to enforce a mortgage against some of the properties comprised in the mortgage on the ground that the other properties had been purchased by the mortgagees themselves. The Court in making its decree declared the liability of each of the properties against which the mortgage was sought to be enforced, and it also declared in its decree that each of those properties would be liable for a proportionate part of the amount found to be due upon the mortgage. Those amounts were specified in the decree and the property which was to be liable for those amounts was also specified. Six months was granted to the mortgagors for payment of those amounts. There was a further provision in the decree that the decree-holders would not be entitled to bring the property to sale unless they paid the amount of a prior mortgage. The decree, however, did not fix any time within which the amount last mentioned was to be paid. It may be noted that the suit was brought upon a copy of the original mortgage which was alleged to have been lost. Three of the defendants appealed against this decree and their contention was that the loss of the original had not been accounted for and that the debt had been discharged. This appeal was preferred only in respect of the amount which the three appellants had been ordered to pay on account of the ownership of the property which was held to be liable for that amount. The Appellate Court, which was the High Court, held that the loss of the original had not been accounted for and that the suit was, therefore, not maintainable and on this ground dismissed the suit as against the appellants. As against the other defendants to the suit who were no parties to the appeal to the High Court and who themselves had preferred no appeal, the High Court made no order. The decree of the High Court was passed on the 6th of July 1914. An application for a final decree was made on the 7th of April 1915 by all the decree holders except the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards, however, was named as an opposite party to the application. That application was dismissed for default and subsequent applications made with the object of having the application of the 7th of April 1915 restored and revived were also dismissed. After these proceedings had taken place, the present application of the 12th of June 1917 was presented by all the decree holders. The Court below has dismissed the application and we have to consider whether the decision of that Court is right. It is not disputed that the limitation applicable to an application of this kind is that provided by Article 181 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, and the period of limitation is three years from the date on which the right to apply accrued. We have, therefore, to determine when the right of the present decree holders to make an application for a final decree in the cause arose. It may be taken as settled law that the right to apply for a final decree accrued to the decree-holders when the preliminary decree became conclusive between the parties. We have, therefore, to consider in this case when the decree of the Court of first instance became conclusive as between the decree-holders and the judgment debtors against whom the present application has been made. It is contended that the preliminary decree could not have become final as between the parties to the present appeal until the decision of the High Court in the appeal which was preferred by the three judgment-debtors who obtained a decree in the High Court. This contention is based mainly upon the provisions of Order XLI, rule 33, of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is urged that, since some of the judgment-debtors preferred an appeal to the High Court, the whole of the decree became sub judice and that it was competent to the High Court to dismiss the whole suit as against all the defendants and, until the final decision of the High Court, it could not be said that the decree against those defendants who had not appealed had become final. We are unable to agree with this contention. Under Order XLI, rule 4, the Appellate Court could, upon the appeal of some of the parties, reverse the decision of the lower Court if the appeal had been preferred against the whole decree and if the Court had proceeded upon a ground common to all the parties. In the present case the appeal which was preferred by three of the defendants was limited to that part of the decree which directed their property to bear a proportionate part of the decretal amount and it was not an appeal against the whole decree. Therefore, although the Court of first instance had proceeded upon a ground common to all the defendants, the Appellate Court could not have reversed the decree under Order XLI, rule 4. Mr. Pearey Lal Banerji, who has ably argued this case on behalf of the appellants, concedes that rule 4 of Order XLI would not apply, but he rests his contention upon the provisions of rule 33 of that Order. We think that he cannot avail himself of the provisions of that rule and that the Appellate Court, in the appeal preferred by some of the defendants in respect of only a part of the decree, could not, by virtue of the provisions of rule 33, have dismissed the suit against those defendants who had in fact submitted to it. The principle of the Full Bench ruling in Rangam Lal v. Jhandu (1) applies to this case. There being a distinct provision as to the power of an Appellate Court to interfere with the decision of the Court of first instance upon an appeal preferred by some of the defendants in certain cases the provisions of rule 33 could not apply to cases for which clear provision is made in the order or to cases which would not come within the purview of the specific rule. We are, therefore, of opinion that the decree of the Court of first instance did not become sub judice when an appeal was preferred to this Court by some of the defendants only. The appellants were, consequently, not entitled to reckon limitation from the date of the decision of the High Court. The decree of the Court of first instance was in fact a decree which was a combination of several decrees against separate sets of defendants for separate amounts. As regards those of the defendants who did not appeal, that decree became conclusive upon the expiry of the period of limitation for an appeal from that decree. In the present case the decree allowed six months to the judgment-debtors to pay the amount decreed against each of them. That amount was payable on the 30th of October 1912. The decree, therefore, against the defendants who did not appeal became a final and conclusive decree as between the decree-holders and them on that date, the period of limitation for an appeal having expired before that date. As the present application was presented more than three years after the day on which the preliminary decree became conclusive against the respondents, it is beyond time.

Another contention which was put forward on behalf of the appellants was, that the decree in directing the appellants to discharge the amount of a prior mortgage did not prescribe a particular period within which the prior mortgage was to be discharged and, therefore, as the decree holders could not bring the mortgaged property to sale without payment of the amount of the prior mortgage their right to apply for a final decree for the sale of the mortgaged property only accrued when they paid or tendered the amount of the prior mortgage. If this contention be carried to its legitimate length the decree-holders might wait for any number of years before they paid the amount of the prior mortgage. But Mr. Banerji fairly concedes that, although no date was fixed in the decree for payment of the amount of the prior mortgage, it ought to have been paid or tendered within a reasonable time. It is clear that the decree, in so far as it directed payment of the amount of the prior mortgage, was a decree for the redemption of that mortgage. The period within which the amount of the mortgage could be paid for redemption, as prescribed in Order XXXIV, rule 7, is a period within six months of the decree, so that the maximum period within which the amount of the prior mortgage could be paid for redemption of that mortgage was six months. If we adopt Mr. Pearey Lal Banerji's contention that the period should be a reasonable period we are unable to hold that that period should be anything more than the period mentioned in rule 7, Order XXXIV, i. e., a period of six months. If limitation be computed from the expiry of that period the present application would be beyond time. For these reasons, we hold that the Court below was right in dismissing the application made by the decree holders and this appeal must fail. We dismiss it with costs including fees on the higher scale.

*Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 43, 119—Exchange—Defective title—Subsequent acquisition of

The substance of the provisions embodied in section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is that, though an assignment is of a defective title, yet when the assignor afterwards acquires a good title, the Court will make that good title available to make the assignment effectual, or, in other words, the interest when it accrues feeds the estoppel. [p. 820, cols. 1 & 2.]

The special provision relating to exchange contained in section 119 of the Transfer of Property Act does not exclude the operation of section 43 of the Act. For the purposes of section 43, an exchange stands on the same footing as a sale. [p. 820, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, 24 Parganas, dated the 14th of May 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, of that District, dated the 30th of August 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Bhupendra Kumar Ghose), for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title to three plots of land measuring in all about 4 bighas. The defendants admitted my title to plots Nos. 1 and 2 but have set up their title to plot No. 3 under an alleged exchange. They have alleged delivery to have taken place in 1911, on which date I had no title to the lands exchanged. Plaintiffs' vendors had title in them. The only question is whether the exchange is valid or not. The transaction is to be of same amount as in case of a sale.

[MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—Why should not the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act apply to this case?]

That is a general section and ought not to override the provisions of the specific section, 119, of the Act. Refers to the judgment of Lord Westbury in Holroyd v. Marshall (1).

Babu Mahendranath Roy (with him Babu Baranasibasi Mukherjee, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title.

The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that they had acquired a good title under an exchange.

The Courts below have found that an exchange was effected in the manner provided by the Transfer of Property Act; that is, as the value of the property was less than Rs. 100, the plaintiffs delivered possession of the disputed land to the defendants. This is prima facie a complete answer to the claim, but the plaintiffs have established that, though at the time of the exchange they were in possession of the whole of the property, they had not a complete title thereto, as they were themselves purchasers from persons who were entitled only to a half share. Their contention, in substance, is that the defendants acquired a good title to that half share alone and have no title to the remainder.

The answer of the defendants is that, subsequent to the exchange, the plaintiffs acquired the title of the co-sharers of their vendor, and that as soon as their title to the whole was thereby perfected the benefit thereof accrued to the defendants. The Courts below have held that this is a conclusive answer to the case set up by the plaintiffs. In our opinion, there is no foundation for the claim.

Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that, "where a person erroneously represents that he is authorised to transfer certain immovable property and professes to transfer such property for consideration, such transfer shall, at the option of the transferee, operate on any interest which the transferor may acquire in such property, at any time during which the contract of transfer subsists." This section in substance embodies the rule that the interest when it accrues feeds the estoppel; or, in other words, that though the assignment was of a defective title, yet, as the assignor afterwards acquired a good title, the Court will make that good title available to make the assignment effectual: Webb v. Austin (2), Cuthbertson v. Irving (3), Rowbotham v. Wilson (4), Holroyd v. Marshall (1), Booth v. Alcock (5), Bridgewater's Settlement, In re, Partridge v. Ward (6), Gresham Life Assurance, Society v. Orouther (7), Poulton v. Moore (8), Prosonna Kumar Mukerjee v. Srikanth Rout (9).

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter has, however, contended that, although section 43 speaks of transfers in general terms, still it is not applicable to cases of exchange by reason of the special provision contained in section 119. That section provides that, "in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the party deprived of the thing or part thereof he has received in exchange, by reason of any defect in the title of the other party, is entitled at his option to compensation, or to the return of the thing transferred by him." But this does not exclude the operation of section 43; for a similar argument might be advanced in the case of sales, mortgages or leases, where, on proof of deficiency in the subject-matter, the purchaser, mortgagee or lessee may obtain compensation or cancellation.

Reference has also been made to the decision in Holroyd v. Marshall (1) where Lord Westbury speaks of this principle as applicable to cases of sales and mortgages; but this does not indicate that it is not applicable to cases of exchange. It is an elementary proposition that, for purposes like this, an exchange stands on the same footing as a sale. We are of opinion that

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for damages. The plaintiff's case was that he and one Abdul Haq became partners in a brick kiln business in August 1913; that a deed of partnership was drawn up on the 16th of October 1913; that the plaintiff supplied Rs. 2,000 and Abdul Haq Rs. 300 worth of capital, and that the plaintiff not having the necessary technical knowledge, Abdul Haq ran the business, but the plaintiff discovering that Abdul Haq was heavily involved in debt decided to separate from him and on the 26th of March 1914 a deed of dissolution of partnership was drawn up under which the plaintiff paid to Abdul Haq Rs. 300 his share of the capital and Rs. 950 his share of some of the produce of the kiln. Apparently, this sum of Rs. 1,250 was distributed to certain creditors of Abdul Haq. Among the creditors were the respondents to the present appeal. Abdul Haq applied to the District Judge to be declared an insolvent and a Receiver was appointed to take possession of his property. According to the plaintiff, on the 20th of September 1914 the respondents applied to the District Judge stating that Abdul Haq owned a half share in the brick kiln and asking the Court to direct the Receiver to take possession of the kiln. The District Judge ordered the Receiver to comply, and the Receiver took complete possession of the kiln on the 26th of September 1914. The plaintiff filed objections which were allowed and on the 21st of January 1915 the Receiver gave up possession of the kiln. On the 30th of January 1915, however, the respondents, according to the plaintiff himself, made a further application for review of the order of the 21st of January 1915, and alleged that the whole of the kiln belonged to Abdul Haq and asked the Court to direct the Receiver to take possession thereof. The District Judge apparently passed an ex parte order to the Receiver to comply and on the 10th of February 1915, the Receiver again took possession of the whole of the kiln. An appeal was preferred to the High Court by the plaintiff against the order of the District Judge and this Court on appeal set it aside and possession of the kiln was restored to the plaintiff on the 6th of May 1915. On these allegations of fact, the plaintiff sued the defendants for damages caused to him by the seizure of the brick kiln by reason of which he alleged that he had suffered considerable loss. The defendants put in a long written statement denying many facts alleged by the plaintiff but asserted, among other things, that the dissolution of partnership of 26th of March 1914 was a bogus transaction, made by Abdul Haq and Binda Prasad in collusion, with a view to defeat the creditors of the former. It was also argued in Court that, assuming the facts to be as stated by the plaintiff, the defendants were not legally liable for any damages that had accrued to the plaintiff and that the proper person to sue was the Receiver who was responsible therefor. Both the Courts below have decided only two points. They have held that the dissolution of partnership of the 26th of March 1914 was a genuine and not a bogus transaction. They have then held that, on the facts alleged, the respondents were not legally liable for any damages, and that the suit ought to have been filed against the Receiver. In this view, the Courts below have dismissed the suit without going into the other facts or the question of actual damages. It is urged on appeal that the decision of the Court below on the point of law which is raised is erroneous and should be set aside. In view of the decision of this Court in Abdur Rahim v. Sital Prasad (1) it is clear that the decision of the Court below on the question of law is incorrect. The case mentioned above is parallel and exactly fits the facts of the present case. It is unnecessary for us to go any further into this point as the matter is covered by a decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court. The case must, therefore, go back for decision on its merits. There are several questions of fact into which the Court will have to go. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court with directions to re-admit the suit on its original number and to proceed to hear and decide it according to law. The costs of this appeal and those of the Courts below will be costs in the cause and will abide the result. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

APPEAL FROM THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

Letters Patent (Bom.), ss. 15, 36, 44—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 4, 98—Procedure—Letters Patent Appeal—Special form of procedure, whether affected by s. 98—Costs.

Section 36 of the Letters Patent of Bombay prescribes a special form of procedure, by which, if the Judges hearing an appeal are equally divided, the opinion of the Senior Judge prevails. [p. 824, col. 1.]

The provisions of this section are not controlled by section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a reference of the point in dispute to one or more other Judges. [p. 824, col. 2.]

In this case the Board, having all the materials before them, were willing to decide the question at issue, but the appellant would not consent to this being done. The Board in consequence reserved the costs of the appeal and all other costs since the error of procedure occurred, and intimated that the appellant might be made to pay these even if ultimately successful. [p. 825, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Bombay High Court, dated March 23rd, 1917, affirming a decree of Macleod, J.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated, for the purposes of this report, in their Lordships' judgment. The only question argued on this appeal was that of procedure.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O. (with him Mr. Purikh), for the Appellant.—The question on the merits is, whether under the Will in suit, an estate for life, with power to appoint was given to the widow, or whether she was entitled absolutely. This question, however, does not arise, as there has been an error in procedure. The High Court erred in making a reference under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code to two other Judges. The case was on the Original Side, and the procedure in appeal is regulated by sections 15 and 36 of the Letters Patent of 1865 (originally issued in 1862). By section 36 of the Letters Patent the opinion of Scott, C. J., as the Senior Judge, should have prevailed; and section 15 gives a further appeal locally. Section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not override the provisions of the Letters Patent: it does not apply to Letters Patent Appeals, the special procedure under which is saved by section 4 of the Code. The latest case to this effect is a Bombay one, decided on 5th November 1917, (after the judgment in this case) and reported as Surajmal v. Horniman (1).

The Code of Civil Procedure does not restrict Letters Patent Appeals:

Hurrieh Ohunder Chowdhry v. Kalisundari Debi (2).

It may be conceded that the Code applies to proceedings under the Letters Patent, save so far as expressly provided to the contrary:

Sabitri Thakurain v. Savi (3) where Hurrieh Ohunder Chowdhry's case (2) (Supra) was not apparently cited.

But in cases of conflict the Letters Patent prevail:

Hoop Lul v. Lakshmi Doss (4), Lachman Singh v. Ram Lagan Singh (5).

Nundceput Mahta v. Urquhart (6) where the matter was fully considered.

[LORD SHAW.—You conducted your case on the reference without any protest.]

[LORD DUNEDIN.—They must be allowed to appear and argue on the merits.]

When the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction, the parties cannot confer it:

Ledgard v. Bull (7).

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The only question here is the construction of a Will. We have the materials before us and can try the matter now: otherwise it will come back to us in five or ten years' time.]

My client in India has given specific instructions that we are to insist on the case being decided on the point of procedure. We cannot, therefore, consent to have the question of construction decided now.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C. (with him Mr. E. B. Raikes), for the Respondents.—Five out of seven Judges of the Bombay High Court have taken part in this case, and four are in our favour. The procedure under section 98 of the Code is not an appeal, but merely a reference: it is no case of want of jurisdiction: the case remained in the hands of Scott, C. J., and Heaton J., all the time. Also, the appellant submitted to the jurisdiction of the two new Judges.

Mr. Raikes followed.—All the appellant was entitled to under section 36 was judgment on this particular point, which was not the only point in the case: there was an issue of limitation.

Section 98 is quite consistent with the Letters Patent: the Judges can refer a particular point to others; but these others are not seized of the appeal. The reference is not excluded by the Letters Patent and is allowed by section 98. Till the two Judges had made a decree they could alter their judgment.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—If it were a mere case of asking advice, the Chief Justice would not be bound to follow it.]

Further, under section 44 of the Letters Patent, the Letters are subject to the legislative powers of the Government of India, so section 93 of the Code should prevail.

Mr. De Gruyther in reply.—The question of limitation was not raised in the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The real question involved in the dispute giving rise to this appeal was a question as to the construction of the Will of one Nathoo Moolji, who died on the 8th December 1894, affecting the respective estates and interests that were taken by the testator's widow and his two daughters. One of the daughters died in the lifetime of the widow, and her heir, who is the present appellant, instituted, on the widow's death, in the High Court of Judicature in Bombay, Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen, claiming that, according to the true construction of the Will, he was entitled to a vested one half share in the testator's property.

The learned Judge before whom the suit was first heard dismissed the application and held that there was an intestacy after the widow's death.

An appeal was taken from that judgment and heard before Chief Justice Scott and Mr.

BHAIDAS SHIVDAS v. BAI GULAB.

Justice Heaton. They differed in their opinion. Chief Justice Scott thought that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he claimed; Mr. Justice Heaton, on the other hand, agreed with the Judge who had first tried the suit. The course then taken was to refer the matter to two other Judges. Mr. Justice Batchelor and Mr. Justice Shah, who also decided adversely to the plaintiff's contention.

The plaintiff has now brought an appeal before His Majesty in Council, and the first point that he has raised is this: that the order made referring the case to the decision of Mr. Justice Batchelor and Mr. Justice Shah was ultra vires and void; that there was no jurisdiction in these two Judges to entertain the dispute, and that he is entitled, as of right, to a decree in accordance with the opinion of Chief Justice Scott, the senior of the two Judges before whom the appeal was first heard.

That contention depends upon the construction of the Letters Patent of Bombay, under which the Court was constituted, and the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. By section 36 of the Letters Patent it is provided that if the High Court is sitting in a Division composed of two or more Judges, and the Judges are divided in opinion as to the decision to be given on any point, the decision shall agree with the opinion of the majority of the Judges; but if the Judges are equally divided, the opinion of the senior Judge shall prevail.

In this case it is quite clear. There were two Judges sitting; the Senior Judge was the Chief Justice; there was an equal division of opinion; and under section 36, in consequence, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree in his favour.

It is, however, urged on behalf of the respondents that the procedure in section 36 is modified by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and it is pointed out that by section 44 of the Letters Patent there is an express provision which makes those Letters Patent subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council.

There are two sections in the Code of Civil Procedure which are relevant to this dispute. The one is section 4 and the other is section 98. Section 98 appears to have been the section under which the Judges acted. That section provides:—

"That where the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law, they may state the point of law upon which they differ, and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges, and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it."

It is quite plain that those provisions create a totally distinct method of procedure in the event of difference between two Judges from that which was laid down by section 36. Under section 36 of the Letters Patent the judgment of the Judge who was the senior Judge would be the judgment which the parties before the Court would have a right to obtain; under section 98, the judgment to which they are entitled is the judgment of the majority of all the Judges who have heard the appeal; and this case shows that those two provisions might produce a totally different result. If, therefore, section 98 controls section 36 the respondents would be entitled to say that the proper procedure had been followed, and that the appellant had no cause of complaint. But by section 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is also provided that:—

"In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any special or local law now in force, or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed by or under any other law for the time being in force."

There is no specific provision in section 98, and there is a special form of procedure which was already prescribed. That form of procedure section 98 does not, in their Lordships' opinion, affect. The consequence is that the appellant is right in saying that in this instance a wrong course was taken when this case was referred to other Judges for decision, and he is technically entitled to a decree in accordance with the judgment of the Chief Justice. This view of the section is not novel, for it has been supported by judgments in Madras, in Allahabad and in Calcutta. [See Roop Lal v. Lakshmi Doss (4), Lachman Singh

JWALA SINGH v. FATTA.

v. Ram Lagan Singh (5), Nundeeput Mahta v. Urquhart (6).

There only remains for their Lordships' consideration the question as to how they ought to deal with the costs of these proceedings.

As has been already pointed out, the real matter is the question of the construction of a Will. The record has been prepared, the Will is before their Lordships, and they are perfectly ready to undertake the duty of determining what the meaning of that Will may be; but the appellant's Counsel, acting under the strictest instructions from his client in India, is unable to consent to their Lordships taking that course, and is compelled to insist upon the determination of this dispute simply upon the question of procedure. The result, therefore, is this that, although it may be by a wrong path, this appeal has reached their Lordships by whom it could be ultimately decided, but they are not permitted to decide it; they are obliged to send the case back for further consideration and then, after a prolonged and tedious journey, it may find its way back again to the Board for ultimate decision.

Their Lordships are unable, in these circumstances, to advise His Majesty to follow the usual rule and give the successful appellant the costs of his successful appeal. They think that the whole of the costs from the 13th March 1917 when the mistake was first made, should await determination until the ultimate decision of this matter when the strict procedure has been followed, and they will reserve the power of awarding those costs as seems right when that course has been taken. If the appellant fails, these costs may be regarded as costs in the cause; their Lordships make this intimation for the assistance of the Board before whom the matter may ultimately come; but this will in no way fetter their discretion if they think that, even if the appellant ultimately were to succeed, he ought not to be recouped and indeed ought to pay the wasted expense of this barren victory. They only desire to add that the original judgment of the 13th March 1917, appears not to have dealt with costs at all; but before any decree is drawn up under that order, it would be desirable that some proper application should be made to the Court for the purpose of seeing that the order is correct in that respect.

For the rest, they will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the Appellate Court should be set aside, and they will remit the case to the High Court to be dealt with according to law, their Lordships having already pointed out the way in which they think that direction should be obeyed. The costs of this appeal and all costs subsequent to the 13th March 1917 are to be reserved to be dealt with by this Board.

—Suit to declare alienations invalid—Proof requisite.*

Certain decrees were obtained from the Revenue Court for a share of the profits against a Lambardar. The Lambardar thereafter alienated some of his property in favour of his son and grandson, and the present suit was brought to declare the alienations invalid, on the ground that they were made with the object of defrauding the decrees of the Revenue Court. It was not alleged, nor was evidence led to show, that after the alienations the Lambardar had no other property left to satisfy the decrees:

Held, that the suit must fail, as there was no allegation or proof that the alienations had the effect of depriving the plaintiff of the amount of the Revenue Court's decrees. [p. 826, col 1.]

SULIN MOHAN BANERJEE v. RAJ KRISHNA GHOSH,

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baldeo Ram Dave, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The two Appeals Nos. 36 and 37 of 1918 are connected, inasmuch as they are between the same parties and the points for determination are practically the same. It appears that four persons, namely, Jwala Singh, Sabir Singh, Har Gulal Singh and Dakhla, obtained from the Revenue Courts three decrees for their share of profits against Fatta, the Lambardar. The three decrees were obtained on the 6th of May 1909, 8th of November 1910 and 28th of August 1913. On the 17th of January 1910 Fatta executed a deed of gift in favour of his grandson, Budh Singh, in respect of some property. On the 11th of December 1913 Fatta executed a deed of sale in respect of the same property and some other property in favour of his son and grandson, namely, Simru and Budh Singh. On the 7th of December 1914, two suits were filed by Jwala Singh and others against Fatta his son, his grandson and Niader. By one suit Jwala and others sought to have the deed of gift in favour of Budh Singh declared invalid and inoperative and by the other they asked the sale-deed in favour of Budh Singh and Simru to be declared invalid. The reliefs in both the suits were sought on the allegation that the transfers which were challenged by the plaintiffs were made with the object of defrauding the decrees that the plaintiffs had obtained in the Rent Court. The claims were resisted on various grounds. The Court of first instance dismissed them and the decrees of the first Court were upheld in appeal. In second appeal to this Court, the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court are challenged. We find on reference to the pleadings and to the evidence in both the cases that there is no allegation that, after the alienations indispute, Fatta had no other property left to satisfy the decrees of the plaintiffs nor is there any evidence in support of such an allegation. The mere fact that Fatta gifted some property to his grandson and sold the same property with some other property to his son and grandson would not by itself render the alienations invalid. The appellant in order to succeed had to allege and to prove at least that the effect of the said alienations was to deprive him of the amount of the Rent Court's decrees. In the absence of such proof the claim of the appellant cannot succeed. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Widow, position of—Alienation by widow, whether void or voidable—Election by reversionary heir to treat alienation as nullity, what constitutes—Steps to avoid alienation, whether must be taken before suit—Landlord and tenant—Tenancy, transferable, proof of.

A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is the owner of her husband's property, subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. The institution of a suit by the reversionary heir for possession shows his election to treat the alienation as a nullity, and in such a suit it is neither necessary for him to ask for a declaration that the alienation is inoperative, nor is it essential that he should take steps, before the institution of the suit to avoid the alienation. [p. 826, col. 2.]

In a suit for possession by the landlord against the transferee of a tenancy which was created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act and was not for the purpose of residence, the defendant must establish that the tenancy was transferable under the law as it stood at the time of its inception. The fact that it is heritable does not make it transferable in the absence of a custom to the contrary or an express contract to that effect. [p. 829, col. 1.]

SULIN MOHAN BANERJEE v. RAJ KRISHNA GHOSH.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose (with him Babus Jolindra Mohan Sen Gupta and Shiba Prosanna Bhattacharji), for the Appellants.—The permanent lease granted to the defendant by Muktakeshi was without legal necessity and cannot be binding upon her sons after her death. There is no denial that Muktakeshi had only a widow's estate in the one-third share of the property. The alienation cannot, therefore, bind the reversioners if it was made without legal necessity. The ground on which the suit of the reversioners has been dismissed is, that they took no steps to avoid the lease before suit. That view is clearly erroneous. No steps need be taken before suit to avoid the lease. All that is necessary is to institute a suit for possession. That is equivalent to an election to treat the lease as a nullity. Refers to Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1). Then, with regard to the one-third share of Jogendra, the lessor had no power to grant the lease. Lastly, with reference to the claim of the defendant to possession by virtue of his purchase of the interest of the tenant, my submission is there having been no evidence of transferability the defendant got nothing as against the landlord. See Hari Nath Karmakar v. Raj Chandra Karmakar (2), Madhab Chandra Pal v. Bijoy Chand Mahatab Bahadur (3), Madhu Sudan Sen v. Kamini Kanta Sen (4) and Ram Charan Naskar v. Hari Charan Guha (5).

Babu Bimala Charan Deb, for the Respondents, refers to Modhu Sudan Singh v. E. G. Rooke (6). The plaintiffs have nothing whatever to urge as regards the interest of Sarat and the share of Jogendra which Sarat and Muktakeshi got under his Will. It is true that at the time of granting the lease they had no power to deal with the interest of Jogendra, but section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is clearly applicable in favour of the defendant. Then, as regards the defendant's purchase of the tenant's interests,

I submit successive transfers and several instances of succession make the tenancy a transferable one.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

MOOREHEAD, AGC. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The land belonged originally to Tilak, the founder of a family of Ghatake, which consisted of three brothers, Khetra, Gopal and Gobinda, as shown in the following genealogical table:—

Khetra left a daughter, Muktakeshi, whose sons are the first two plaintiffs. They claim as reversionary heirs to the estate of their maternal grandfather. Gopal left a son, Jogendra, who left a widow, Surasi Bala, the third plaintiff in this litigation. Gobinda left a son, Sarat Chandra, who left a widow, Monmohini, the pro forma defendant in this suit. The property was taken by the three brothers in equal shares. Consequently, upon their death, Muktakeshi, Jogendra and Sarat held the property in equal shares by right of inheritance. On the 18th April 1904, Muktakeshi and Sarat granted a lease of the entire property to the first defendant, as if Jogendra had no interest therein and they themselves were entitled to it to his exclusion. Muktakeshi died on the 4th August 1909. Jogendra had died on the 14th October 1908; prior to his death, he had made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 18th August 1908. Under that Will, he left one-half of his one-third share to his cousin sister Muktakeshi and the other half to his cousin Sarat. The plaintiffs claimed to recover the property from the first defendant on the allegation that the permanent lease granted to him on the 18th April 1904 was without legal necessity and ceased to be operative upon the death of Muktakeshi. The defendant pleaded that the lease was binding upon the reversionary heirs, and further that he was entitled to remain in occupation, as he had, on the 25th April 1904, purchased from one Bepin Bahary Roy the interest of a tenant of the land.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, that decision has been affirmed by the District Judge.

The first point which requires consideration in the present appeal is, the validity of the permanent lease granted by Muktakeshi and Sarat on the 18th April 1904. It is clear that the lease was operative in respect of a two-third share, during the lifetime of Muktakeshi and Sarat. But, as we have already explained, Muktakeshi and Sarat subsequently obtained the one-third share of Jogendra by virtue of his Will. In these circumstances, the Courts below have rightly held that the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act are applicable, and that the share of Jogendra, when it vested in Muktakeshi and Sarat on the 14th August 1908, became available to perfect their title and consequently the title of the first defendant in the entire property [see Bhairab Chandra v. Jibin Krishna (7): Second Appeal No. 1837 of 1917, decided on the 20th May 1920].

But the question remains whether the lease is operative as against the sons of Muktakeshi who claim as reversionary heirs to the estate of their maternal grandfather. It has not been established that the lease was executed for legal necessity. Prima facie, then, the lease does not bind the reversionary heirs but; the Courts below have held, on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Modhu Sudan Singh v. E. G. Rooke (6), that an alienation made by a Hindu widow or a Hindu daughter who has only a qualified estate in the property of the last male owner is not void but voidable and that as the plaintiffs did not take steps before the institution of the suit to avoid the lease, they are not entitled to relief in the present litigation. We are of opinion that the view taken by the Courts below is manifestly erroneous. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Modhu Sudan Singh v. E. G. Rooke (6) was, for a time, erroneously regarded as an authority for the proposition that a lease granted by a Hindu widow is on her death only voidable and must consequently be avoided. This is manifest from the decision of this Court in Bejoy Gopal Mukerji v. Nil Ratan Mookerji (8). When that case, however, was taken up to the Judicial Committee, Lord Davey pointed out [Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1)] that the earlier decision of the Judicial Committee in Modhu Sudan Singh v. E. G. Rooke (6) had been misunderstood and misapplied. "A Hindu widow," it was stated, "is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her husband's property, subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. But she may alienate it, subject to certain conditions being complied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may at his pleasure treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, and he shows his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. There is, in fact, nothing for the Court either to set aside or cancel as a condition precedent to the right of action of the reversionary heir." The institution of a suit for possession shows his election to treat the alienation as a nullity, and in such a suit, it is not necessary for him to ask for a declaration that it is inoperative. It is thus plain that the first two plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in respect of the one-third share which originally belonged to their maternal grandfather. They are not entitled, however, to be placed in the same position with regard to the one-sixth share which became vested in their mother by virtue of the Will of Jogendra. The terms of that Will show that it has been correctly held by the Courts below that Muktakeshi obtained an absolute interest in the one sixth share left to her by her own cousin. As regards the share of Sarat, namely, the one-third share vested in him at the time of the grant of the permanent lease and also the one sixth share which he subsequently obtained under the Will of Jogendra, the plaintiffs are admittedly not entitled to relief. The conclusion follows that, subject to the determination of the question of the validity of the purchase of the tenant's right by the first defendant, the first two plaintiffs are entitled to a decree in respect of the one-third share originally held by their maternal grandfather.

We have next to consider, whether the first defendant acquired a good title to possession by virtue of his purchase on the 25th April 1904 from Bepin Behary Roy, who had, it is alleged, obtained under successive transfers, the interest of a tenant, Satoowri Ghose, in the disputed land. The question, in our opinion, must be answered in the negative. The tenancy of Satoowri Ghose was created long before the Transfer of Property Act, and is said to have been in existence at least as early as 1869. The tenancy has passed from father to son; in other words, there is evidence to show that the tenancy is heritable. But it does not follow that the tenancy is transferable. It is well known that there are tenancies which are heritable but not transferable: an occupancy holding furnishes an obvious example. The first defendant must consequently establish that the tenancy was transferable under the law as it stood at the time of its inception. Now, it has been laid down by this Court in the cases of Hari Nath Karmakar v. Rai Ohandra Karmakar (2), Malhab Ohandra Pal v. Feoy Ohand Mahatab Bahadur (3), Madhu Sudan Sen v. Kamini Kanta Sen (4) and Ram Oharan Naskar v. Hari Charan Guha (5), that under the law as it stood before the Transfer of Property Act, tenancies, whether of homestead lands or of agricultural lands, were not transferable, in the absence of a custom to the contrary or of an express contract to that effect. The only recognized exception to this rule is that stated in the case of Peni Madhub Banerjee v. Jai Krishna Mookerjee (9). In that case Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., observed that if one man grants a tenure to another for the purpose of living upon the land that tenure, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is assignable. The same view was subsequently taken in the case of Durga Prasad Misser v.

Brindaban Sookul (10). In the case before us, the tenancy had not been created for the purpose of residence. Consequently, we must hold that the tenancy was not transferable.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the suit decreed for possession and mesne profits in respect of a one-third share. The record will be sent down to the Court of first instance so that mesne-profits may be ascertained in that Court.

There will be no order for costs in this appeal. The parties will pay and receive costs in proportion in the Courts below.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and Second Appeal No. 356 of 1918 arise out of two cross-suits brought by the same parties. Two persons Shah Muhammad Fasi-uz-Zaman and Shah Abdur Razzaq, ancestors of the plaintiffs-respondents, executed a usufructuary mortgage of their share in Mauza Kol together with a grove in favour of Baldeo Prasad, the present defendant-appellant's predecessor-in-title, in lieu of a sum of Rs. 1,000 and out of it they left Rs. 530 in the hands of the mortgagee for payment to a prior mortgagee named Tapeswar Rai. This sum was due on foot of a deed, dated the 20th of February 1890. The prior mortgage covered not only the property in Mauza Kol but other property belonging to the mortgagors. In the mortgage-deed it was clearly and distinctly set down that the money was to remain with the mortgagee and that any interest which might accrue on this sum in the future would be entirely upon his shoulders and that he would have to pay it when he paid Rs. 530. It is quite clear from the deed that the money was left with Baldeo Prasad to pay whenever he pleased, so long as he did pay it, he being solely responsible for any interest which might accrue. Baldeo Prasad did not pay this money and, later on, the prior mortgagee obtained a decree for Rs. 962-8-3 on the 14th of December 1905. He assigned his decree to another person who took out execution of it and on the 20th of January 1912 the share in Mauza Kol was put to sale and purchased by defendant No. 3 for Rs. 500. The prior mortgagee then sought to bring the remaining hypothecated property to sale in satisfaction of the balance of the mortgage debt. Whereupon the original mortgagors, in order to save their property, paid Rs. 718-6-6 and saved it. They have now sued to recover damages from the mortgagee. The heirs of the mortgagee at the same time have brought a suit to enforce their mortgage-deed and to recover the money on the allegation that the mortgagors have not put them into possession of all the mortgaged property. We must note here that the mortgage in favour of Baldeo Prasad was a usufructuary mortgage. The Courts below have come to the same conclusion, namely, that the allegation of the mortgagees that the mortgagors did not put them into possession of the mortgaged property is untrue. They have, therefore, dismissed the mortgagees' suit. In the mortgagors' suit for damages they have taken into account what was due from the mortgagors to the mortgagees and have come to the conclusion that a sum of Rs. 996 is due to the plaintiffs mortgagors from the defendants. This amount has been decreed in their favour together with proportionate costs in both Courts. The point taken before us in this appeal, that is to say, the appeal of the defendant-mortgagees, is that the suit is barred by limitation. It is urged that the cause of action accrued on the date of the mortgage, that is, on the 12th of May 1899. Our attention has been called to certain rulings under which, if this contention were correct, the suit would be barred by limitation. But, in our opinion, those rulings do not affect the present case. They do not apply inasmuch as the facts are different. It is clear to us that the agreement between the parties to the mortgage of the 12th of May 1899 was that the mortgagee might pay the sum of Rs. 530 to the prior mortgagee when and where he pleased, he taking upon his shoulders all liability for the interest which might in future accrue. This being so, the present plaintiffs had no cause of action until they were damaged. The suit was brought in the year 1916 well within the period of six years from the 20th of January 1912. The suit is clearly governed by Article 116 of the Limitation Act, being a suit for compensation for breach of a contract in writing registered. In our opinion it is not barred by time and the appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

There is no second appeal from an order remand-

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken to the effect that no appeal lies.
Under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u), an appeal from an order remanding a case will only lie where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court. We have, therefore, to determine whether in the case before us an appeal would lie from a decree by the lower Appellate Court. The suit was one of a Small Cause Court nature and in the suit itself no second appeal would have lain by reason of section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There has been a consensus of authority in three

JUDGMENT.—It appears that Hanuman Pershad was the zemindar of the village of Bamni. Sham Das, alleging himself to be the rent-free grantee of certain plots situate in that village, sued one Shibban for the recovery of rent describing him as a sub-tenant. The latter pleaded that he was the tenant of Hanuman Prasad, the zemindar and had in good faith paid the amount to him on the 1st of July 1916. The Rent Court allowed the plea in defence and dismissed the claim of Sham Das. Thereupon the latter brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for the recovery of Rs. 37 principal and interest, the amount of the rent realised by Hanuman Prasad. Hanu-years and had acquired proprietary rights in the said plots. He, therefore, prayed that he should be declared the proprietor of those plots and the defendants should be declared to have no rights to realise rents in respect of those plots, and as such proprietor, he (Sham Dass) prayed for the recovery of Rs. 30 the principal amount realised from Shibban by Hanuman Prasad and Rs. 7 for interest. The defendants resisted the suit by denying the allegations made in the plaint. They denied that the plaintiff was a rent-free grantee or that by lapse of time he had acquired proprietary interest in the plots in question. They pleaded that their father had rightly realised the rent from Shibban. The learned Munsif, after carefully considering the pleadings and evidence in the case, came to the conclusion that he could not give a declaration to the plaintiff as to his having become a proprietor of the plots in question. Such a declaration the learned Munsif held could only be made by a Revenue Court. He, however, found on the evidence that the plaintiff was a rent-free grantee of the plots in dispute and the rent had been wrongfully realised by Hanuman Prasad. He held that as such rent-free grantee Sham Das was entitled to recover the rent from his sub-tenant Shibban. The claim was accordingly decreed. The defendants preferred an appeal and the learned District Judge reversed the decree of the first Court on the ground that the suit of the plaintiff was not maintainable in a Civil Court. The other points raised in the case were not decided by the learned District Judge.

In second appeal before us the decree of the learned District Judge is challenged. It is contended that, though the plaintiff had asked for something which could not be granted by a Civil Court, the decree of the Munsif was, nevertheless, correct inasmuch as the plaintiff was awarded the right to recover the rent which had been wrongfully realised by the zemindar. The Court of first instance, no doubt, found that the plaintiff was a rent free grantee but that finding was merely ancillary to the principal relief relating to the recovery of money wrongfully realised by the zemindar. On behalf of the respondents it is urged that the present suit is not maintainable in a Civil Court. The principal relief that the plaintiff seeks by his plaint is that he should be declared proprietor of the plots in question. The relief granted to him by the first Court that he is a rent free grantee is no doubt a lesser relief, but even such a relief cannot be granted by a Civil Court. The learned Vakil for the respondents relies on the provisions of Chapter X, Act II of 1901, in support of his argument and on two rulings in Nannhu v. Thakurji Maharaj (1) and Baldeo Singh v. Mardan Singh (2). We do not think that the cases relied upon by the learned Vakil for the respondents or Chapter X, Act II of 1901, have any application to the present case. The plaintiff was really suing to recover the rent which, according to him, had been wrongly realised by the zemindar Hanuman Prasad. His rent suit was dismissed under section 198. In clause (2) of the said section the only remedy open to the plaintiff was to go to a Civil Court and get a declaration that he was the person entitled to recover rent. In order to determine the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover rent from Shibban it was necessary for the learned Munsif to decide his status in relation to the plots in question. The conduct of the zemindar in realising the rent from the sub-tenant virtually amounted to the dispossession of the plaintiff. If the latter had to bring a suit for possession he would have had to go to a Civil Court. This view is borne out by the case of Gobind Rai v. Banwari Lal (3). It is true that in the present case the plaintiff does not formally seek to recover possession of the plots of which rent was taken wrongfully by Hanuman Prasad but, practically, the present suit is to recover possession of the said plots by establishing his title to recover rent from Shibban. We think that the claim of the plaintiff in the form in which it was decreed by the learned Munsif is maintainable in a Civil Court. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, to it for disposal according to law. The costs in this Court including fees on the higher scale will abide the event.

of—Sale of immoveable property of value less than
Rs. 100 by unregistered instrument—Delivery, con-

A mortgage-deed, executed in 1902 purported to mortgage a property in the Darbhanga District and a property in the Mozufferpore District. It was registered in the Mozufferpore District. It was found that the statement in the bond that it comprised the Mozufferpore property was, to the knowledge of both parties, a mere fiction introduced for the purpose of getting registration in the Mozufferpore District; and that the parties never intended that the Mozufferpore property should form part of the security:

Held, that the inclusion of the Mozufferpore property was a fraud on the registration law, and that the registration obtained by its means was invalid. [p. 435, cols. 1 & 2]

For the purpose of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, where immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100 is sold by means of an unregistered instrument, there must be a real delivery of the property. Mere constructive delivery resulting from the delivery of the unregistered instrument of transfer is not sufficient. [p. 435, col. 2 p. 436, col. 1]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated March 17th 1915, reversing a decree of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

FACTS are stated in their Lordships' judgment. The claim for a personal judgment for the mortgage-debt was made for the first time in the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, but was omitted in appellants' "case".

(The appeal was originally heard on May 6 and 7, 1920, before Viscount Haldane, Viscount Finlay and Lord Moulton, judgment being reserved. Thereafter, orders were passed that it be re-heard before a fuller Board.)

Mr. DeGruyther, K. O. (with him Mr. Abdul Mail), for the Appellants.—The High Court have erred in holding that the registration here is invalid. Under section 65 of the Registration Act, if a deed covers property in two Districts, a copy is sent from one to the other: that has been done here; the transaction is in fact registered at Darbhanga.

[LORD MOULTON.—But that is a derivative registration. The first registration must be good.]

The mortgagor purchased this small share of property from a Mukhtar in order to give the Mozufferpore Registration office jurisdiction. There was a regular deed. It was not registered and did not need to be: in fact, there was no necessity for a deed at all. I submit the property included in a mortgage need not be the mortgagor's property. It may be that, at the time of the mortgage, the mortgagor had no title, but that alone would not invalidate the mortgage if he got title subsequently. The case of Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Srimati Hari Das Deb (1), referred to by the High Court, was widely different: in that case a property was fictitiously included: here, the Courts have found that the purchase was a genuine one. Both Courts have accepted the evidence of Osman that the price was actually paid: also, delivery was effected as far as possible. Handing over the document was sufficient: it operated symbolical possession. The property itself was in the possession of tenants: and the document would give the purchaser the power of going to the tenants when the time came. Whether we actually took possession or not, we had the right to do so, and we could at once sell the property. My argument does not rest on the completion of the sale at all.

[LORD SHAW.—If it is not possible to deliver possession, the document must be registered.]

I submit that, even if the sale were a form and no delivery took place, the registration is still good: we had the right to bring the property to sale, or to mortgage it, at once. So a mortgage by a man who has at the time no title, but subsequently gets one, is good as against him. Section 22 does not say the property must belong to the mortgagor. There is no question that the document does relate to the Mozufferpore property.

[LORD MOULTON.—I think relates must mean "bona fide relates".]

The literal wording of the Act should be regarded: so it has been held under this very section that any portion of the property, however unsubstantial, will suffice:

Hari Ram v. Sheodayal Mal (2).

The Act must be construed as a whole and with reference to its object. That object is that there shall be a Register in each District which will show a person examining it all he needs as to the lands in that District. That object is attained if the transaction gets on to the Register. The parties here clearly intended to go through some form of conveyance to comply with the Act: it has been found that money passed: and the sale-deed was not registered only because the parties were advised it was unnecessary.

[LORD SHAW.—They took the risk of the conveyance being ineffectual.]

Respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT FINLAY.—The action to which this appeal relates was brought to enforce a mortgage upon land. Its validity was challenged by the defendants on the ground that it has not been registered in accordance with the Indian Registration Act, 1877, and was, therefore, inoperative. A registration had been effected, but it was alleged for the defence that it was void, as no part of the property to which the mortgage related was situate within the District of the Sub-Registrar in whose office the mortgage was presented for registration.

The High Court held, reversing the District Judge, that the mortgage was invalid, on the ground that it had not been duly registered.

This appeal was brought by the representatives of the mortgagee, praying (1) that the mortgage should be put in force against the land; and (2) in the alternative,

(2) 16 I. A. 12 at p. 14; 11 A. 136 (P. C.); 5 Sar. P. C. J. 281; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 515.

that under the head of General Relief judgment should be given against the defendants personally for payment of the amount of the debt.

There was no appearance on this appeal on behalf of the respondents, and the case was argued before their Lordships' Board ex parte.

In 1867 one Bhukhan Lal died intestate, leaving considerable property. He was succeeded by his daughter, Maharani Bibi, who by Hindu Law had a life-estate in the property. She effected alienations of various parts of the property, one of them being a sale in 1884 of a 7 annas share of a property known as Mahomedpur Boari to Nena Chowdhury. On the death of Maharani Bibi the estate of Bhukhan Lal devolved upon her son, Mathura Prashad, who brought suits challenging the validity of the alienations made by his mother. One of these suits (No. 133 of 1901) was brought against the representatives of Nena Chowdhury for the recovery of the 7-annas share of Mahomedpur Boari. In February 1902 it was agreed that this suit should be compromised on the terms that Mathura Prashad should receive Rs. 14,000 in lieu of all claims upon the property. Rs. 6,000 were paid in cash, and the balance of Rs. 8,000 was secured by the mortgage-bond now in suit. This bond was executed by Udit Narayan, the eldest son of Nena Chowdhury, as the head and managing member of the joint Hindu family of which the respondents are members. Default was made in payment of the sum secured, and this action was brought by Mathura Prashad for a mortgage decree and sale.

Two defences were set up. The first was that the mortgage was merely colourable, and was never delivered as an operative instrument. This defence entirely failed on the facts, and no more need be said about it. The second defence was that the mortgage-bond is inoperative for want of proper registration.

The bond is dated the 27th February 1902, and is executed by Udit. It recites the suit by Mathura Prashad for recovery of the 7-annas share of Mouza Mahomedpur Boari against Udit and the other members of the Chowdhury family, and the agreement of compromise for Rs. 14,000.

MATHURA PRASAD v. CHANDRA NARAYAN.

It also recites the payment of Rs. 6,000, and that it had been agreed to take a mortgage-bond for the balance, Rs. 8,000. The bond goes on to state that Udit undertakes to pay that sum with interest in the month of Bhadra 1309 Fasli, which month ends the 7th September 1902. In security for the money, principal and interest, Udit states in the bond that he has mortgaged the properties mentioned below, the property of the joint family, "up to this time in possession of the joint family without participation and possession of others." The "properties mentioned below" are the 7-annas share in the Mouza Mahomedpur Boari in Zillah Darbhanga, and one cowri share in the Mouza Kolhua in Zillah Mozufferpur. The witness to the bond is Mahomed Osman, Makhtar.

The bond was registered in the Mozufferpur District, and the plaintiffs in the action attempted to justify this on the ground that the bond comprised one-cowri share of Mouza Kolhua within that district. The defendants asserted that this cowri share of Kolhua property did not belong to the mortgagor, and that the statement in the bond that it comprised this share was, to the knowledge of both parties, a mere fiction introduced for the purpose of getting registration in the Mozufferpur District.

The mortgage on which this action is brought required registration as a registrable instrument under section 17 of the Indian Registration Act of 1877. Section 28 of that Act requires that every registrable document "shall be presented for registration in the office of a Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district the whole or some portion of the property to which such document relates is situate," and section 49 enacts that no registrable instrument shall affect any immoveable property comprised therein unless it has been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Section 65 provides for the transmission of copies to the offices of other districts in which any of the mortgaged property is situate.

The 54th section of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 requires that a transfer on sale of tangible immoveable property of a value less than Rs. 100 may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property, while if it is of the value of

Rs. 100 or more the transfer must be by registered instrument.

Mahomedpur Boari, on which the mortgage was to be given, is situate in the Darbhanga district, but for motives of convenience it was desired that registration should be effected in the Mozufferpur District. In this last district the mortgagor had no property, but it was alleged in support of the registration there that before the mortgage was executed Osman (the witness to the mortgage-deed, who appears to have acted for all parties in carrying out the compromise) sold to the mortgagor, Udit Narayan, a one-cowri share in the Kolhua property of which Osman was owner. Osman's account of the transaction as given in evidence by him was as follows:—

"I sold a share of one-cowri in Kolhua. A kobala was executed, but it was not registered. The price was Rs. 50. I do not remember who witnessed the execution. It was executed two or three days before the execution of the bond in suit. I do not remember if Polai Lal was present. I sold the property at the request of Udit Narayan, who wanted to register the bond in Mozufferpur in order to complete the transaction quickly, and had no property in that district. He said if there was delay in registration the compromise might fall through. He paid me Rs. 50, the price of the property. I do not know if Udit Narayan pays revenue or road cess for that share or if he has since sold it or has had his name registered. Mathura Prashad has landed property in Mozufferpur District."

Polai Lal, mentioned in this evidence, had been guardian of Mathura Prashad during his minority, and had assisted him in bringing the seven suits above mentioned.

The alleged kobala was not produced, and no foundation was laid for giving secondary evidence of its contents. No such instrument was registered, and there was no delivery of possession of the cowri share, so that neither of the conditions necessary under section 54 to make a good transfer on sale of property under the value of Rs. 100 was fulfilled.

Their Lordships cannot accept the suggestion made on behalf of the appellants that for the purpose of section 54, some sort of constructive possession resulting from the delivery of the alleged instrument of transfer might be sufficient. For this purpose there must be a real delivery of the property.

Assuming such a kobala existed, if it was intended to be effective as a transfer, it would have been registered or possession would have been given. There was neither registration nor delivery. Why? Only one reason can be given. There was no intention really to acquire this cowri share in the Kolhua property. All that was wanted was the use of its name for the purposes of registration, and it was for this use that the sum of Rs. 50 was paid.

The District Judge found in favour of the plaintiffs on this point. He was clearly mistaken in saying that Udit was the owner of the cowri share. The alleged kobala was unregistered and there was no delivery, so that the property never passed. His judgment in favour of the plaintiffs, though he said the sale was "merely nominal," appears to rest on the erroneous view that the cowri interest, though a small one, passed from Osman to Udit by the kobala, and from Udit to the mortgagee.

The view which their Lordships take of the facts is that which is compendiously stated by the High Court in the judgment of Coxe, J.:—

"I agree. The circumstances of the case leave no doubt that the parties never intended that the share of Kolhua should really be sold to Udit Narayan or mortgaged to Polai Lal. The so-called sale was a mere device to evade the Registration Act."

The more detailed judgment of Sharfuddin, J., is to the same effect.

In coming to the conclusion that this appeal must be dismissed, their Lordships' judgment rests on the view that none of the parties ever intended that the one cowri share in Mouza Kolhua should vest in Udit or should pass by the mortgage from him to the mortgagee. This case differs toto cœlo from the case suggested in argument of a mere failure to make a good title to property dealt with by the instrument, and which both parties had intended should form part of the security.

On the view of the facts taken in the High Court and by their Lordships, this case falls within the decision of this Board in the case of Harendra Lal Roy Choudhuri v. Srimati Pari Das Debi (1). The following passage in the judgment delivered in that case by Lord

Moulton is applicable to the facts of the present case:—

"Their Lordships hold that this parcel is in fact a fictitious entry, and represents no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to mortgage, or that the mortgagee intended to form part of his security. Such an entry intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact exists, is a fraud on the Registration Law, and no registration obtained by means thereof is valid."

In the Harendra Lal's case (1) the property was non-existent. In the present case, though the Kolhua Mouza existed, the mortgagor had no interest in it, and the parties to the mortgage never intended that it should form part of the security. The two cases stand on the same basis for the purposes of the Registration Act.

As regards the alternative claim for a personal judgment for the mortgage debt, it is to be observed that no such claim was made in the Courts in India. There is nothing in the evidence or in the judgments which would enable their Lordships to deal with such a claim. At the same time, their Lordships think it desirable in this case that the plaintiffs should have an opportunity of bringing this matter before the High Court. If any such application is made, it will be for the High Court to consider whether any such claim is open upon the present pleadings and, if not, whether any amendment raising it should be made; and, further, whether, under all the circumstances, the claim should be entertained at this stage of the proceedings. If the High Court should think it right to enter upon the consideration of this claim, all defences on the merits or arising out of the lapse of time must be open to the defendants, and the High Court should have power to impose any terms which it thinks just and to deal with the costs.

The appeal, so far as it relates to the enforcement of the mortgage on the land, must, in their Lordships' opinion, be dismissed. If the alternative claim be not made within six months before the High Court, or be dismissed, judgment should be entered for the defendants in the action.

JEONI v. KALLOO.

Their Lordships will humbly recommend to His Majesty that an order should be made in these terms.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 198—Rent, amount of, paid to third party—Good faith not pleaded—Section, whether applicable.

Where after the institution of a suit to recover arrears of rent, and after the filing of his defence, the defendant pays the amount due to a third person, the provisions of section 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act have no application.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge, Meerut, dated the 17th of April 1918.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the following circumstances: A Nawab gave a lease of a certain Mahal to two persons, the present plaintiff, Musammāt Jeoni, and one Mubarak Ali. Mubarak Ali died some time ago leaving a son and a widow, Musammāt Jannat. The son has since died and his widow, Jannat, is alive. The plaintiff as a lessee brought a suit for recovery of the rent for certain years from Kallu, a tenant. The defence pleaded by Kallu was that he had all along paid the rent to Mubarak Ali during his lifetime and since his death Musammāt Jannat has been collecting rent from the defendant. Up to this day this defendant has had no concern with Musammāt Jeoni. It will appear from the statement of defence above referred to that the defendant nowhere pleaded that he had paid the rent in good faith to Musammāt Jannat. The learned Assistant Collector dismissed the suit and the dismissal has been confirmed by the lower Appellate Court. After he had filed his defence, the defendant-tenant paid off the rent for the years in suit to Musammāt Jannat and Musammāt Jannat who had been impleaded as a party later on admitted having received the rent. The point raised before us is, that the defendant not having alleged that he had paid the rent in good faith to Musammāt Jannat, section 198 has no application. The question whether Jannat would be entitled to the rent does not arise in this case as the rent had not been paid to her before the suit was brought. Musammāt Jeoni, the plaintiff-appellant, is one of the lessees and as such is entitled to receive the rent. That section 198 does not apply to a case like the present is clear from the decision of a Bench of this Court in Shodihal Singh v. Badri Narain (1). If that section were meant to apply to cases in which the defendant had only to allege that he was going to pay rent to a certain person in good faith there would have been no end of the litigation. He might one day say that he was willing to pay the rent to A, whom he thought to be the person entitled to it, and in another suit by A he might plead that, since then, he has found that C was the real owner and that he was to pay to him in good faith. We think that the view taken by the learned Judges who decided the case above-mentioned was a correct view. The result of our observation is that the plaintiff's claim was bound to succeed. We, therefore, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in all Courts.

Mohammadan Law—Legitimacy—Acknowledgment

of legitimacy, effect of—Marriage, disproof of—Legitimacy and legitimation, difference between—Concurrent findings, what constitutes.

There is a difference between legitimacy and legitimation. Legitimacy is a status which results from certain facts. Legitimation is a proceeding which creates a status which did not exist before. In the proper sense, there is no legitimation under the Muhammadan Law. [p. 841, col. 2.]

An acknowledgment of legitimacy raises a presumption of marriage, but such presumption is capable of being displaced by contrary proof. Such an acknowledgment is a declaration of legitimacy and not a legitimation, and is, therefore, liable to be contradicted. [p. 842, col. 1.]

Once the fact of no marriage is established, no acknowledgment of legitimacy has any effect. [p. 841, col. 2.]

To constitute a concurrent finding, it is sufficient that a majority of the Court of Appeal should concur in the view of the facts taken by the Original Court. Such a concurrent finding is not vitiated as such because the minority of the Court of Appeal does not come to the same conclusion in fact. [p. 841, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated August 1st, 1918, reported as 49 Ind. Cas. 545, affirming a decree of Greaves, J.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment.

Sir John Simon, K. O., (with him Mr. De Gruyther, K. O., and S. Hyam), for Appellants, submitted that there was ample evidence that the deceased Nawab acknowledged Habibur Rahman as his legitimate son. It had been suggested in the High Court that the Muhammadan Law allowed an enquiry as to the motive of such an acknowledgment, and that this might deprive the acknowledgment of its force, but there was no authority for any such proposition. A casual statement mattered nothing, but an intentional statement of legitimacy was enough, whatever the motive. There were some cases in which the plainest acknowledgment was invalid: (1) impossibility of age, (2) when the relationship between the assumed father and mother made their marriage invalid, (3) when the person acknowledged repudiated it, (4) when the true paternity of the acknowledgee was proved: but here it was admitted the first appellant was the natural offspring of the Nawab, and the only question was whether he was legitimate.

According to Muhammadan Law, the acknowledgment of a father renders a son or daughter a legitimate child and an heir, unless it is impossible for the son or daughter to be so:

Oomda Beebee v. Syud Shah Jonab Ali (1).

In that case Sir Barnes Peacock refers with approval to Sir William Macnaghten's Principles of Muhammadan Law, Chapter VII, section 33, page 61.

Assuming you have a valid acknowledgment, the thing barring it is not whether there was in fact a marriage, but whether a marriage was possible.

In a later case it was held that a child born out of wedlock, if acknowledged, acquires legitimacy.

Bibee Nujeeboonnissa v. Bibee Zumeerun (2).

A binding acknowledgment is not merely prima facie evidence, but establishes the fact acknowledged.

Musammatt Jaibun v. Musammatt Bibee Nujeeboonnissa (3).

If the thing is impossible, the acknowledgment would not be binding.

[MR. AMEER ALI.—My view is, that legitimacy arises from a valid relation between the parents. If people live together and the father states the child is legitimate, it establishes the valid relation from the beginning.]

Baillie in his Digest of Muhammadan Law, Chapter II, section 2, page 408 (2nd edition) lays down when an acknowledgment is valid.

An acknowledgment is sufficient, even if there be no evidence of marriage:

Bibee Wuheedun v. Syud Wusee Hossain (4).

My submission is, that the view expressed in Wilson's Digest, paragraph 55, is entirely confirmed by the authorities: that the presumption arising from acknowledgment can only be rebutted in certain specific ways, and that it is not open to the Tribunal to go into the question whether the parties were in fact married.

My proposition is, not so much one of Muhammadan Law as one of logic. An acknowledgment of legitimacy is a substantive source of status; when you get it, even though the parties may not have been married at the time, effect must be given to it. It is enough that a lawful union between them was possible.

The issue of fact has been found against me, the Courts holding that the woman was the Nawab's mistress only : but the other side have to disprove not merely marriage, but the possibility of marriage.

This Board has repeatedly laid down that an illegitimate child, if acknowledged, acquires the status of legitimacy :

Ashrafud Dowlah Ahmed Hossein Khan v. Hyder Hossein Khan (5), Mahammad Azmat Ali Khan v. Musammatt Lalli Begum (6) ; Abdul Razak v. Aga Mahomed Jaffer (7).

The proposition can hardly now be challenged.

It is true that Mahmood, J., took a contrary view in Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (8), but his was a minority judgment : and the passage in Lord Atkinson's judgment in Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (9) does not mean that, after acknowledgment, you can still enquire into the fact of marriage, for the authorities cited do not say any such thing. I submit that the acknowledgments here are acknowledgments of legitimation, and that once there is such an acknowledgment it is an irrelevant enquiry how the evidence stands as to actual marriage. Provided there was a possibility of marriage, it is not material whether the marriage in fact took place : that is a question into which one cannot enter.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O., followed.—The presumption that the union was valid, consequent on an acknowledgment of legitimacy, is a presumptio juris et de jure, and cannot be rebutted. The rule of Muhammadan Law is laid down as well established in Sadakat Hossein v. Mahomed Yusuf (10).

In Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (8) it was advanced that the offspring of adultery could be acknowledged : it was that proposition which Mahmood, J., was combating. The decision in that case is not against us, and, so far as Mahmood, J.'s judgment is against us, it is directly against the view taken by the Board in Sadakat Hossein v. Mahomed Yusuf (10). Under all systems of law certain enquiries are shut out.

It is not the case that there are concurrent findings that the marriage of Moselle Cohen with the Nawab has been disproved : they are only to the effect that it has not been proved. The issue fixed was, "Was Moselle Cohen married to Sobhan ?" The burden of proof was on us, and we failed to sustain it. The result might have been different if the burden had been placed on the other side to prove that the marriage did not take place.

Lord Atkinson in Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (9) used the words proved to be illegitimate " in the sense that it was proved that marriage was impossible.

It has been contended that the offspring of fornication cannot be acknowledged, but none of the actual texts refer to anything but disclaimer, proximity of age, or proof that the child is in fact the child of another.

We contend that you can presume a marriage except where such marriage could not possibly have taken place.

Mr. Upjohn, K. O., for the Respondents.—We submit that there was no sufficient or binding acknowledgment of plaintiff as legitimate : this is a question of fact : (2) under the established facts of the case, the doctrine of acknowledgment has no application : this is a proposition of law.

The facts established here are that Habib was the Nawab's son by Moselle, and that it has been proved affirmatively that there was no marriage and that Habib was illegitimate. He was the offspring of Zina—an unlawful union between a man and a woman. In Muhammadan Law a man can have a lawful union with two women only—his wife and his slave. Any other connection is a crime—Zina—and its offspring is stamped for ever with an incapacity to become legitimate.

Amir Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume II, (4th Edition, 1917), page 316.

There was no semblance of the relation of husband and wife between the Nawab and Moselle.

The doctrine of acknowledgment mostly applies when it is uncertain whether there has been a marriage or not ; it comes in to supply defects of proof of marriage. Acknowledgment will be valid if there is no zina or no evidence of it; but here we have proved the zina. If the intercourse was unlawful, even though simple fornication, acknowledgment is ineffectual. A child whose illegitimacy is proved beyond doubt cannot be validly acknowledged.

An acknowledgment in Muhammadan Law cannot create a new right: it is a declaration of legitimacy, not a legitimation:

That an acknowledgment in Muhammadan Law is an acknowledgment of antecedent right is recognised in Ashraf Dowlah's case (5), that is quite inconsistent with the statement at page 113 that an illegitimate child can be made legitimate. The decision in that case is against appellant: but sentences are picked out here and there which support his contentions.

The appellant is asking the Board to reverse what was laid down in Sadik Husain Khan's case (9), as well-established, viz: that no statement made by one man that another (proved to be illegitimate) is his son can make that other legitimate. The authorities cited for that proposition fully support it: the first is Muhammad Allahdal Khan v. Muhammad Imail Khan (8), where the Muhammadan texts were elaborately examined, and all the Judges agreed that there could be no effective acknowledgment in the case of a person proved to be illegitimate.

There is no case in which the contrary has ever been held, and all the actual decisions are in our favour, though in certain cases there are dicta which are against us. (He was stopped).

Mr. De Gruyter, K. O. in reply.—The rule laid down in Sadik Husain v. Hashim Ali Khan (9) was not essential to the decision in that case.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DUNEDIN.—In this suit the plaintiff and appellant, Habibur Rahman Chowdhury, claims a declaration that he is the legitimate son of the late Nawab of Bogra, who died intestate on the 2nd July 1915. The suit is opposed by the late Nawab's grandson, who is the son of a legitimate daughter, and by two nephews, the sons of an elder brother. The plaintiff is admittedly the natural son of the late Nawab, his mother having been a Jewess, Moselle Cohen, who became a Muhammadan and cohabited with the Nawab. He was born in 1893. The Nawab had a daughter by the same lady in 1891. The Nawab's legitimate wife, the grandmother of the first defendant, died in 1890. The plaintiff based his claim on two grounds. He averred first that Moselle was married to the Nawab. He further averred that on many occasions the Nawab had acknowledged him as his legitimate son. The defendants aver that no marriage ever took place. They also deny that any proper acknowledgment of legitimacy was made.

The case went to trial before Greaves, J., and oral evidence was led and documentary evidence produced on both sides. Greaves, J., held that no marriage was proved, but that on the contrary, it was proved that Moselle Cohen was no better than a prostitute and that no marriage ever did take place. He held that the Nawab did acknowledge the plaintiff as his legitimate son; but he held that in law, as the fact of no marriage was conclusively established, such acknowledgment would not confer the status of legitimacy. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

Appeal was taken by the plaintiff. In the Court of Appeal the Chief Justice agreed with Greaves, J., that the marriage was in fact disproved. Differing from Greaves, J., he held that there was no proper acknowledgment of legitimacy, but, upon the assumption that there was, he agreed with Greaves, J., on the law that such an acknowledgment, in the face of the disproof of the marriage, was of no avail.

Woodroffe, J., thought that there was no acknowledgment of legitimacy and no affirmative proof of marriage, and, therefore, the plaintiff failed but he did not go the length of holding that there had been disproof of marriage.

Chitty, J., held that the marriage was disproved. That being so, he did not feel called upon to decide with certainty as to whether there was a good acknowledgment of legitimacy or not, though he indicated that the bias of his opinion was that there was not.

The plaintiff is thus faced by two adverse concurrent findings of fact to the effect that the existence of a marriage is disproved. As, however, the Junior Counsel for the plaintiff urged that this was not so, it is well to make it clear as to what constitute concurrent findings.

The first issue as settled by the Trial Judge was, "Was Moselle Cohen married to Sobhan" (the Nawab) ? His finding as to this was :—

"I hold that upon the evidence the long connection of Sobhan and Moselle was inconsistent with the relation of husband and wife, and that Moselle is, upon the evidence, proved to be merely his concubine, and that Moselle Cohen was not married to the deceased Nawab."

The Chief Justice said :—

"I think the learned Judge was right in holding that Moselle was never married to the late Nawab Sobhan; to put it in other words, in my judgment it has been proved that Moselle was never married to the late Nawab," and Chitty, J., said :—

"I do not believe that any marriage between Abdus Sobhan and Moselle Cohen ever took place; in other words, I find the marriage disproved."

These two learned Judges form a majority of the Court of Appeal. That makes a concurrent finding, and it is not vitiated as such because, as here, the other Judge in the Court of Appeal does not come to the same conclusion in fact though coming to the same result in law arising from another fact. Of course, to be concurrent findings binding on this Board, the fact or facts found must be such as are necessary for the foundation of the proposition in law to be subsequently applied to them.

The Senior Counsel for the appellants was unable to deny that there were concurrent findings as to the non existence of the marriage. His argument was directed to this, that, assuming he could show a good acknowledgment of legitimacy, that conferred the status of legitimacy and made it irrelevant to enter into any enquiry as to the fact of marriage.

The case might be disposed of by holding, as the majority of the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal did, that there was no proper acknowledgment of legitimacy. There is not, however, as to this a "concurrent finding," for the learned Trial Judge thought otherwise, and it would be necessary to examine the evidence before coming to the above conclusion. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to embark on this enquiry. They will, without deciding, assume that there was a proper acknowledgment, for, as is to be presently explained, they are of opinion that such acknowledgment, in face of the fact that there was no marriage, is of no avail. Their Lordships consider that this result is reached on principle, and is concluded by authority.

Before discussing the subject, it is as well at once to lay down with precision the difference between legitimacy and legitimation. Legitimacy is a status which results from certain facts. Legitimation is a proceeding which creates a status which did not exist before. In the proper sense, there is no legitimation under the Muhammadan Law. Examples of it may be found in other systems. The adoption of the Roman and the Hindu Law effected legitimacy. The same was done under the Canon Law and the Scotch Law in respect of what is known as legitimation per subsequens matrimonium. By the Muhammadan Law a son to be legitimate must be the offspring of a man and his wife or of a man and his slave; any other offspring is the offspring of zina, that is, illicit connection, and cannot be legitimate. The term "wife" necessarily connotes marriage; but, as marriage may be constituted without any ceremonial, the existence of a marriage in any particular case may be an open question. Direct proof may be available, but if there be no such, indirect proof may suffice. Now, one of the ways of indirect proof is by an acknowledgment of legitimacy in favour of a son. This acknowledgment must be not merely of sonship, but must be made in such a way that it shows that the acknowledgor meant to accept the other not only as his son, but as his legitimate son. It must not be impossible upon the face of it: i.e., it must not be made when the ages are such that it is impossible in nature for the acknowledgor to be the father of the acknowledgee, or when the mother spoken to in an acknowledgment, being the wife of another, or within prohibited degrees of the acknowledgor, it would be apparent that the issue would be the issue of adultery or incest. The acknowledgment may be repudiated by the acknowledgee. But if none of these objections occur, then the acknowledgment has more than a mere evidential value. It raises a presumption of marriage—a presumption which may be taken advantage of either by a wife claimant or a son claimant. Being, however, a presumption of fact, and not juris et de jure, it is, like every other presumption of fact, capable of being set aside by contrary proof. The result is that a claimant son who has in his favour a good acknowledgment of legitimacy is in this position: The marriage will be held proved and his legitimacy established unless the marriage is disproved. Until the claimant establishes his acknowledgment the onus is on him to prove a marriage. Once he establishes an acknowledgment, the onus is on those who deny a marriage to negative it in fact.

A large number of cases were cited to their Lordships which they think it unnecessary to discuss in detail. It is quite true that in the earlier of the series not only is stress laid on the fact that an acknowledgment of legitimacy has more than a mere evidential value, but also there are expressions used such as that by a proper acknowledgment the status of legitimacy is "acquired." Fastening on such expressions, the learned Counsel for the appellants argued that to enter into an enquiry into the fact of marriage when a good acknowledgment had been made out was not only bad law but a sin against the rules of logic. The simple answer to this is that the phraseology of such expressions as cited above must not be pressed to disturb what is the ruling principle, and that principle is that in Muhammadan Law such an acknowledgment is a declaration of legitimacy and not a legitimation. A declaration, though it cannot be withdrawn, may be contradicted, for it is only a statement: legitimation is an act, which being done cannot be undone. So the rules of logic remain untouched.

The whole question was thoroughly examined in a very learned judgment by Mahmood, J., in the case of Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (8) and, finally, in the case of Saidik Hujain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (9), Lord Atkinson, delivering the judgment of the Board, said as follows (page 231):—

"If this be so, the rule of the Muhammadan Law applicable to the case is well established. No statement made by one man that another (proved to be illegitimate) is his son can make that other legitimate, but where no proof of that kind has been given such a statement or acknowledgment is substantive evidence that the person so acknowledged is the legitimate son of the person who makes the statement provided his legitimacy be possible."

That statement is, in their Lordships' view, clear and conclusive, and what they have said above is no more than an elaboration of what was there said.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106—Landlord and tenant—Notice to quit—Notice containing clause for enhancement of rent if premises not vacated, whether valid.

A notice by a landlord to his tenant to vacate premises occupied by him by a certain date which contains a clause that, if the premises are not vacated by the date mentioned, the tenant would be liable to rent at a certain enhanced rate is a perfectly valid notice, and, in the absence of anything to show that the tenant accepted the offer to continue at the enhanced rate, is sufficient in law to determine the tenancy [p. 843, col. 2; p. 844, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in this case was the tenant of the plaintiff in respect of a certain shop with buildings appertaining to the same. The suit was one in ejectment against the defendant, and the Courts below have differed on the question whether a certain notice served by the plaintiff on the defendant was valid to terminate the tenancy under the provisions of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882. The first Court held that it was not and that, consequently, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for ejectment, or to any decree except one for arrears of rent. The lower Appellate Court has held that the notice was valid to terminate the tenancy and has remanded the case to the first Court, because on this view of the matter there remain other questions to be determined before a final decree could be passed. The appeal before us is against the order of remand. One point taken is that, inasmuch as the law requires a notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy, the reference in the notice to the vacating of the house by the 30th of June 1919 rendered it invalid, as the reference should have been to the day following, namely, the 1st of July. There is no force in this contention, indeed it could not be seriously pressed. On the wording of the notice as a whole, it is obvious that the tenant was given until the expiration of the month of the tenancy, that is to say, until midnight of the 20th of June, to vacate the house and, so far as this point goes, the notice was unquestionably valid and in accordance with the requirements of the law. The other point taken is a somewhat more arguable one. The landlord did not confine himself to giving his tenant notice to quit. He certainly did this and up to a certain point he did so in unequivocal terms; but he went on to add that he desired the tenant to take notice further that, if he did not vacate the house by the date mentioned in the notice, he, the landlord, would hold the tenant liable from the 1st of July 1919 to rent at a certain enhanced rate. The contention before us is that the addition of this clause to the notice left it undetermined whether the landlord did or did not desire to terminate the tenancy, or, in any case, gave the tenant an option to stay on as a tenant at the higher rent named in the latter portion of the notice. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent it has been contended before us that the concluding words of the notice in no way affect the former portion; that they did not amount even to the offer of a new tenancy, but are merely an indication of the rate at which the landlord will claim damages in the event of the tenant's disregarding the notice and staying on as a trespasser. We do not think it necessary to go quite this length in order to determine the present appeal. The principles governing the decision in a case of this sort have been laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in Bradley v. Atkinson (1). We find in an English case, Ahearn v. Bellman (2) certain remarks of Bramwell, Lord Justice, which seem precisely to cover the state of affairs created by the notice now before us. It is there said that, if an offer is made by the landlord which the tenant may conceivably accept the question will then be whether that offer was or was not accepted. The precise words in the report, at page 204, which we desire to quote, are as follows:—"Had he (i.e., the tenant) done so (i.e., accepted the offer) the notice to quit would have been as efficacious as it was before, and would have put an end to the old tenancy, but there would, at the same time, have been created a new tenancy. I think there would have been no difference if the notice had been given in one letter and the offer made in another letter at a subsequent time. I cannot understand how it can be said that an offer of a new tenancy in any way affects the validity of the notice to determine the old one; if anything, it corroborates it, because it supposes that the old tenancy is gone, otherwise there would be no competency to enter into a new one." Another point of view from which this case and similar cases can be looked at is this. We may ask whether the notice actually issued by the plaintiff to the defendant would or would not have bound the plaintiff if the defendant had acted upon its terms. In the present case that question admits of no answer but one. If the defendant had complied with the notice and vacated the premises on the 30th of June, the plaintiff would have been bound, and by no possibility could he have suggested that the old tenancy continued, or that a new tenancy had been created. With regard to the suggestion that a new tenancy at Rs. 100 a month is offered by the concluding words of the notice, it seems sufficient to say that the defendant, so far from accepting that offer, has up to this moment strenuously repudiated it. Something has been said in argument to-day by way of a suggestion that the defendant should be allowed the option of accepting this offer now, but we see no reason whatever why any such indulgence should be extended to him. There is one more point taken in the memorandum of appeal as to which we ought to say a few words. The plaintiff claimed damages from the 1st of July 1919, up to the date of the actual vacating of the house, whether in execution of the decree of the Court or in anticipation of such decree, at the rate of Rs. 100 a month. In the memorandum of appeal before us it is assumed that this question is concluded in favour of the plaintiff by the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, but this is obviously not so. The case goes back to the Court of first instance for the trial of this question along with others still left open. It will be for the Court to determine whether or not, under the circumstances and in view of the equities of the case, it is proper that the defendant should be bound to pay damages at the rate which the plaintiff had warned him in the notice of ejectment that he would claim. Subject to these remarks, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, O. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The applicants, as the surviving male members of one of three branches of the family of Damodar Singh, instituted the suit claiming a partition and a one-third share in the joint family property. There was a fourth branch of Damodar's family, viz., that of his deceased son, Sheodani, the only surviving members of which when the suit was instituted were the widows of Sheodani and his two sons, also deceased. The plaintiffs claimed that the widows were entitled to maintenance only whereas the widows claimed that, by a previous family arrangement, a portion of the z'rait lands of the family, amounting to 51 bighas, had been allotted to them in lieu of maintenance and that this portion of the estate was in consequence not liable to partition. This Court on appeal differed from the view of the Subordinate Judge and found in favour of the validity of the family arrangement set up by the widows and varied the decree of the lower Court by excluding the 51 bighas from the property to be partitioned.

The plaintiffs have presented the present petition claiming a certificate that the case fulfils the conditions of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. They place the value of the whole of the family property at Rs. 41,555 and that of the 51 bighas of zirait lands at Rs. 20,400. The contesting respondents, the widows, on the other hand, whilst not disputing the total value of the family property, contend that the value of 51 bighas now in dispute is not more than Rs. 5,000. The other two branches of the family, who supported the plaintiffs' claim at the trial, are also made respondents in the present appeal. We have been asked to order an enquiry to ascertain the actual value of the disputed lands, but before doing so we must be satisfied that the applicants are entitled to appeal even if their valuation should be accepted. They claim a third share in the disputed lands which, on their own valuation, would amount to between Rs. 6,000 and Rs. 7,000 and on the lower valuation to between Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000. If, therefore, the subject-matter in dispute on appeal is the share claimed by the appellants in the 51 bighas it follows that, even on their own valuation, the case does not comply with section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The appellants contend, in the first place, that in a partition suit the subject-matter in dispute is the whole of the property to be partitioned and not merely the share claimed by the plaintiffs, and, secondly, that in any case as the value of the whole property the subject of partition is over Rs. 40,000, the plaintiffs' share alone exceeds the appealable value. It is clear, however, that, whatever may have been the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, there is no longer any dispute as to the partition of anything except the 51 bighas of zirait land. The remainder of the property, even under the decree of this Court, alone stands to be partitioned, and the subject-matter in dispute in this appeal is the right to the 51 bighas and nothing else. It remains to consider, however, whether the value for the purposes of this appeal is that of the whole 51 bighas or only that of the plaintiffs' one-third share. The plaintiffs contend that the subject-matter in dispute is the whole 51 bighas and not merely the share claimed by them, and in support of this view they rely on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Lala Bhugwat Sahay v. Rai Pashupati Nath (1). In that case the plaintiff's suit for partition of property valued at over Rs. 10,000 was dismissed by the High Court. He applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and was met by the objection that the share claimed by him was below Rs. 10,000 in value. The Court granted a certificate observing, in answer to the contention that the subject-matter in dispute was only the share of the plaintiff, that this was not so, for the share of the plaintiff could not be ascertained without determining the value of all the other shares in the estate with a view to a proper partition. I think that decision can be supported on the ground that the other defendants in the suit, apart from the contesting respondents, were also claimants to a share in the property, and the effect of the suit, if successful, would be to divide up the whole property according to the respective shares of all the claimants. A partition suit, as a rule, has this peculiar feature that it involves not only a decision as to the share to be awarded to the plaintiff but a splitting up of the property amongst several parties, some of whom, although defendants, are really in the position of claimants to a share in the property. If the only question for determination was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to a specific share leaving the rest of the property undivided in the hands of the defendants, I should have great difficulty in holding that the subject-matter in dispute involved anything more than the share claimed, or that its value could be regarded as exceeding the value of that share. It seems to me necessary to consider the actual circumstances in each case before it can be determined whether or not the provisions of the section are complied with, and that it is not a sufficient compliance merely to show that the claim, although below the statutory value, is a claim to a share in property above that value. In the present case it appears that the defendants first party, who constitute the two branches of the family other than the plaintiffs and the widows, supported the plaintiffs' case and claimed each a third share in the family
